The Villanova NROTC Unit had its most successful weekend of athletic and military competition this season March 21-22 at Villanova. The unit won its 23rd Annual Drill Meet and its second Annual Military Excellence Competition (MEC). Meanwhile, the unit's basketball team traveled to Chapel Hill, N.C., and took fourth-place out of a nine-team tournament field.

The drill team was led by senior Pat Keane who directed first place performances in the platoon trick drill and platoon basic drill events. The squad basic drill unit, led by junior Chris Palumbo, finished second in its event, and junior Wesley Muller and sophomore Pete Macarri finished second in the two-man trick drill event. Freshman Marcus Frick rounded out the scoring by placing third out of 125 competitors in the individual drill routine.

The MEC team took first in the 400-yard swimming relay and the 1,600-meter track relay. It also placed second in the Navy SEAL Physical Fitness Test (PFT) event and third in the 10-kilometer race. The PFT event consists of a 500-yard swim, push-ups, sit-ups, pull-ups and a one and one-half-mile run in combat boots. The MEC team was led by senior Jay Hennessey.

The basketball team was paced by juniors Stephen Bancourt and Brian Goebel. The team defeated the University of Pennsylvania and South Carolina before a loss to Penn State dropped it into the loser bracket. Then it beat North Carolina, Penn and Virginia Tech before being eliminated by Georgia Tech.

"This was the toughest competition we've ever had and the team rose to the occasion," said Gorbel, who hit the winning shot to beat Virginia Tech.

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Lisa Flood

This week the Villanovan recognizes swimmer Lisa Flood, who recently claimed the NCAA Championship in the 200-yard breaststroke. In the process, Flood established her personal best of 2:11.78 in the event, only .24 seconds short of the NCAA record.

Flood was instrumental in helping Villanova earn its first-ever Big East Championship this season. With her performance in the NCAA Tournament, Flood, a sophomore, became the first Wildcat to achieve another first — a national championship in swimming.

March Madness continues at full speed

By ED WASIELEWSKI
Assistant Sports Editor

March Madness continues. On the road to the Final Four, the field of 64 will be narrowed down to the Elite Eight after tonight's games. Great teams have gone home early. Great players have seen their collegiate careers end prematurely. And great coaches must sit back and wonder, "What happened?"

We have seen many unexpected upsets and new surprising heroes emerge to propel their teams onward. In college basketball's biggest dance, the best is yet to come. Stay tuned, the Final Four in Minneapolis is coming April 4.

In the MIDWEST Regional in Kansas City, Mo. UTEP squares off against the highest remaining seed, the No. 4 Cincinnati Bearcats. Led by the diminutive backcourt of Eddie Rivera and Prince Stewart, the Miners will have to handle Cincy's relentless, full-court pressure for 40 minutes. The game will come down to UTEP's ability to break the press and convert on the offensive end. If the Cats cannot use their press to get easy baskets, look for Don Haskins and the Miners to face Georgia Tech. Despite all-around talent Anfernee Hardaway leading the way for Memphis State, the Yellow Jackets have been to the Final Four in the past. Tech has experience in Jon Barry, Matt Geiger and Malcolm Mackey plus exciting freshmen Travis Best and James Forrest. Both teams are darkhorses, but in this pick'em game take the Ramblin' Wreck.

The SOUTHEAST Regional has three of its top four seeds remaining. In the first game, No. 1 seed Ohio State will battle North Carolina. Tested by Connecticut in the first-half, the Buckeyes proved their mettle by storming back from a 14-point deficit to win by 2 points. With Jimmy Jackson, Lawrence Funderburke and Co.,

Women's lax idle; look forward to three this week

By ALEX SCOFIELD
Staff Reporter

The weather continued to wreak havoc on the women's lacrosse team last week. The Cats, who endured frigid temperatures in the first two games, were snowed out last Thursday against Haverford. This gave the 'Cats an unexpected 10-day break between games. 'Nova's record stands at 1-1.

After going 6-7 last season, the Wildcats look to attain a winning record this year with a mixture of youth and experience. A large majority of the players on this year's squad are either in their sophomore or junior years. Coach Moira Lewis feels extremely positive regarding the youth.

"I think it's the best thing that we can have going, because we know each other so well and we get along," said Lewis.

There are, however, several significant newcomers to the '92 team. One of them is starting goaltender Kendra Geoghegan. In her rookie season, Geoghegan has already earned two starts and high praise from Lewis.

"She's a great goaltender with a good eye; she sees everything," Lewis said. Another impact freshman start is third woman Heidi Connor. Lewis described her as a "great playmaker and a tenacious defender. She really works hard."

> She [Kendra Geoghegan] is a great goaltender with a good eye; she sees everything.
> Head Coach Moira Lewis

For experience, the Wildcats took to senior attackwoman Anne Heilman. Last year, Heilman had 26 goals and 20 assists, making her this year's leading returning scorer. Heilman is just returning to action after a back injury and should be more and more of a presence as the season continues.

Lewis describes the Villanova attack as "very balanced." Heilman is joined on the attack by juniors Monica Hopson and Leigh Ann Leone, both of whom have been dominant in the first two games of the season. Junior Clara Perrotti rounds out the offensive unit at the attack wing position. Coach Lewis considers her a very versatile addition to the team.

"[Perrotti] is a great player both offensively and defensively," Lewis said.

The Wildcats look forward to a chance to climb over the .500 mark this week. Three local teams await the stickwomen when they return to action. After a road game against the University of Pennsylvania, Villanova will play a make-up game at home against Haverford this Sunday. The Wildcats will then hit the road again to play at Drexel April 2.

Lax splits pair; record stands at 3-3

By BOB TRAVISANO
Staff Reporter

After another week of action-packed competition, the men's lacrosse team equalized its record at 3-3 with a 12-7 victory over Mount St. Mary's College and a tough, hard-fought 14-10 loss to nationally ranked Towson State.

In what Coach Randy Marks tabbed "one of the craziest games I've ever seen in my 20 years of coaching," the Cats dominated St. Mary's 'Nova not only had to contend with its opponent, but also with the inclement weather, as the game occurred during a snow storm.

"Both teams played extremely well under very difficult conditions. On a dry day we would have won by a bigger score, but we're really happy to get a win," said Marks.

Coming off two tough losses, a win in any form was certainly welcome. It was sweetened by the performances of a few players. Sol Mahoney had three goals and three assists in his best game of the year. Jason Foote had three goals and an assist for four points and Scott Chisholm had two goals and an assist. Taymore Zarghami, a four-year starter in the cage, had nine saves on the game.

"We were pleased, Mount St. Mary's is a growing Division I program. They've got a few scholarships and we were very happy, particularly on that night, to win the game," said Marks.

The win gave the team some momentum for its trip to Towson State who, as of last week, was ranked eighth in the country. After the first period, 'Nova was up 3-2 on Towson's home turf. However Towson State capitalized on its tactics and, by halftime, 'Nova was down by a very competitive 6-4 score. Overall, the Cats were at a loss speed-wise and really felt the absence of Sean Haggerty, who is out for the season with an exploded knee. The team will miss his goal scoring and inspirational leadership. Also, Brendan McGovern was out with a pulled hamstring, accounting for minus two out of three in the face-off department.

The leading scorers for the game were Rick Bontatibus with five goals and two assists and Scott Chisholm with two goals and an assist. "Those two are outstanding sophomores," said Coach Marks, both of them were not in a scoring slump but their shots just weren't falling in the cage for them."

Zarghami added 13 saves to his total and Brian Kash had 12. Kash looks to be the starting goaltender for next year.

This year, the Cats will play six teams in the top 20 nationally. Coach Marks thinks that the team enjoys such competition. Many players come to Villanova expressly for the high levels of its opponents, he said.

The success of the goaltender often hinges on the defense in front of him. In Zarghami's case he has the aid of senior co-captain and defensive stopper Pete DeTolla.

"Every game he is assigned the opposing team's top attackman. He was a junior college all-America at Farmingdale and he is an all-America nominee this year for Villanova. He's our team's No. 1 defenseman," said assistant coach Mike Corrado of DeTolla.

Sean Sergent is also an outstanding defenseman and three-year starter for the team. Mike Buono, a physical player, has also stepped up to play with a lot of poise and confidence.

The team looks to have much promise for the rest of the season. The remaining schedule, including three top 20 teams, will challenge the Cats. Coach Marks hopes that crowd support will increase, not only against the ranked teams, but for all games.

If the Cats keep playing the way they have, the stadium might get filled quicker than it was thought.

NOTES: The Cats host local rival West Chester tomorrow at Villanova Stadium at 2 p.m. The price of admission to men's lacrosse games is now $1 for students and $3 for adults.

Flood splashes to NCAA Championship

With her victory in the 200-yard breaststroke, Lisa Flood propelled the women's swim team to its best-ever finish in the NCAA tournament, March 20-22.

Flood captured the Wildcats' first-ever national championship in swimming and diving at the 1992 NCAA Division I Swimming and Diving Championships, held in Austin, Texas. The sophomore was a surprise winner in the 200-yard breaststroke, winning in a time of 2:11.78 as she lowered her personal best in the event by 3.7 seconds. A native of Pickering, Ontario, Flood was also the first Canadian to win an NCAA title.

Flood entered the meet with a personal best of 2:15.48 in the event and already owning the school record. In the preliminaries March 21, Flood lowered her school record by over a second-and-a-half to 2:13.86, making her the fifth-fastest qualifier for the finals. In the finals, she took another two seconds off her lifetime best as she came from behind on the final turn to upset heavily favored Dorsey Tierney of Texas. Flood's times of 2:11.78 was just .24 seconds shy of equalling the NCAA meet record held by Tierney.

"When she dropped one-and-a-half seconds [from her personal best] in the pre-lims, I would have been happy with her dropping one more second in the finals, but to drop two was just incredible," said Head Coach Chuck Horton. "In the finals she followed the strategy we had discussed and she is so smart she kept her stroke at the end of the race and came back on everybody."

> Everybody in the whole place knew Villanova by the end of the meet. It puts us in great position.

> Head Coach Chuck Horton

Saturday's efforts followed a ninth-place finish in the 100-yard breaststroke March 20, as Flood won the Consolation Final for her ninth-place finish. Her time of 1:01.90 in the 100-yard breaststroke was yet another school record and earned her Honorable Mention all-America honors. Flood has now garnered all-America status four separate times.

Flood's performance put Villanova swimming on the national swimming map. "Everybody in the whole place knew Villanova by the end of the meet," said Horton. "It puts us in great position."

As a result of Flood's excellent performances, 'Nova achieved its best-ever team finish at the NCAA meet. The Lady Cats finished 24th in the country with a total of 29 points, improving upon last year's 29th place finish. Stanford was the overall team champion with 735.5 points while 42 schools scored points at the meet.

Cats snowed out; prep for tourney at Vet

By ANDY FITZPATRICK
Sports Editor

Instead of firing 90 mph fastballs at St. John's last weekend, the baseball team was left hurling snowballs in the quad.

Due to inclement weather, the Cats enjoyed an unplanned one-week vaction. After an 8-1 victory over Rider March 18, the St. Joseph's game, a three-game series against St. John's and the UPenn contest all were temporarily postponed. The Cats were scheduled to resume play March 25 at Temple.

> 'Nova will compete in the first annual Liberty Bell College Baseball Classic, March 31, when it squares off against Temple at the Vet at 3 p.m.

And after winning four of their last five, the snow could not have come at a worse time for the 5-7 Cats. Hurler Keith Conway pitched seven strong innings in the Rider victory to pick up his second win of the season, and Conway helped his own cause with a three-run double. In the process, the freshman lowered his ERA from 11.57 to 3.86.

Outfielder Mike Evangelista was the hitting force behind the win, pounding out three of the team's 10 hits to increase his batting average to .342. Unfortunately all news was not good as outfielder Ryan McGinty, the team's second leading hitter, suffered a shoulder injury and will be out at least two weeks.

After 12 games, the Cats leading hitter is outfielder Dan Mariniello with a .421 average. The sophomore also leads the club in hits (16), runs scored (9) and total bases (21). From the mound, Brad Baker leads the squad in both ERA (3.60) and innings pitched (20) but is only 1-2. Conway and Larry Kinsbury both have a team-high two wins.

Turning to their upcoming schedule, the Cats will host UConn for a three-game series starting tomorrow at noon at McGeehan Field if the field is in playable shape, or, if not, possibly Veterans Stadium.

Then next Tuesday, March 31, 'Nova will compete in the first annual Liberty Bell College Baseball Classic at the Vet. The Cats open the eight-team single-elimination tournament with a 3 p.m. contest versus Temple. The winner will draw either West Chester or Drexel in the semifinals April 14 at 3 p.m. The championship game is set for April 15 at 7:05 p.m. The other bracket features Delaware, LaSalle, St. Joseph's and Penn.

The soon-to-be annual event, featuring Division I teams from the Delaware Valley, is a joint charitable venture between the colleges and the Philadelphia Phillies. All games will be played at the Vet and the proceeds will benefit the Free Library of the Philadelphia Youth Learning Program. Tickets can be purchased at the Villanova ticket office, $1 for students and $5 for adults.

Softball wiped out by weather

Mother Nature has been the Lady Cats' toughest opposition in 1992.

Off to a 3-1 start, the women's softball team has not played a game in over a week due to inclement weather and poor field conditions. With the Big East season beginning tomorrow against Connecticut, Head Coach Maria DiBernardi and the Lady Cats will be tested immediately by the conference's toughest team.

"Our goal this year is to make the Big East Tournament," said DiBernardi. "This year's format is round-robin and we're looking to be seeded either third or fourth."

After sweeping West Chester University, 'Nova split a doubleheader with the University of Pennsylvania March 18. The Lady Cats won the first game 4-0 before dropping the second game 3-2.

In the first game, the Lady Cats received an outstanding pitching effort from junior Amy Meisenger who went five innings and allowed only three hits for the shutout. Catcher Sharon Palmieri provided the offense with a double and three RBIs.

For the Lady Cats, DiBernardi has a simple formula for success — strong defense, a deep bench and Meisenger's pitching.

"Hopefully, we'll be pretty successful," said DiBernardi. "We only lost one senior and we were a .500 team last year. Defensively, we're very solid, but on offense we need to be more aggressive."

In terms of talent, 'Nova is more equipped to challenge the top teams in the Big East.

"We have a lot of depth," said DiBernardi. "It's a luxury we didn't enjoy in previous years. We have a lot of good freshmen and sophomores who will be counted on this year."

One of those young players is sophomore pitcher Michele Martin. With a 1-1 record and a 3.11 ERA, Martin will be used primarily as the No. 2 pitcher. In the second game against UPenn, Martin went five innings and did not allow an earned run.

Despite getting tagged for the loss, Martin did her job by pitching five solid innings. "If we can get four or five innings out of the freshmen and sophomores, then Amy (Meisenger) can shut them down the rest of the way," said DiBernardi.

Even with Martin's pitching, the Lady Cats lost the second game shortened due to darkness.

"I think we would have won that game," said DiBernardi, "but we ran out of daylight and it started to snow."

Another key ingredient for 'Nova will be the play of Palmieri and Christine Kolatac. DiBernardi labeled the two junior catchers as "clutch hitters who have a lot of experience controlling the game and our pitchers."

Weather permitting, the Lady Cats will host UConn tomorrow for a doubleheader starting at 1 p.m.

MASSIMINO GOES WEST

Coach accepts head position at Nevada - Las Vegas

By TOM COLLINS
Editor in Chief

On April 1 seven years ago, Head Coach Rollie Massimino and Villanova basketball stood atop college basketball; seven years later to the day, Massimino packed his bags for the west.

Massimino announced his acceptance of the vacated coaching position at the University of Nevada-Las Vegas (UNLV) at a news conference in Las Vegas Wednesday. He signed a reported four-year, $2.8 million contract with UNLV. Villanova University released Massimino from his contract, a ten-year deal signed in 1985.

"It [the opportunity] was something that was very, very special," Massimino said in a televised press conference. "It presented me with another challenge, another phase in my life."

No successors to the Villanova job have been announced. The application process began yesterday and will continue for the next few weeks, according to Athletic Director Dr. Ted Aceto. Those mentioned for the job include John Calipari, of the University of Massachusetts; Pete Gillen, of Xavier University; and George Raveling, of the University of Southern California.

The University received Massimino's letter of resignation at 11:30 p.m. April 1, Aceto said at a press conference later the same day. Massimino held a University team meeting to inform his players of his intentions to leave 'Nova for UNLV. He felt it was time to leave, according to several players.

"I'm not really surprised," senior basketball player Marc Dowdell said. "I could see it building up over the past one, two years."

"I was very surprised," said senior basketball player Paul Vrind. "He felt it was time for a change. When he called a meeting I knew something was up."

"He felt it was time for a change," senior basketball player Greg Woodard said. "It was something he felt he had to do."

The confirmation comes after a Philadelphia Daily News story stated that UNLV President Robert Maxson, Athletic Director Jim Weaver and Assistant General Counsel Bradley Book were in Philadelphia March 29-31 to talk with Massimino and University of Massachusetts Head Coach John Calipari.

Aceto granted Maxson permission to negotiate with Massimino. Massimino's decision to leave the University was unexpected and "surprising," said Aceto. "I didn't think he would leave. I thought he would finish his career at Villanova."

According to the Daily News, Tom Massimino, Rollie's son and an assistant coach with the team, told at least one of four incoming recruits that he and his father

19-year reign comes to a dramatic close

Rollie Massimino likes to make news on April 1.

No kidding. On that date in 1973, he began his tenure as Villanova's head basketball coach. In 1985, he was crowned king of college basketball after he led a group of Cinderella Cats to the NCAA title. In 1992, he left the University to become head coach at the University of Nevada-Las Vegas.

Massimino demanded excellence from his players and they responded both on and off the court. In 19 years, he re-established 'Nova's winning basketball tradition. He led 11 teams to the NCAA tournament and graduated 100 percent of his four-year players.

Massimino leaves a mighty legacy behind.

Hired away from Chuck Daly and the University of Pennsylvania in 1973, Massimino inherited a struggling 'Nova team. The Wildcat program had peaked two years earlier with a national championship loss to UCLA.

At the time, Massimino told the Villanovan he would call his first season "the year of tradition." He characterized himself as a "defensive coach" who searches for the "scholar athlete."

Although the Cats suffered through two sub-.500 seasons in his early years, the tide turned with a 23-9 showing and Massimino's first appearance in the NCAA tournament in 1977-78.

The Cats produced winning records consistently. Only two other teams finished at or below .500, in 1986-87 and this past season. Nine of his teams had 20

Student Government officers elected

Ken Batchelor captured the office of Student Government president and Kathy Breen became vice president in elections held April 1 on the University's campus.

Batchelor received 1,117 votes from the 1,800 total cast. Scott McBride followed with 352 votes and Michael Zubey came in third with 331.

"I plan to follow through on the things that I campaigned on, especially bringing the Student Government closer to the students," said Batchelor.

Student Government is in an ideal position to make a difference, because the students are interested in it, according to Batchelor.

"I am psyched to get started planning the cabinet right away for next year," Batchelor said.

Students also voted on the University Senate April 1. Arts and Science senators are Kathy Breen, Matthew Haggerty and Rosana Picillo. Commerce and finance senators are Melissa Grimm, Daniel Donovan and Sebastian Carrado.

The uncontested seats were Stanley Reggie as engineering senator, Kelly Ann Walsh as nursing senator, Lynne Curry as sciences senator and Richard Johnson for the Law School senator.

Chetana Rdjagopal, elections commissioner, said she was encouraged to see so much interest in the senatorial and presidential debates. A total of about 100 students attended both debates.

The 1,800 total votes increased from last year's voter turnout of 1,348 for the runoff election between Mark O'Rourke, present Student Government president, and Anson Asbury, former Arts and Sciences senator.

"Voter participation went up a little from last year, and we hope it improves each year," said Rdjagopal.

O'Rourke said he was not satisfied with voter participation in

DSA pro-choice flyers removed from campus

By LARISA EPATKO
News Editor

Posters advertising a pro-choice march to take place April 5 were removed from University buildings, because they opposed the University's stance on abortion, said Dr. Richard Neville, vice president of Student Life.

The Democrat Socialists of America (DSA) posted the flyers to organize student participation in the March for Women's Lives, said Monica McDermott, chairperson and founder of the University's chapter of DSA.

The flyers were stamped and approved for posting by the office of Student Activities two weeks before the march was to take place. The same afternoon that the posters were put up, the Rev. John Stack, O.S.A., dean of Students, told DSA they had to take down the advertisements until the administration had a chance to decide if they were allowable.

"Students may perceive in some way that [the posters] were given the okay by the administration" if they had been allowed to remain in the buildings, Stack said.

"The poster should not have been stamped," said Lucyna Gorski, director of Student Activities, adding that a student who did not closely read the advertisement might have done it.

The incident encompasses the larger issue of freedom of expression, according to McDermott. "We are most concerned about student groups with certain political positions that are given complete freedom of expression, but other political positions are not," she said.

To date, the posters cannot be hung the way they are. "This hinders free and open discussion if one group advocates a position but another may not," said McDermott.

Kristen Haaf, former president of the Villanovans for Life (VFL), said VFL advocates the sanctity of human life from conception to death. Haaf also said she agreed

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa

The white minority government of South Africa proposed a two-chamber parliament to write a new constitution for South Africa March 30, the first with black participation.

The African National Congress, the largest black political movement, expressed reservations about the plan. The plan reserves white veto power but welcomes similarities with its proposals.

Politicians said the multi-ethnic elections, which could bring President F.W. de Klerk's government closer to its promise of sharing power with the black majority, could be set by June 30.

JERUSALEM, Israel

Peace crusader Abie Nathan was freed March 30 after spending nearly six months in prison for meeting with PLO chief Yasir Arafat.

President Chaim Herzog reduced Nathan's sentence by one year after Nathan promised "to act in accordance with the law," the president's office said.

Nathan said he had asked for an early release so he could campaign against the law during the campaign for national elections scheduled June 23.

WASHINGTON, D.C.

Secretary of State James A. Baker, taking a more aggressive posture toward the Middle East peace talks, has asked all participants to return to Washington, D.C., April 27, while insisting they also agree in advance to hold future talks closer to the region.

State Department spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler announced March 30 that Baker sent letters last week to Israel, Jordan, Syria, Lebanon and the Palestinians with "a package proposal" to resume the talks and make a commitment to move them out of Washington, D.C.

MIAMI, Fla.

Ten-day old infant Theresa Ann Pearson died March 30 in Broward General Medical Center after she was born without a fully formed brain.

Since the infant's birth by caesarean section March 21, her parents Laura Campo and Justin Pearson had been battling for legal permission to have her heart, lungs, kidneys and liver removed so they could be transplanted to other children who might need them. But two state courts ruled that state law prevented taking vital organs from anyone who was not brain-dead.

The parents' legal effort reachd the Florida Supreme Court March 30. The court initially refused to hear the case, but the state appeals court certified that the case was of compelling public interest. Unaware that the baby had died, the state appeals court sent it back to the high court, which accepted the case but said it would not immediately issue a ruling.

LIVERPOOL, England

Officials in Britain reported the largest-ever cocaine raid in their nation March 30.

Police seized 1,980 pounds of cocaine worth $225 million that had been hidden inside 32 lead ingots shipped from Venezuela. Fourteen members of a smuggling ring that brought the drug to Britain and the Netherlands were arrested.

GAUHATI, India

An overcrowded bus fell down a 2,650-foot gorge in a remote mountainous region of eastern India, March 29 killing at least 40 passengers and injuring 24.

The 45-seat bus was carrying about 100 people when it skidded off the road near Sergoan in Arunachal Pradash, a hilly and heavily forested state bordering China.

Core curriculum sparks multicultural debate

By MAURA RURAK
Assistant Entertainment Editor

The debate over the proposed multicultural curriculum ignited strong feelings on both sides of the issue early this fall, a result of the controversial flyer distributed by the "Concerned Students of Villanova" during the 1991 Homecoming Weekend.

The flyer, circulated by the College Republicans, stated worries about courses within the diversity component which would "rationalize homosexuality and advocate abortion rights."

Next fall, nearly one year after the controversy came to a head, a new Core curriculum will be implemented in the college of Arts and Sciences at Villanova. The vision of the new curriculum once again sparks debate among faculty and students. Some view it as a step towards a broad, comprehensive way of learning, while others find it a threat to the Christian disciplines on which Villanova was founded.

The question remains if the new Core is a revolutionary advance towards a true liberal education or simply a compromise made under conservative supervision.

In order to understand the new Core, it is essential to realize that it is not based in multiculturalism. According to Dr. Jack Doody, chairman of the philosophy department, who is stepping down from this position to become director of the new Core curriculum, the new Core does have a multicultural component, but this component does not apply to all courses. The homosexual and abortion issues that were mentioned in the Homecoming letter are just one part of the broad scope of multiculturalism that were completely blown out of proportion, he said.

In the Dec. 6 issue of the Villanovan, University President, Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., responded to the letter by saying, "I think this is an ignorance of what the multicultural component and the Core curriculum were established for. I mean there is absolutely no way in which the Core curriculum was providing advocacy for either gay rights or abortion rights."

The new Core focuses on a multidisciplinary schedule which is broken down into two categories: (1) Writing Across the Curriculum and (2) Integrate Multidisciplinary Approach. The Multidisciplinary Core will integrate various parts of the past Core requirements while placing the emphasis on writing. A total of eight courses will be based in the improvement of writing skills. All students will take four writing intensive and four writing enriched courses as a part of the new requirement. For example, a biology major may take a course in the writing of a scientific thesis which would fulfill not only a major requirement but a writing intensive requirement as well.

> The courses we offer must add to the education. They must have substance, be challenging and profound rather than superficial.
> Dr. Colleen Sheehan, political science department

The most dramatic change in the curriculum will be the Core Humanities Seminar Program, which is not part of any specific department. All students in the College of Arts and Sciences will take two humanities seminars not limited or confined to any particular subject. In the January 1992 Chautauqua Doody said, "Knowledge is multidisciplinary; that the boundaries of what counts as a philosophy text or a history text or a work of literature are not sacrosanct; that at the undergraduate level what we need to do is to see the integration that happens between the various disciplines."

As a part of the new Core, all students will be required to take one course in international studies and one course on U.S. culture and the groups existing within America. In addition, arts students must complete one course in the fine arts. In order to make room for these changes in the curriculum, the regular requirements of English, philosophy and religion have been cut from three to two. Some believe the scope will now be too narrow. Others feel it leaves room for a more comprehensive education.

"The cut from three courses to two will necessarily cut back on the extent and quality of the conversation about religious meaning on our campus," said Dr. Rodger Van Allen of the religious studies department in the March 1992 Chautauqua.

Dr. Colleen Sheehan of the political science department generally believes that the new emphasis on writing is a good idea. However, she feels the education process is in danger of overbeauracracy. She would like to see the faculty keep their own high standards without being told to do so.

Sheehan fears that the courses designed to fulfill the new Core will push a political agenda, and she is especially afraid that women's studies will force the feminist issue. "We're turning everything and anything into a woman's issue rather than a human issue."

For Sheehan, a study in "multiculturalism" really meant a study in special-interest groups, which she does not believe would be a serious course of study. Sheehan would rather teach specific, traditional subjects than incorporate ideas into more gener-

Campus recycling project reaches expected goal

By ELIZABETH BARSZCZEWSKI
Assistant News Editor

Two years ago the Villanova Environmental Group (VEG) began organizing voluntary recycling of cans, glass and paper to be collected at Dougherty and Donohue dining halls on Sundays, said junior Scott Friese, a member of VEG.

Since its inception, the recycling program at the University has grown. "Over a half of a million pounds of material has been collected and recycled since August of 1990," said Kevin O'Donnell, superintendent of grounds.

At this time there are newspaper and aluminum can recycling bins in the dorms as well as white office paper recycling in all the departments, said Friese. As of the beginning of this semester, there is glass recycling in Connelly Center as well as areas behind Stanford Hall where green, brown and clear glass can be placed to be recycled, added Friese.

A subcommittee within VEG is also hoping to order reusable plastic cups which will be a part of the freshman packet next year if the funds are available, said Friese.

> Over a half of a million pounds of material has been collected and recycled since August of 1990.
> Kevin O'Donnell, superintendent of grounds

Although participation has been good, there has been a problem which is interfering with the effectiveness of the recycling program, said O'Donnell.

It seems that students have been throwing non-recyclable waste into recycling bins, O'Donnell added. Several hundred pounds of aluminum cans which could have been recycled have had to be thrown away due to contamination from non-recyclable waste, said O'Donnell. It is a shame that the actions of a few careless students ruin the work done by so many others, he added.

Participation has increased substantially due to the individual efforts of both staff and students, said O'Donnell. It is that individual effort which is making a great impact on how much material is collected and going to the recycling centers, O'Donnell added.

Health care issues focus of lecture

By CHRISTINE FINGERHUT

The University sponsored an open forum entitled "Health Care Issues in the Presidential Elections," as part of Peace and Justice Week March 25.

The forum featured Dr. James J. McCartney, O.S.A., and Dr. Donna Tartasky in a discussion about the nation's present health care issues and made proposals based on the flaws in each U.S. presidential candidate's solution.

McCartney, who teaches a health care ethics course at Villanova, said "the health care system in the United States is critically, if not terminally ill, and at the heart of the sickness is the perception that health care is a commodity rather than a basic need."

A solution would involve such amendments as containing health care costs, improving access, quality, affordability, distributing health care more equitably, and maintaining diversity of delivery systems, said McCartney.

The plans proposed by President George Bush, Pat Buchanan, Jerry Brown and Bill Clinton fail to meet some of the above criterion McCartney said.

McCartney proposed to deal with the current national health care problems involving an education of the American people.

"People have to be convinced that health care is a basic societal need [like education] rather than a commodity [like an automobile]," McCartney said. The elements of his plan include guaranteed access for everyone, diversity of delivery systems and third-party payers with cost control and quality incentives. His plans also include emphasis on primary and preventive care, exclusion of some kinds of health care interventions from coverage and the option to purchase additional coverage.

> People have to be convinced that health care is a basic societal need [like education] rather than a commodity [like an automobile].

Tartasky, a professor with the School of Nursing, focused her talk on the issue of individualism versus the common good. The concentration should be on the rights of those who have no insurance, an issue raised by public health care proposals.

Tartasky also addressed the candidates' health care plans and the flaws involved with each.

"Health USA," a plan originated by Bob Kerry, would cover all Americans through a choice of plans, Tartasky said. Although the change will not happen overnight, it is a goal to work toward in the future, she added.

University Senate discusses budget, telecommunications

By JIM ROWLEY
Staff Reporter

The University Senate met March 27 in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall. Issues discussed and voted upon included the University's annual budget, the length of the fall semester and telecommunication facilities.

The Budget Committee distributed an outline of the proposed budget. The theme of the budget was downsizing. The budget committee outlined two main reasons for this trend. The first was the disappointingly small return on the University's investment income due to the currently low interest rates. The second reason cited a significant increase in financial aid to students.

In keeping with the idea of downsizing, the Budget Committee stated that while most institutions allow 2 percent of their budget for physical upkeep, Villanova has allotted closer to 1.5 percent. The Budget Committee also stated that $268,000 would be trimmed from the sesquicentennial anniversary budget, to bring the celebration's cost down to $1.7 million.

Also, the Budget Committee said that no money in next year's plans would go toward new furniture.

A fee of $600 will be added to the tuition of incoming students next year to help make up the lost income. This addition was recommended as the best idea by the Budget Committee because it has the inherent advantage of not upsetting any current students.

For the first time, next year's budget will set aside money designated as savings. This appropriation keeps with the University's stated effort to increase endowment.

The appropriation that raised the most debate was the allotment for new, larger and remodeled classrooms. Student senators believed that their constituency would rather see the money spent on services such as an improved library (Falvey Memorial ranks eighth out of the nine schools in Villanova's "peer group"), and phones in dorms.

When the debate concluded, the University Senate, including student Body President Mark O'Rourke and student Senator Ken Batchelor, approved the budget.

Sen. Preston Hrisko also proposed his motion on the length of the fall semester. This motion stated that the fall semester be lengthened from 65 to 70 days while maintaining a five-day fall break and two reading days to finish the term. In order to accomplish this schedule, the semester would start several days earlier and end a few days closer to Christmas. Hrisko brought this motion to the Senate after his Broadcasters, students and professors attended the 14th annual "Lunch With the Broadcasters" March 26.

TV programming focus of luncheon

University Press Release

Broadcasters, students, academia and community representatives attended the 14th annual "Lunch With the Broadcasters" sponsored by Citizens Action for Better Television (CABTV) March 26, held at Williamson's restaurant in Bala Cynwyd. The theme of the meeting was "Television Perspectives: Students, Critics, Broadcasters and Viewers." Jonathan Storm, television critic for The Philadelphia Inquirer, was the luncheon speaker.

A highlight of the all-day session was the morning workshop during which communications majors from area colleges and universities presented referred papers on various aspects and concerns of television broadcasting.

Dr. Marguerite Farley, chairperson of the University communication arts department, sponsored the senior student representation. Alyssa Petillo, Sandra Portorreal and Karen Vanderschmalz spoke on "Laughing at Ourselves: A Critical Analysis of the Simpsons." Paul Custer and Slobhan Kelly also participated in the project research.

CABTV was founded in Philadelphia in 1978 by civic leaders and other individuals concerned about the quality of family television programming. CABTV is an affiliate member of the American Council for Better Broadcasting, a national non-profit consumer organization that promotes broadcasting excellence. Since its founding, CABTV has fostered the development of critical viewing skills and interaction between the television industry and its viewers.

Executives and representatives of the major level TV stations (KYW-TV3, WPVI-TV6, WCAU-TV10, WPHL-TV17, WTXF-TV29) were members of the panel "Rap Session" in the afternoon. Farley acted as moderator.

Women's Law Caucus hosts Alumnae Career Banquet

By CHRISTA MRUZ

The University School of Law's Women's Law Caucus sponsored its Annual Alumnae Career Banquet March 25.

The guest speakers were Representative Ellen A. Harley, Sen. Allyson Y. Schwartz, the Honorable Kathryn Streeter Lewis, Nancy O'Mara Ezold, Esq., and Mary Scherf, Esq.

The goal of the Women's Law Caucus to co-chairperson Gina Masino is "to enlighten women on women's issues." The School of Law chose the speakers because they are successful and had faced obstacles in their careers," Masino said. They could give insight on such obstacles as well as information on diverse career options.

Harley, state representative of the 149th legislative district of Pennsylvania, was the first speaker. Harley started her political career when a friend asked her to lobby in Harrisburg for women's issues.

Harley spoke to a representative who was unresponsive to their ideals. Along with the help of friends Harley was elected to replace that representative's seat.

Harley concluded her speech with optimism, saying that politicians in Harrisburg and Washington are listening to women's issues. She encouraged further political participation, saying, "If not me? Who? If not now? When?"

Schwartz, state senator, fourth senatorial district of Pennsylvania, said she gained experience through working with the government.

Schwartz's speech discussed following public opinion as opposed to worrying about re-election, as many long-term officials do. She encouraged students to become involved in the political arena. "Politics will be a cleaner and better place with women in politics," Schwartz said.

> Politics will be a cleaner and better place with women in politics.
> Allyson Y. Schwartz

Lewis of the Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County, gave the third speech. A University Law School graduate, Lewis stressed the importance of knowing your interests before attempting to find a job. "I don't know where I'll be in 20 years but I know what I like to do. There is no failure in changing your mind," Lewis said.

Ezold, University Law School graduate and presently a litigator in a West Chester law firm, spoke of her involvement in a sexual discrimination case.

"We can no longer ignore the sensitive issues that face us as women," Ezold said.

The final speaker was Scherf, executive director of the Judicare Project in Philadelphia and graduate of the University Law School. She said her work with abused women is satisfying because she tries to insure that justice is attained equally by all, Scherf said.

Job search focus of Career Day

By JANET KEMPLE
Staff Reporter

Executives representing various local companies gathered in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center, March 25 to host Communication Arts Career Day.

Representatives from companies involved in marketing, advertising, broadcasting and print media spoke about employment opportunities and offered advice on effective job searching.

The keynote address was delivered by Chas McGee, an executive consultant for Manchester Agencies of King of Prussia. McGee, who helps displaced businesspeople locate jobs, focused his speech on strategies for job hunting in the '90s.

While looking for employment may be frustrating, being turned down is actually a favor — not everyone belongs at every job, McGee said.

The published job market comprises only 25 percent of all employment and may essentially be a waste of time, McGee said. "You can just look at the ads in the paper and go to the employment agencies, and maybe in six years you'll get a job," said McGee.

The potential employee should focus on the hidden job market. According to McGee, "Getting a job is not a technical act ... it's a social act." Many employment opportunities can be found through networking.

The process includes making a list of 100 people and working through the list by phone. Any possible leads can be followed by a resume, but a personal interview is preferable. The search may seem haphazard, but it works because "job information is randomly scattered," added McGee.

The other method of discovering hidden job information is known as broadcast mailing. This process involves consulting books and other publications which list job openings, McGee said.

Send letters to any possible sources — not resumes. The letter should include an expression of interest as well as mention interesting experiences or outstanding qualities. A week after sending the letter, call each company for feedback.

"A job develops in the mind of a person who has a problem or challenge," McGee said, adding that it is the responsibility of the job-hunter to try to meet this challenge.

Concrete evidence of experience is the key, according to Len LeBarth of the Delaware County Daily Times, "Your resume, that's nice ... but let me see what you've written," he said.

Vic Burriss of SKF Bearing Services said that the job market is minimal right now due to the recession but predicts improvement by the fall.

Experience is helpful, but the candidate should exhibit attitude, aptitude, enthusiasm ... and a little bit of showmanship," Burriss said.

SNAP presents money to Ronald McDonald House

By JEN BORDA
Staff Reporter

As a result of efforts by the Student Nurses Association of Pennsylvania (SNAP), Student Government and the Engineering Joint Council, the University presented a check to the Ronald McDonald Camp for Children with Cancer March 31.

The presentation was made at a SNAP sponsored lecture in Corr Chapel concerning "The Challenge of Childhood Cancer." Guest speakers at the presentation included oncology nurse Cindy Rich and Ronald McDonald House representative Doris Sterner.

SNAP, Student Government and the Engineering Joint Council co-sponsored a fund raising dance for the Ronald McDonald Camp Oct. 11 and were able to reach their goal by raising $800. As a result the University was able to present a check to Doris Sterner amounting to enough money to send two children to camp this summer.

"This fundraiser represents the generosity and interest of Villanova students and staff," said Dr. Carol Weingarten, advisor for SNAP.

The presentation began with a speech by Cindy Rich about pediatric oncology nursing. Rich is a Villanova graduate who is an RN-BSN at Children's Hospital in Philadelphia and specializes in the care of children with cancer. She is also a former president of the National Student Nurses Association and a counselor at the Ronald McDonald Camp.

Sterner, a social worker for the Ronald McDonald House and a volunteer for the camp also spoke. Sterner spoke about the functions of the Ronald McDonald Camp and the benefits and opportunities it offers children with cancer.

"It brings kids together who share a common disease. Once they are there, the kids forget there is any difference between them and anyone else in the world," said Sterner.

The camp began in 1985 and is funded by donation so the kids do not have to pay. The camp consists of one week in the Poconos for 125 children ages 8 to 18.

Academic Policy Committee determined that this plan was the least disruptive of several considered.

These alternatives included shortening or eliminating the Fall Break, an option inconsistent with a recent student vote and a previous University Senate vote; finishing the fall term after the Christmas Break, an option only Senator Alvin Clay, dean of Commerce and Finance, seemed to genuinely consider a possibility; or conducting tests at other than class times to create an extra week of lecture time, an alternative rejected as not logistically feasible except for the relatively small School of Engineering.

After several senators gave their endorsements to one or some combination of the other alternatives, the Senate passed the motion as it stood.

O'Rourke, Student Government president, proposed a motion which stated that the Senate should "strongly urge" that residence hall rooms have telephone and computer lines "as soon as possible," and "an emergency phone system immediately." The Senate passed a motion to install systems within three years.

Batchelor proposed amending O'Rourke's motion to read that residence hall room phones and computer access be made available by next year. When it was pointed out that the budget had been passed by the body earlier without appropriations made for such communication lines, the motion was reworded again.

New core curriculum

al, comprehensive ways of learning.

"The courses we offer must add to the education. They must have substance, be challenging and profound rather than superficial."

Some may wonder why the Core curriculum is being changed. The majority of the present Core has been in place for the past 25 years. During this time period students accepted at Villanova have gradually received higher SAT scores and are generally smarter. The admission requirements have gotten tougher, whereas the Core has remained the same. A Core must be designed to challenge the students and the new curriculum should do so, according to Doody.

"We're trying to place Villanova in the same academic category as a Georgetown or a Notre Dame," said Doody, pointing to the Core as a way to achieve such goals.

The success of the new Core depends greatly on the faculty's willingness to accept the changes. Although teachers must follow the new curriculum, according to academic freedom, no member of the faculty will be forced to teach a course in diversity or a course based on other cultures. Faculty members who wish to teach the courses will offer to do so.

> The cut from three courses to two will necessarily cut back on the extent and quality of the conversation about religious meaning on our campus.
> Dr. Rodger Van Allen

Professor Carol Anthony, a member of the philosophy department, sees the role of the teacher as vital. The "knowledge, goodwill and intentions of the faculty" can make the diversity component of the new Core work, said Anthony.

Anthony points out that most of the faculty is privileged by race, sex and class and believes that a distinct targeting of the faculty must occur in order to persuade them to teach new courses with a different approach and tactic. As a member of the faculty, Anthony sees a need for creativity on the part of the teacher as well as the students. This new "philosophy" of teaching should carry over into all courses the faculty teach, not just those designed as part of the diversity component.

"Growth is always good. However, there are many things that hold it back. At Villanova, it is the Catholicism and affluence that hold growth towards diversity back," she said.

In the January 1992 issue of the Chatauqua Doody said, " ... the faculty should be thinking of themselves as colleagues working within a larger area, in which what they do in their own fields necessarily interrelates and interacts with what is being done in other fields."

Balloon Day 1992

University Press Release

The University's Campus Ministry Office will hold its 18th annual Balloon Day celebration April 7 from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the courtyard in front of Connelly Center.

Arches of brightly colored balloons will adorn the campus during the carnival of festivities which will include food and game booths sponsored by various student organizations, a raffle and a variety of prizes.

Entertainment is planned throughout the funfilled day by the University Gospel Ensemble, the Glee Club, the Dance Ensemble, the Spires folk/pop ensemble, the Steppers, a fraternity and sorority group of dancers and guitarist Jean Coppa, among others.

The event will benefit St. Barnabas Mission in Philadelphia, a parish center soup kitchen and shelter for homeless families. In addition, Villanova has invited disabled children from the Don Guanella School in Springfield, Pa., and other schools to take part in Balloon Day festivities.

The public is welcome. Rain dates are April 9 or 14. For more information, call 645-4080.

that the abortion issue should be debated on both sides.

Neville said the University's policy is not to allow groups to advocate or lobby for positions which would be contrary to the teachings of the Catholic Church. "This means not allowing people to use campus facilities for lobbying issues against the current policy," he added.

Neville said he asked DSA to attend the April 14 meeting of the Student Life Committee to present a concrete request to change the policy. DSA then would submit the request to the University Senate to take up the issue.

University President Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., said his role in the discussion was to identify the University's position as a Catholic institution and its commitment to academic freedom.

In an official statement, Dobbin said that the University "has been committed to the moral tradition and teaching of the Catholic Church since the University's founding ... [and] as a Catholic institution, Villanova embraces the Church's teaching regarding the moral tragedy that is abortion.

"To be faithful to this teaching and to its own Catholic identity and mission, the University cannot provide institutional support for a message or activity which promotes or advocates abortion," according to Dobbin's statement.

"At the same time, Villanova ... endorses unfettered discussion and the exchange of ideas in the search for truth and knowledge. The University's devotion to free inquiry is wholly compatible with its Catholic identity," wrote Dobbin.

Dr. Michael Burke of the honors department is the advisor for the DSA. He said the University will not support groups advocating views opposed to the Catholic Church, but the University supports the idea of academic freedom and expression.

Burke said that "the Villanova Community, including students, parents, faculty and benefactors have to learn that every expression does not necessarily represent the view of the University."

"Villanova encourages debate and examination of all aspects of the important moral and social issues of our time, including abortion," according to Dobbin's statement.

"Villanova is open to ... full and frank discussion of controversial moral and social issues ... without compromising the institution's obligation to bear witness to the Church's moral teaching," wrote Dobbin.

The task of creating an atmosphere of open discussion on controversial issues will not be simple, according to Dobbin's statement. "It requires time, reflection and the climate of a caring community tolerant of one another's sincerely held beliefs."

"The exchange of ideas is different than a University-sponsored group advocating a position clearly not in line with the mission of a Catholic institution," Stack said.

"The participation of the whole community is essential in doing the hard work necessary to preserve the principles of openness to ideas and fidelity to religious beliefs; both being central to Villanova's identity," according to Dobbin.

While DSA is not involved in only abortion rights, the members believe reproductive freedom is an important issue, McDermott said. "We're going to organize people for the March by whatever means are open to us," she added.

"I don't think the situation has been handled in an adequate manner," McDermott said, adding that she did not feel that DSA had been treated fairly either.

When DSA sought to become a student group, Stack said that he had some questions. "My understanding was that they would look at issues ... that socialists would concern themselves with," he added.

No previous group was designed to work for the pro-choice movement, Stack said, adding that it did not mean that students were not talking about it.

"Society is so polarized on the issue [of abortion] that they cannot even speak about it," Dobbin said. The University should provide a ground for discussion of controversial issues, he added.

would be leaving the University for the same positions at UNLV.

Last week, Massimino said he had talked to Weaver about other possible coaches for the UNLV position and that he was happy at Villanova, the Daily News said.

The UNLV position was vacated by controversial Head Coach Jerry Tarkanian, a close friend of Massimino, who resigned the job effective at the end of the 1991-92 season. Tarkanian has been embroiled in legal fights with both the NCAA and UNLV that has portrayed the program as unethical and academically weak. Maxson has stated that UNLV wants the program to be more academically inclined and respected.

Massimino, who coached at Villanova for 19 years and amassed a 357-240 record, is respected by the NCAA and university presidents for his graduation of players and running of a clean program. All players who have stayed for four years under Massimino have graduated.

"UNLV wants to clean up its program," said Bob Vetrone, Big Five expert and friend of Massimino. "They want a coach who runs a clean program and graduates players. Rollie is one of those guys. He's the type of coach UNLV is looking for. When you think about it, it really isn't a surprise," said Vetrone.

Among those who have turned down the UNLV job or expressed no interest were Calipari; Rick Majerus, of Utah; Pat Kennedy, of Florida State; Perry Clark, of Tulane; and Bobby Cremins, of Georgia Tech.

The news follows a controversial year for Massimino that included the restructuring of the Big Five, a player suspension, problems with the cheerleading squad and a .500 record.

The effects of the issues and the media's harping on Massimino's role in the Big Five break-up may have taken its toll on him, according to Vetrone.

"I thought if Rollie would take any job it would be the New Jersey Nets position back in 1985," said Vetrone. "But the UNLV opportunity must be enticing. I have to think this year has worn on him, the harping of the media, the harping of fans outside the Villanova community. I think it has taken its toll."

The administration announced in June 1991 that the Big Five would be restructured from a round-robin schedule to a two-game series with city rivals. The action sparked criticism of Massimino by media and fans, who thought Massimino, not administration, was the cause of the break-up. As a result, the relationship between the media and Massimino, already tenuous, became strained.

Other incidents in the past year include the dismissal of Lloyd Mumford from the team for criminal misconduct, a debate between a cheerleader and Massimino concerning the length of the student's hair and a disappointing season that ended without an NCAA appearance for only the third time in 14 years.

Mumford, who was to be a sophomore starting contender at point guard, was dismissed from the team in early August for violation of team rules after he was arrested on charges of criminal trespass, disorderly conduct and criminal mischief in early July. Mumford transferred to University of California-Irvine and will be eligible next season. Ironically, Massimino and UNLV will face

A dispute between the University cheerleading team and Massimino erupted in early December concerning the length of a male cheerleader's hair. Massimino said the situation stopped him from providing "gifts" to the cheerleaders as he had in the past.

"I have standards upheld by my basketball team." Massimino said in the Dec. 6 issue of the Villanovan. "I made my decision."

The 1991-92 basketball season was disappointing, according to many media members and fans. With all five starters and three top bench players returning (the only scholarship player who did not return was Mumford), the Wildcats were ranked 29th in the preseason Associated Press Top 25 college basketball poll. They finished 14-14 and lost in the first round of the NIT at duPont Pavilion amidst boos.

"The feeling I get is that everything must revolve around him [Rollie]," said an anonymous friend of Massimino and faculty member. "The game must be his, the players must be his, the cheerleading squad must be his.

"It looks as if he has lost his focus. With all the endorsements and things going on outside of basketball, it appears as though he has forgotten his job, to coach. I think he needs a change."

or more wins and Massimino achieved a 20-10 NCAA Tournament record.

In 1980-81, he led his team into the new Big East Conference. With successive Elite Eight finishes in '82 and '83, the Cats helped elevate the young league to national prominence. To cap off 'Nova's remarkable rise to the top of collegiate basketball, Massimino guided the Cats to the 1985 national championship.

In this championship game against the Georgetown Hoyas, Massimino reached the pinnacle of his coaching career with a stunning 66-64 upset over John Thompson's team. Behind a then-tournament record 79 percent field-goal shooting, the Cats pulled off one of the greatest upsets in tournament history.

"This is the greatest moment in Villanova basketball history," said Massimino at the time. "These kids are just great. People wrote us off but they persevered. This is truly a tremendous, tremendous feat."

Playboy and MacGregor named him National Coach of the Year and Philadelphia embraced him as "Coach Mass" that season. The victory made Massimino a hero, but was also a key turning point in his career.

In the seven years since receiving the national crown, Villanova has been mired in mediocrity. On the court, the Cats have enjoyed only two 20-win seasons. Four solid NCAA Tournament appearances and three NIT appearances have failed to meet the high expectations created by the Cinderella Cats of '85.

Off the court, Massimino and his program also found controversy. Gary McLain, one of the '85 stars, went public in a 1986 Sports Illustrated cover story about his addiction to cocaine. In the article, McLain made allegations that Massimino and other members of the basketball staff were aware of his problem and took no disciplinary action. While nothing was ever proven, Massimino's program received its first dent.

Five years later, after Miami joined the Big East, the Philadelphia-area Big Five broke up and Massimino received much of the blame for its demise. Fans and the media pounded him with criticism. The University's decision to continue Big Five competition, only two games instead of a full four-game schedule, put Massimino in an uncomfortable position. With an 18-game Big East schedule, tough out-of-conference competition and Big Five games, the pressure to win increased each passing season.

LaSalle Head Coach Bill "Speedy" Morris said that Massimino was directly responsible for the Big Five's breakup.

This season presented its own problems for Massimino. In late August, he dismissed sophomore Lloyd Mumford from the team for disciplinary reasons.

Still, with all five starters returning, the team received high pre-season ratings. With hopes running high, the Cats sputtered to an 2-6 start. Massimino rallied the troops, however, and the Cats found success in Big East play, finishing fourth at 11-7. Yet, the team failed to make the NCAA Tournament, and it suffered a first-round NIT loss to Virginia.

The rally cry, "Wait until next year," no longer plagues Massimino's Cats. For the fans who cheered Massimino and his national champions in '85, only memories remain. The coach has gone to Las Vegas. The Rollie Massimino era is over.

Markey named to board

University Press Release

Andrew J. Markey, of Basking Ridge, N.J., was named to Villanova University's board of trustees. Markey is currently vice president of treasury and financial services of Johnson and Johnson and president of Johnson & Johnson Finance Corp.

A 1952 graduate of Villanova with a bachelor's degree in economics, he served as staff auditor with Coopers & Lybrand in New York City for four years before joining Johnson & Johnson in 1958. He was first an accountant and then held a number of financial positions with the company, including controller at plants in Sherman, Texas, and Chicago; and at the Eastern Surgical Dressings Plant in North Brunswick, N.J. In 1972, he was named vice president of information and control of the Johnson & Johnson Baby Products Co. The following year he assumed that post with Johnson & Johnson Products, Inc., also becoming a member of its management board.

In 1977, the Bayonne, N.J., native was named vice president of finance and a director of Johnson & Johnson International. He was named corporate treasurer in 1981 and in 1985 became president of the Johnson & Johnson Finance Corp. He assumed his current position in 1991.

Markey is a member of the boards of trustees of Robert Wood Johnson University Hospital Foundation, the Francis E. Parker Memorial Homes, and the New Brunswick Cultural Center. He is of the Institute Accountants and of the Financial Executives Institute.

A veteran of the U.S. Navy, he and his wife, Betty, are the parents of five children.

Three students overcome by fumes

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla.

Three college students on Spring Break remained in serious condition after being overcome by carbon monoxide in their motel room.

The carbon monoxide fumes apparently seeped from a nearby boiler into the room. The three students, all from Massachusetts, were discovered March 20 by a maid at the 200-room Holiday Inn-Airport.

Rescue workers initially thought they were badly sunburned or had overdosed on drugs because their skin had turned a deep red. When a police officer collapsed, rescue workers realized that the students' color was the result of carbon monoxide poisoning.

All guests were evacuated from the motel, which will remain closed until authorities give the owners the go-ahead to reopen.

Todd Girouard, 21, of Chelmsford, Mass., was in serious condition March 23 at St. Mary's Hospital in West Palm Beach. Kimberly Newton, 21, of Brockton, Mass., and Kirsten Madden, 20, of Groton, Mass., were in stable condition at Mercy Hospital in Miami.

Indiana college stays all male

CRAWFORDVILLE, Ind.

School trustees have decided not to admit women to Wabash College, an all-male liberal arts school in western Indiana.

The college's trustees voted unanimously March 22 against admitting women, saying the school's single-sex tradition had contributed to its academic excellence.

"There is no doubt in our minds that one of the main reasons for the personal and professional success of the Wabash graduates throughout a century and a half is the all-male atmosphere," the trustees said in a statement.

Former editor charged in scam

MELBOURNE, Fla.

The former editor of the student newspaper at Florida Institute of Technology has been charged in a computer scam that may have diverted $31,000 of the school's money into student accounts.

Darren Marc Astin, 25, of Plymouth, Mass., was charged March 19 with 31 counts of computer fraud and grand theft, school officials said.

Astin, who served as editor of The Crimson from September 1991 to March 1992, was employed by the school's Housing and Student Activities Department.

Astin is accused of using university computers to falsely credit his student account and the accounts of seven other students with $31,019 in school funds, said Gwendolyn De Cort, director of media relations.

Astin also was the school mascot and dressed in a panther suit at basketball games.

An investigation of the seven other students is continuing.

Three more arrested in gambling ring

SOUTH KINGSTOWN, R.I.

Three more people, including a University of Rhode Island student, have been arrested in connection with a college-based gambling ring.

Police said Roland Recker, 21, a resident adviser, was charged March 19 with bookmaking and organized criminal gambling. Two others, Sean Gallagher, 26, of Newport, R.I., and Jonathan McGloin, 33, of Narragansett, also were charged with bookmaking and organized criminal gambling.

Capt. Brian Andrews said Gallagher was the coach of a high school girls' basketball and softball teams. Gallagher resigned shortly before his arrest.

State police are investigating allegations that several Rhode Island basketball players have placed bets on professional and college games.

The gambling ring is believed to have been based at the University of Rhode Island and Bryant College, but allegedly had operations at other campuses. Bryant College has suspended five players in connection with the investigation.

In late February, police arrested another University of Rhode Island student, a Bryant College student and a third man on gambling charges.

Workshop held to improve writing

By KRISTIN BRIGGS
Staff Reporter

The "Writing For Publication" workshop, directed by Dr. Ray Heitzmann, took place for the 17th consecutive year March 27-29.

The workshop staff included Heitzmann; Jeff and Liz Ball, two established writers; Charlene Gaynor, editor-in-chief for Learning magazine; and James DeLorenzo, a graduate of the University who has been involved in communications for the past five years.

The workshop took place March 27 and March 28 in old Falvey Hall. The workshop was closed because the registration was full.

The first day of the two-day workshop consisted of introductions and a discussion of the workshop goals from Heitzmann and a lecture entitled "The Writing Life: From Novice to Professional," given by Ball. Also, Delorenzo gave a lecture entitled "How to Market Your Manuscripts."

On March 28, the day began with questions and discussions directed by Heitzmann. Next, Gaynor gave a lecture entitled "Writing For Success: The Editor's Perspective." The rest of the workshop consisted of lectures and questions with Heitzmann. The workshop closed with individual consulting for the participants.

the election, adding that he had expected at least 2,000 students to vote.

"This year Student Government tried to elevate the Student Government to a higher level than in the past. There was a lot of time and energy expended in promoting the elections," O'Rourke said.

This year's elections were an experiment to "smash student apathy," according to O'Rourke. Student Government used several measures to encourage student votes.

"We sent letters to every RA [Resident Assistant] and student organization; we spoke with the presidents of fraternities, sororities and other important student groups," said O'Rourke.

For the first time, Student Government hung a banner publicizing the elections over the quad. "I can't imagine how to improve publicity short of flying the Good Year blimp," O'Rourke added.

"We did not think 2,000 [voters] was unrealistic. With the increased publicity we thought it was an attainable goal," said O'Rourke.

"A vast majority of the student body greatly underestimates the importance and role of Student Government at the University ... Student Government meets regularly with the University president and frequently with the board of trustees and other important administrators to voice the students' concerns," said O'Rourke.

The focus was on the undergraduates this year, O'Rourke said, adding that he hoped the student body recognized and appreciated that.

Massimino deserves our respect

Whether you love him or hate him, Rollie Massimino deserves our respect. With mixed emotions, we say goodbye and thank-you to Massimino for the class, loyalty and pride he brought to the University. With his acceptance of the UNLV head coaching job, the end of an era has come for the University's basketball program.

Unfortunately, remembrances of success and glory were marred by mocking cheers and jokes by students at a press conference held April 1. They sang in sarcastic tone, "Hey, hey, hey goodbye." This classless action belittled the tremendous accomplishments of the basketball program under Massimino's reign. In 1973, he took over a program on the heels of a 11-14 season. He proceeded to rebuild and eventually solidify the team as a contender. Massimino guided the Cats to 11 NCAA appearances, including four Final Eights and one championship. How soon many forget.

Granted, the program has slipped in recent years. 'Nova has not lost fewer than 13 games in a season since 1985. But the "what have you done for me lately" attitude displayed by students at the press conference lacked class and, more importantly, respect.

It became obvious this past year that Massimino grew tired of Villanova due to the controversial Big Five decision and media backlash. He did not enjoy himself on the sidelines, and the season frustrated fans. The change may benefit both the University and Massimino. Yet despite recent troubles, he provided alumni, students and fans a reason to cheer throughout his 19 years.

We thank Massimino for the glory years, the national respect he brought and the upholding of the academic excellence of the University. We hope he enjoys similar success at UNLV. We are sure he wishes the same to Villanova.

DSA controversy raises questions

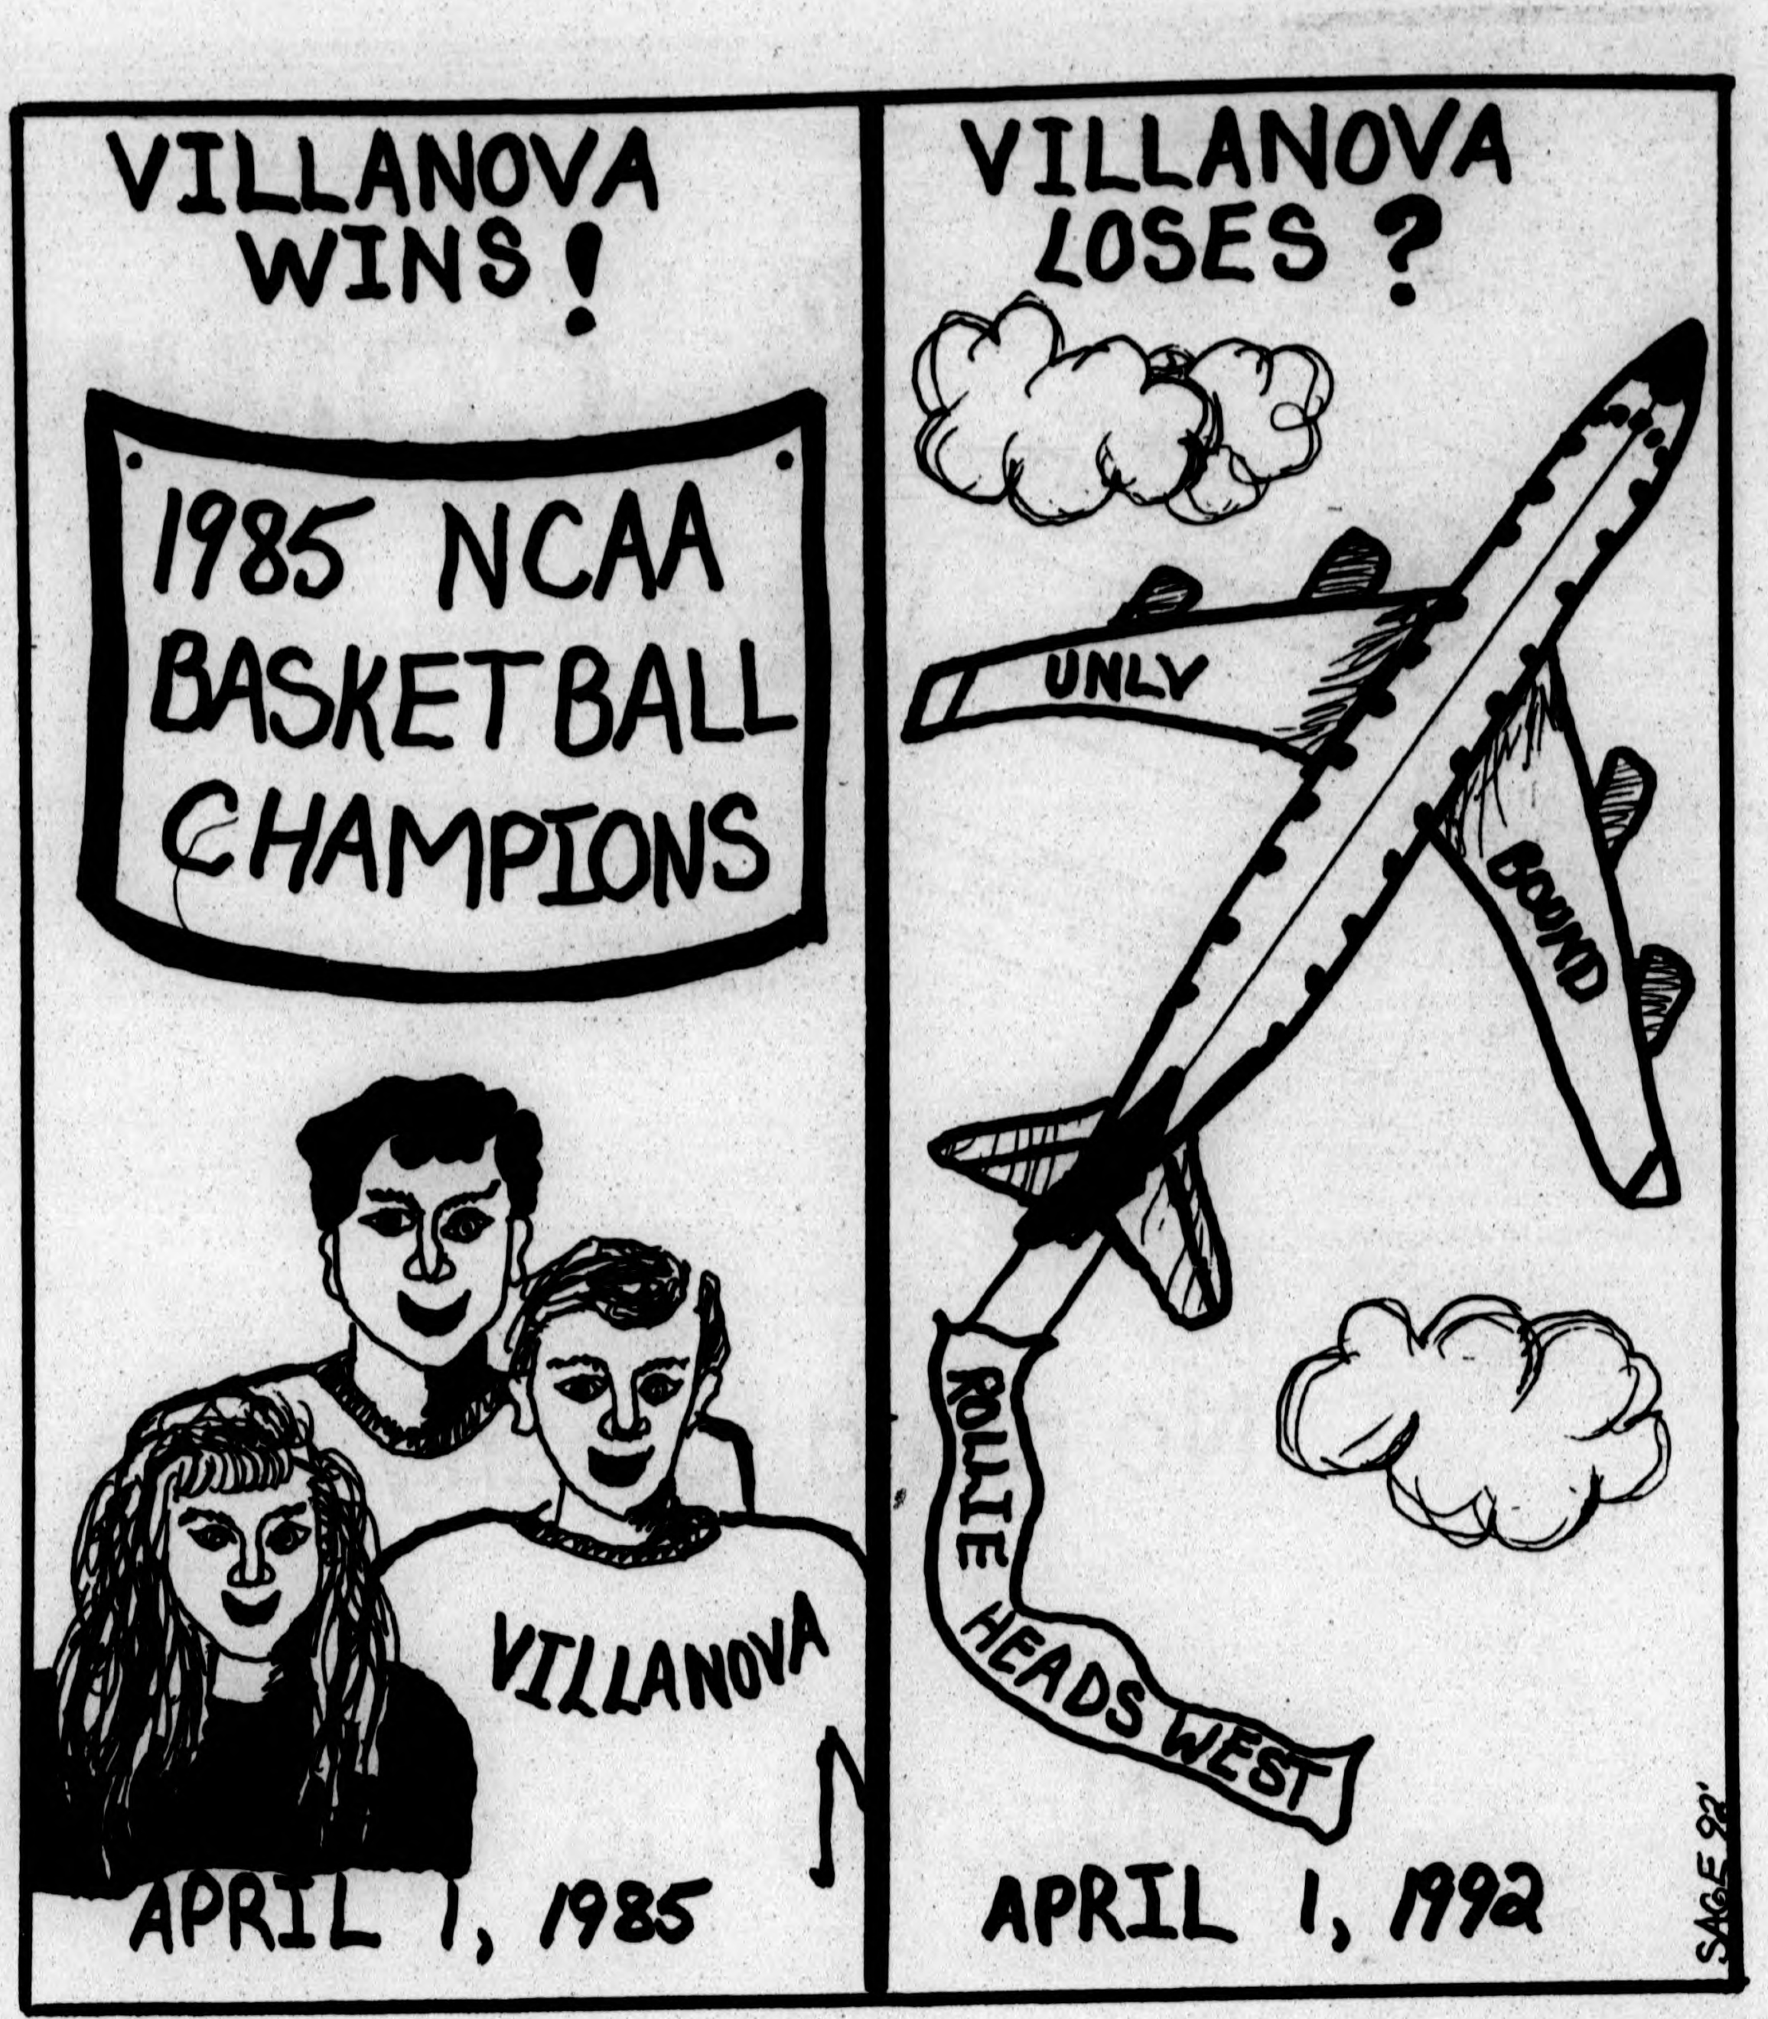
A debate is stirring over the role of Catholic doctrine and academic freedom at the University. Recently, a Villanova group, the Democratic Socialists of America (DSA), wanted to display a flyer about Sunday's March for Women's Lives in Washington, D.C. The administration held rightly that this flyer contradicts the Mission Statement of the University, and the DSA was not allowed to hang the poster. Yet, with the push for diversity and discussion on our campus, several questions about open debate must be raised.

Namely, if the University is an educational institution, should the administration allow free expression of opposing viewpoints? And if not, how can the University allow its own Mission Statement to be taught without equal time for views opposing it? Also, with the University's continual stressing of opposing views deserving equal attention, is this policy a contradition?

The principle behind our argument is not abortion, either pro-life or pro-choice. We do not challenge the validity of Catholic doctrine. Rather, we question if a university should allow an opposing view to be published with its approval.

We realize our University is founded on Catholic doctrine and that it cannot endorse opposing viewpoints. Yet, shouldn't debate about this doctrine be allowed?

The question surrounding the DSA debate does not deal with the morality of abortion. Rather, it considers the role of academic freedom at a University grounded in Catholic doctrine. Is there an answer? Can a balance be achieved?



LETTERS

Issues require clarification

To the Editor:

In response to Kristen Haaf's letter regarding Steve Freind (March 27 issue), I would like to respond to her statements.

Contrary to Haaf's claim, Rep. Stephen Freind did violate State Ethics Codes. The State Ethics Commission found Freind to be in violation of the state law (ref: file docket number 88-101-C; 90-012-C2, Aug. 23, 1991). The House Ethics Committee did not have to pursue the matter because Freind was forced to move his legislative office to comply with the findings of the Ethics Commission once he was found to be guilty.

Regarding Freind's comment about a woman not being able to become pregnant as a result of being raped, a state legislator has the obligations and duty to ensure that any information he presents to the public must be accurate. Because of his insensitivity toward women, he blatantly made a statement without checking the credibility or the origin of this statement.

Futhermore, Freind did not apologize publicly for this remark until one year later. In fact, when first asked to apologize he said Molly Yard and all the other National Organization for Women (NOW) supporters could hold their breath.

In summary, every woman should have the right to decide and stand for her own views on all issues without governmental interference.

Allen R. Polsky
Havertown, Pa.

To the Editor:

The March 27 issue of the Villanovan quoted one of my statements from the March 24 Student Government presidential debate out of context. The Villanovan printed my statement that, "There is only one Catholic doctrine" as a response to whether or not I would support condom distribution on campus.

I did make this statement, but in response to the following question posed by Dorothy Brandon, president of the Panhellenic Association: "Would you support condom distribution on campus?"

I said I would not and my reasoning is that, whether or not I believe in birth control, my personal opinion must come second to the fact that this is a Catholic institution. There are certain values and principles that it has and that we should respect.

Catholic teaching says that birth control is wrong, therefore we should respect this law. Dorothy Brandon then stated, "Your Catholic doctrine may be different from my Catholic doctrine." In response I said, "There is only one Catholic doctrine."

I was not trying to be sarcastic or flip, I was simply stating the truth. Whether or not you and I agree with the Church's stance on birth control should not outweigh Villanova's right to uphold their values as a Catholic institution.

I feel that the next Student Government president should be concerned with issues that affect all students, such as housing, parking and academic advisement.

We are adults, and if we want to use birth control, it is our business. I do not believe that we need Villanova to provide us with the means to do so. However, birth control is a private issue, and one that should remain private.

SGA speaks for you

To the Editor:

I would like to take the opportunity to let the Villanova community know that Student Government has been working diligently on its behalf in order to address and represent important student concerns and interests to the University at large.

Student Government representatives have met regularly with many faculty members and administrators with the aim of making recommendations and proposals that will have a positive impact on student life at Villanova University.

Student Government has undertaken many initiatives during the 1991-1992 academic year. Moreover, Student Government's endeavors have focused on the importance of the undergraduate student at the University. In this light, Student Government has sought to improve the communication between the administration, faculty and students in order that student concerns will be brought to the forefront of the University.

"Leadership through service" describes the manner in which student government members have represented their fellow students this year. Please be assured that Student Government had made a sincere effort to echo the collective voice of the student body of Villanova University.

Debate concerns students

To the Editor:

On March 18, the Villanova Democratic Socialists of America (DSA) posted a number of flyers advertising the March For Women's Lives scheduled to take place in Washington, D.C. April 5 throughout campus. That afternoon we were ordered to remove the flyers, although they had been stamped "Approved for Posting" by the Student Activities' Office. The reason given was that advocacy of a pro-choice position was not in keeping with Villanova University's Mission Statement.

We subsequently appealed this decision to the president of the University, Fr. Edmund J. Dobbin, and requested an explanation for this prohibition, since we were concerned that the Student Activities' Office was infringing upon our organization's ability to function effectively. Fr. Dobbin assured us that academic freedom and free speech were of special concern to him, and agreed that we should be able to work out a means by which our posters could be displayed while disassociating their message from the official position of Villanova University. One of the possible solutions suggested was a disclaimer to make it clear that the views presented by student organization flyers were not necessarily endorsed by the University. We were led to believe that we would work out the details of such a disclaimer with Dr. Richard Neville.

When we met with Dr. Neville we were unable to reach any agreement about a disclaimer, so we arranged to meet again with Fr. Dobbin to discuss the larger issues. Much to our dismay, Fr. Dobbin, in collaboration with Dr. Neville, radically altered his previous position. He stated that no flyers advocating a pro-choice position would be allowed to be posted, as they "flew in the face of sensitivity" and were in violation of current policy.

We feel that we are victims of outright censorship and that our academic freedom has been seriously infringed upon. While Fr. Dobbin gives lip-service to the sanctity of academic freedom, his actions clearly mitigate against an open intellectual debate, as only positions in agreement with the University's may be endorsed by any student group. Perhaps equally as alarming is the manner in which Fr. Dobbin waffled on this issue, claiming one position at the first meeting and another at the second.

Such blatant censorship and suppression of a viewpoint dissenting from the University's "official" position are causes for real alarm. Given the recent ostensible concern with student apathy, the administration's actions restricting the activity of a student group are especially puzzling, if not downright ironic. Is apathy preferable to the advocacy of a viewpint that is in opposition to the University's stance?

It is imperative that a remedy to the censorship currently being practiced by the administration be found; Villanova is setting a dangerous precedent with highly negative implications for the future.

To the Editor:

Quite often, great debators are known for respecting the viewpoints of the opposition, even if they do not agree with them. However, I find it virtually impossible to respect the viewpoint of the pro-abortion advocates in the "Pro-life speaks — Pro-choice speaks" commentary of March 20.

If the well-polished pro-abortion argument sways only one desperate woman to have an abortion, then an innocent child will die a violent death, one that must be very painful for an unborn baby whose nervous system is already in development.

A substance can be called fertilizer, it can be called manure or it can be called a mess. But I need not state in this letter what the substance really is. In the same sense, an abortion can be called a personal choice, a woman's right, reproductive freedom and the like. But these euphemisms tip-toe around the real issue — the death sentence of millions of unborn babies. "Reproductive freedom" is a woman's decision whether a child will be born or killed. It is something done by a physician who has taken an oath to preserve life.

I do not for a moment mean to be unsympathetic to the plight of a woman faced with an unwanted pregnancy. But people must realize, morality is not a matter of opinion. Back-alley abortions must be horrible to the mother and, of course, the slaughtered unborn baby, but people cannot solve the problem by making it legal. Put mildly, this is a slap in the face to anyone with a conscience.

For this reason, respecting the opinions of abortion advocates on campus is not as important as respecting the life of an unborn baby whose mother might be persuaded by such opinions. Before we were born, we were unborn — all of us.

Congratulations to Kristen Haaf, who has been unyielding in her efforts to preserve the lives of the unborn children in danger of death.

Dobbin issues statement regarding debate

Villanova has been committed to the moral tradition and teaching of the Catholic Church since the University's founding by the Augustinian Order almost 150 years ago. As a Catholic institution, Villanova embraces the Church's teaching regarding the moral tragedy that is abortion. Villanova affirms its religious, institutional commitment to the principle that all directly intended abortion is morally wrong. To be faithful to this teaching and to its own Catholic identity and mission, the University cannot provide institutional support for a message or activity which promotes or advocates abortion. This position preserves the University's own institutional rights to free expression and free exercise of religion.

At the same time, Villanova, as a university, endorses unfettered discussion and the exchange of ideas in the search for truth and knowledge. The University's devotion to free inquiry is wholly compatible with its Catholic identity. As stated in the Apostolic Constitution on Catholic Universities issued by Pope John Paul II on September 25, 1990, "With every other University it (the Catholic University) shares that gaudium de veritate, so precious to Saint Augustine, which is that joy of searching for, discovering and communicating truth in every field of knowledge." In that context, Villanova encourages debate and examination of all aspects of the important moral and social issues of our time, including abortion.

Villanova is open to the many voices of its community in fashioning a means whereby full and frank discussion of controversial moral and social issues is fostered without compromising the institution's obligation to bear witness to the Church's moral teaching. This task will not be simple. It requires time, reflection and the climate of a caring community tolerant of one another's sincerely held beliefs. The participation of the whole community is essential in doing the hard work necessary to preserve the principles of openness to ideas and fidelity to religious beliefs, both being central to Villanova's identity.

COMMENTARY

U.S. leaders should understand competitor

By MATTHEW J. BRENNAN

Figure skaters Kristi Yamaguchi of the United States and Midori Ito of Japan could easily be mistaken for teammates at first glance, but cultural identity extends far beyond physical appearances as was evident during the Olympics in Albertville, France. A deceiving cultural contrast exists between Yamaguchi and Ito that parallels a dilemma inhibiting corporate and foreign relations in our growing international world: misunderstanding your competitors culture and history.

When Yamaguchi stumbled during her short program and crushed our initial hopes for gold, she explained what had happened with optimism for the next evening's performance. Yamaguchi, a Japanese-American version of the girl next door, toted a self-reliant demeanor common among Americans and similar to the post-war attitude that fueled the rise of the most productive nation on earth and eventually captured the gold.

During the post-World War II period Americans learned that the mass-production success of the war, achieved through teamwork, could be transferred toward a common pursuit of the American Dream. Regrettably, emphasis on teamwork has been slowly replaced by an overbearing socio-economic individualism that has tainted our nation's economic goals. The American Dream has evolved from that first automobile and home to the pursuit of millions (especially for American corporate executives), but where are our priorities, when we can not adequately educate our own citizens?

Japan's Ito formally apologized to her country for falling short of her nation's expectations during the Olympic competition. Reflecting Japan's disciplined values based on sacrifice and balanced teamwork, Ito was not just pursuing her individual goals but more importantly her country's goal. Ironically, Japan's teamwork philosophy, stressed throughout its school systems, developed in part from an admiration of America's early 20th Century and post-World War II rise to world-economic domination. It is time for America to relearn how she became a world economic power.

But imagine mastering a role model's strategies, witnessing the indolent fall of that role model and then being blamed by the role model for later exceeding its success. Japan experienced this after the recent Trade Summit with the United States. Among other things, we offended the Japanese during the Summit by making demands that the Japanese could never decide upon in one week. Our relationship with Japan may not be easily repaired.

Marshall C. Hewitt, a free-lance writer from New Hampshire who lived in Japan and now trains executives for business in Japan, explained the relation gaps in an article for the Granite State News, "They don't understand why a nation capable of the Manhattan project now wastes its attention on sex scandals instead of putting its immense energy into solving the budget deficit, overhauling an inadequate education system, providing health care for all, building public transportation, making superior products once again." America has misplaced its community work ethic and replaced it with indulgent individualism that overlooks protocol.

The sad reality is that the United States has attempted nothing to nurture a common ground between the United States and Japan, arguably the most important relationship facing the future of the United States. The Japanese government continues its efforts as it actively recruits Americans to teach English required in its school systems.

What appears to be absolute quite often is not. We need to understand Ito and Yamaguchi's cultural contrast to compete effectively in international markets, recognizing two disparate nations polarized by the aftermath of World War II is essential.

After learning a costly lesson in WWII at Nagasaki and Hiroshima, the Japanese vowed to avoid the mistakes of the past. Their new philosophy involves coexistence between nations, especially the United States, which most Japanese admired before the recent trade circus orchestrated by Ringmaster George Herbert Walker Bush.

U.S./Japanese trade relations extend far beyond the alleged exploitation of U.S. markets by Japan. The U.S. has exploited markets for years throughout the world to achieve its own ends, namely to spark the economy at home during our recurrent recessions. Japanese survival over the years has depended on the acceptance and adaptation to such a changing world. Labeled a copycat by U.S. corporate leaders, Japan's ability to acclimate is the exact reason it commands markets today.

The proactive-business sense practiced by the Japanese has whipped the lackadaisical retroactive business style acquired by U.S. corporate executives over the years.

Before the United States regains its efficiency and competitiveness, it first must understand how the competition thinks. Sacrifice will most definitely be required.

Matthew J. Brennan is a senior English major.

Imagine mastering a role-model's strategies, witnessing the indolent fall of that role model and then being blamed for exceeding its successes.

"Too many choices" paralyze American citizens

By ELLEN GOODMAN

I arrive at the supermarket for my weekly round of speed shopping. It is late afternoon and I am dressed for success in this sporting event. I wear low heels and carry a list, a checkbook and an attitude.

But today I will fall way off my best time. The fast track, Aisle 6, that runs down the length of cereal options from pure bran to sugar-coated alphabet letters has become an obstacle course.

A vanload of elderly women, who bear the unmistakable accents of their Russian homeland, have come to market and are now at a full stop in front of me. One cluster is studying each box, another is holding a seminar on comparative cereals.

These women are not tourists, but immigrants still new enough to be fascinated by the choices offered to them. This is what identifies them even more than their language: a visible pleasure in such plenty.

For my own part, exchanging greetings in my pigeon Russian, weeding my way past their carts, I feel suddenly thoroughly American. It occurs to me that I do not anymore regard the choices in this consumer hall of fame as emblems of my freedom but as demands on my time and attention. I have become less interested in widening my options than in narrowing them.

Have I become the manufacturer's worst nightmare? I check the list in my pocket. I have bought the same toothpaste for fifteen years, the same shampoo for seven, the same cereal for five. I buy shaving cream indiscriminately, and cannot for the life of me make a distinction between or among toilet tissues. I doubt that a new, improved product is truly new or improved.

I doubt that this is my own middle-aged hardening of the consumer arteries. Rather, like many Americans, I am reacting to a choice overload.

At some point, the exploding number of decisions to be made between Brand X and Y and Z, the options in ice cream and cable channels, squeezes too much time from the day.

To work this aisle properly, after all, any good, informed self-respecting consumer must know about vitamins and minerals, about the importance of fiber and the dangers of fat. She should read in detail the nutritional information on the box and the price information on the shelf.

The same holds true in picking milk for the cereal. Skim? One percent? Two percent? Homogenized? Quart? Half-gallon? Such attention is demanded by a thousand products a shopping day.

I have a friend who is getting ready to prepare to commence to buy a new car. Over the past few months, he has bought an array of magazines and studied automotive reports as if he faced a qualifying exam in consumer smarts: To the loser goes the lemon.

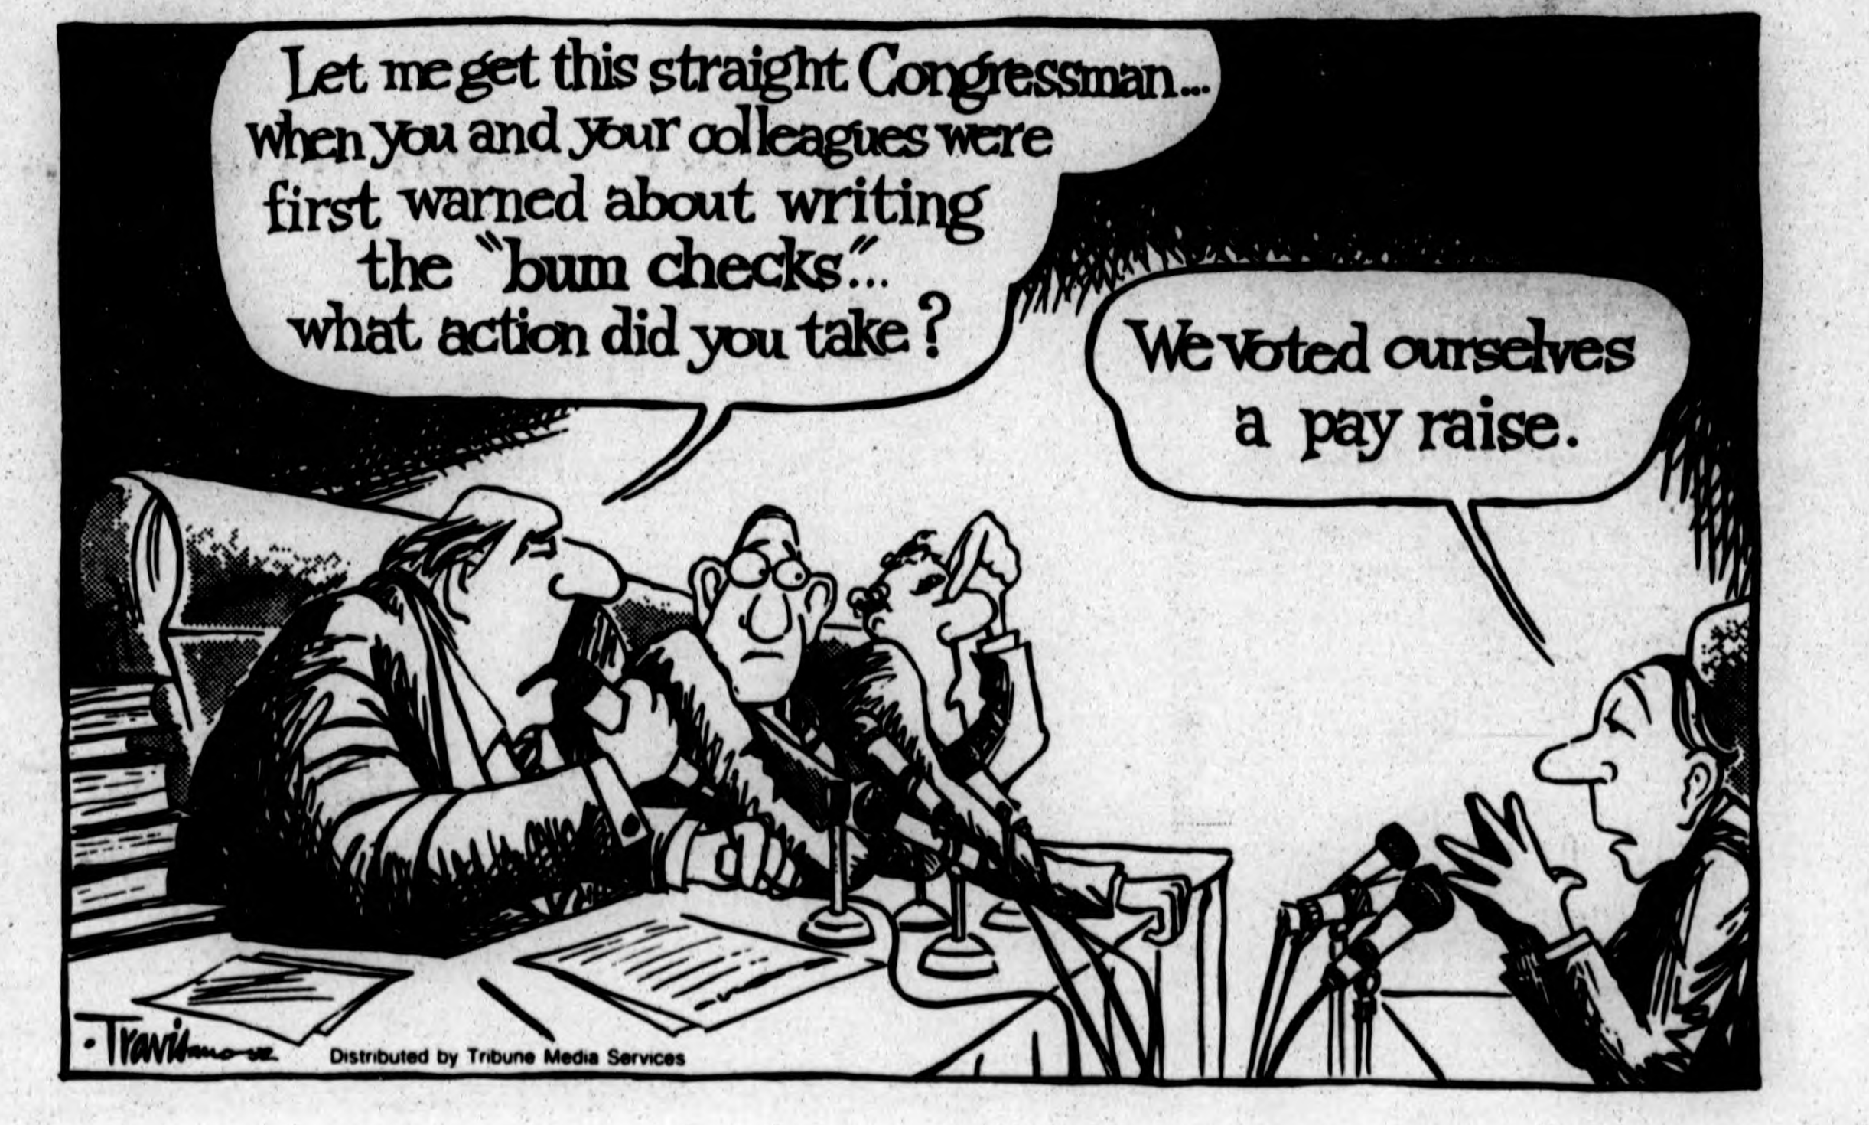
But he is paralyzed by the number of models and options. Whatever happened, he asks wryly, to the Model T? Finally he has decided: He will ask his brother.

In the homeland of my supermarket companions, an astounding amount of human energy goes into the search for the simplest things. Russians work an elaborate network in pursuit of a pair of boots or a single videotape. Here, the same astounding amount of human energy can go into choosing the right thing. We work an entire mall of boots and scan a thousand videos before choosing one. Comedy or Romance? Schwarzenegger or Streisand? PG or R?

But the consumer world still expands, and so must our defenses. Against too many choices that make too little difference. Against the time that must be paid for a life of informed consuming. Against the need to decide. And decide.

Would my car-buying friend use the hours he spent comparing fuel injection systems to compare national health plans? Maybe not. Will the moments I save studying cereals be devoted to studying the greenhouse effect on grain? Maybe not. But every ounce lifted from choice overload must free up some room for the mind to wander down other aisles.

Today, stuck in the gridlock of Aisle 6, it occurs to me that as my shopping companions become citizens, their love affair with the free market will turn into a desire to be freer of the market. How odd that this American cornucopia has become a landscape of too many choices.



Let me get this straight Congressman... when you and your colleagues were first warned about writing the "bum checks"... what action did you take?
We voted ourselves a pay raise.

COMMENTARY

Student says, "Don't wake me when I'm driving."

By PETER SHAUGER

As my father was driving me back to school after a very restful spring break, I noticed an occasional yawn escape from his lips. I knew he was tired because I had to interrupt his after dinner nap so he could drive to Villnova and back home in time for beddy-bye. Still when he managed to stay awake for the duration of the trip, I was overwhelmed with pride (not to be confused with "Wildcat Pride"). When he made it home, I am sure he reassumed his napping position while my mom tucked him in with a cozy newspaper blanket.

Though his eyes did remain open, it would not have been unusual for the average motorist to occasionally shut them. Even before the invention of the automobile, carriage drivers used to complain of falling asleep at the reigns.

As common as it is, people still look down their noses at others who cannot maintain a state of consciousness while operating a motor vehicle. This is a serious issue (not to be confused with a student government issue — like maybe we could use the ice from the ice-makers at the new on-campus bar).

But where wise men fear to tread, the government takes charge. They are proposing a law that will allow pilots to take naps on long-term flights.

But seriously folks, my father is one of millions of Americans who has a condition called "eyelid vision." It is similar to night vision, only he sees better when his eyes are closed. The problem is that he is ashamed of his affliction and afraid to give in to it because of insensitive laws and uneducated fellow drivers.

So on drives a man, a sleep junky if you will, cleverly but sadly hiding that he is snooze-prone, just so he can be in fashion with the rest of the road snobs who have their eyes open.

However, with most things in life, when people are told that they cannot do something, they go out and do it for that reason. And one of these days my father, along with the rest of the nation with this hereditary disease (which skips every other generation and is carried inside the female's genes) just-might give into their weakness in spite of their ignorant peers.

Already we have seen isolated incidences occurring all across the country. It is rumored that eyelid vision was the real reason for the Valdez oil spill, and that alchohol was used as a cover up. Even here on the Villanova compost, I mean campus, the driver of the security van that was be-mudded on south campus is also suspected of having the disease (which has a hybernation as well as incubation period of at least 16 years before it awakens in the body). However, both men have claimed this not to be the case. Remember, the first stage is always denial.

But where wise men fear to tread, the government takes charge. They are proposing a law that will allow pilots to take naps on long-term flights. If there is one thing that would make me feel safe while crossing the Atlantic (which is pretty deep) would be to know that my captain is comfortably resting in the cockpit, instead of jerking the plane around every time his neck gave way to the hypnotic powers of "eyelid vision."

Relax. I know there would always be at least one conscious pilot flying the plane. What I should have said to be politically correct (but morally comatose) — if there is one thing that would make me feel safe while crossing the Atlantic (which has not gotten any shallower since the previous paragraph, which is more than I can say for myself) would be to know that the pilot has just awakened from his nap and is very groggy, so don't do anything to piss him off.

Pilots as well as car drivers will tell you there is no danger in sleep-driving. The real danger arises when someone or something wakes them up.

I know when I'm sleepy and driving, nothing is more horrifying and annoying than when the person who calls himself "Shotgun" lives up to the name by aiming at my ear and blurting the phrase "LOOK OUT!"

The government is on the right track with their law, though. They just need to police more avenues of the situation.

For instance, they need to get hat sizes for the people with the disease and issue a crash helmet to each of them. Also, they need to place a corking order on the people with the deadly disease, "shotgunorrhea." The Exxon investigation should not have been about the skipper, but in search of the Gilligan who yelled "Look out!" But, if they won't set up any of these safeguards, they should at least build an indoor track somewhere so my father and his eyelid therapy group can drive around without worrying about shotgunners or mean and ugly mud puddles on South Campus that can really ruin a good night's sleep.

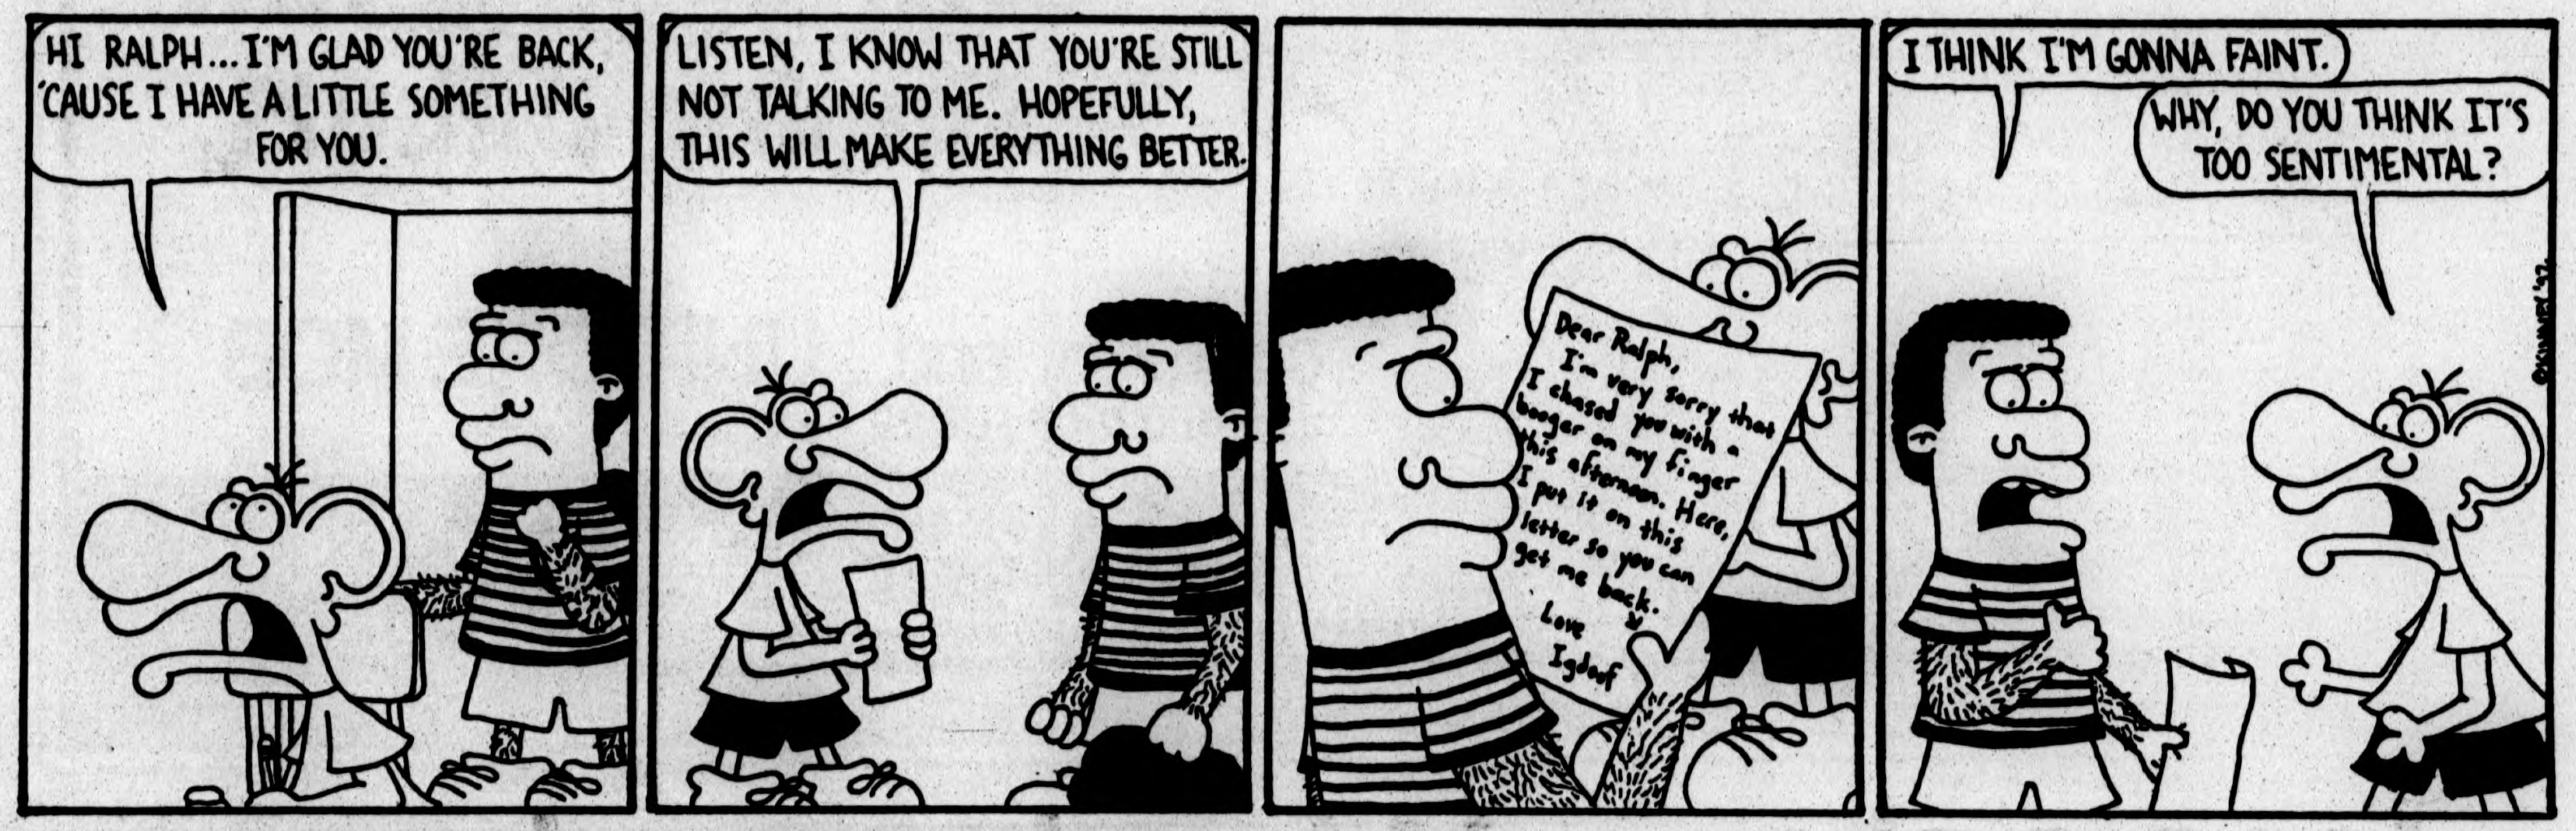
WELL... I'M DONE LECTURING FOR TODAY... YOU GUYS CAN GO EARLY.
WHY ARE YOU STILL HERE? DO YOU HAVE A QUESTION?
NO, I JUST WANT TO LEARN MORE, AND THERE'S STILL 23 MINUTES OF CLASS LEFT.
WELL, YOU CAN SIT HERE AS LONG AS YOU WANT... BUT I'M OUT OF HERE.
BUT SECTION 43F OF THE STUDENT HANDBOOK SAYS, "STUDENTS HAVE THE RIGHT TO BE INSTRUCTED FOR THE FULL CLASS PERIOD, AS SPECIFIED BY THE SCHEDULE OF CLASSES." SO LECTURE AWAY!
LISTEN, KID... I HAVE TO PICK MY GIRLFRIEND UP AT THE AIRPORT IN 45 MINUTES. WHAT'S YOUR PRICE?
HOW ABOUT AN "A" ON THE MIDTERM?
YOU'VE GOT A DEAL.
PLUS YOU CALL ME "SIR" IN FRONT OF THE OTHER KIDS.
DON'T PUSH IT.

. . . and more Igdoof



HI RALPH... I'M GLAD YOU'RE BACK, 'CAUSE I HAVE A LITTLE SOMETHING FOR YOU.
LISTEN, I KNOW THAT YOU'RE STILL NOT TALKING TO ME. HOPEFULLY, THIS WILL MAKE EVERYTHING BETTER.
Dear Ralph, I'm very sorry that I chased you with a booger on my finger this afternoon. Here, I put it on this letter so you can get me back. Love Igdoof
I THINK I'M GONNA FAINT.
WHY, DO YOU THINK IT'S TOO SENTIMENTAL?

Earth Day raises awareness

By VALERIE JONES
Staff Reporter

As the sounds of a reggae band filtered through the cold, cloudy skies across campus March 28, groups of students came out and joined the crowd on Mendel field to see what all the fuss was about.

The band was To the Limit. The fuss was, and still is, our earth.

Earth Day 1992, sponsored by the Villanova Environmental Group (VEG) and the Student Programming Council (SPC) was a festival of food, music, workshops, a tie-dye booth and information booths.

"Earth Day is something everyone is invited to," said VEG President Megan O'Donnell.

Whether they came for the food, the music or out of environmental concern, about 300 participants and 40 volunteers took part in this year's Earth Day, the first one held at Villanova in two years. A profit of $500 was made and "I think everyone that was there had a great time," said O'Donnell.

The event was mainly organized by VEG, while money and some volunteers came from SPC and the Center for Peace and Justice Education.

Plans for a Villanova Earth Day were begun in December by VEG, in order "to let people know that there is a recycling effort on our campus and that there are people interested in environmental concerns, but we need more people to get involved," said O'Donnell. "Also, [we want] to have something going on for everyone."

Opinions on the effects of Earth Day were as varied as the reasons for coming. One spectator, Meghan Klipfel, felt Earth Day was "only for the people who care in the first place." Another, Dan Griffith, thought the event "definitely heightened awareness ... Even though a lot of people didn't know about Earth Day, many took the initiative to come out. It's a start."

Opinions on the turnout varied. Political science professor Dr. Lowell Gustafson said he "didn't think we would have as many involved." But another crowd member, Eskindel Taddese, said the idea "was a good thing to do to get people aware. Besides that, I like reggae, but I wish more people would have come."

The workshops included: Nuclear France with language professor, Dr. Rene Mongeau; Environmental Racism with O'Donell and Global Environmental Problems and the upcoming Earth Summit covered by political science professor, Dr. Colleen Sullivan and Gustafson.

"I don't take a pessimistic attitude because attitudes in the last five years have already changed, making the environment a more mainstream issue," said Gustafson of the global mindset.

Classes target Indian culture

By SUSAN BURNS
Staff Reporter

In elementary school, we learned that Christopher Columbus christened a new continent — America. Now, centuries later, we have the opportunity to see the other side of the discovery and to witness the story of the Native Americans.

1992 is the 500th anniversary of the first Americans discovering Columbus," said Dr. Barbara Wall, O.P., director of the Center for Peace and Justice Education.

To celebrate this quincentennial, three new courses have been added to the curriculum for next fall. Two one-credit workshop courses, "American Indian Thought and Culture," and "American Indian Music and Literature," and a three-credit course, "American Indian Thought and Culture: Justice Seeks a Hearing," will be offered.

"We felt it was important to focus on the contributions of American Indians over the last 500 years and on what we might learn from their culture, life and spirituality for the next 500 years," said Wall.

The "Thought and Culture" workshop is a two-day conference in October with speakers lecturing on various issues affecting present-day Indians, concerning such areas as women's issues, rights and freedom and art and music. Students are expected to read the literature by the speakers prior to the weekend and then to write a paper focused on one topic discussed at the conference.

Wall predicts that a total of 60 to 70 students, including Chestnut Hill and Rosemont College students, will participate in this conference.

The second course requires independent reading and five three-hour meetings where speakers will lecture on the music, literature and education philosophies of the American Indian.

> Dr. Barbara Wall, O.P.

The three-credit course will involve lectures, films and guest speakers concerning the history, philosophy, religion, literature and art of the Hopi, Sioux, Navajo and Iroquoi Native Americans.

Junior honors, history and sociology major Monica McDermott, who will take the conference workshop course in the fall, stressed the importance of such courses. "We should discover the way in which the Indians kept the elements of their past and culture alive, and realize the knowledge we can learn from them," she said.

"The Native Americans have been one of the most oppressed groups and have received the least attention. It's important to see what our country has done to them," said McDermott, whose interest in the plight of the Indians was sparked after reading Matthiessen's "In the Spirit of Crazy Horse."

"We want to offer courses that cover the main problems of society, and the treatment of Indians is a grave issue," said Wall, who spent the past year doing research in order to prepare for the classes.

She explained that because the unemployment rate on most of the 300 or so Indian reservations in the continental United States is 55 to 80 percent, the infant mortality rate is the highest in the country and the average annual income is extremely low. "The Indians are some of the most marginated and poorest peoples."

It is thus very important that students learn about the Native American way of life, according to Wall. "We must work with the American Indians to help them build a sense of respect for their culture and tradition and to join in a partnership with them as a community for the good of all. We have to provide an opportunity for them to celebrate what they have done."

To register for these courses, students should seek information from the registrar's office as soon as possible.

"People who are genuinely interested and concerned with diversity and difference and who are intellectually curious and appreciative of the cultures of other people will participate in our courses," Wall said.

Summer camp will help special kids

By PEGGY AGOLINO
Assistant Features Editor

Summer break is rapidly approaching and, as most of us frantically search for the perfect job or internship, we may reflect on those "good old days" when we went to summer camp and had our lives planned for us. Through this invaluable experience we met new friends and achieved our first taste of independence. There are many children who, without the help of the Ronald McDonald House, would never have the chance to share in that experience.

For the past eight years children between the ages of 8 and 18 who have cancer and have undergone or are currently undergoing treatment can do something they would normally not be allowed to do — go to camp. This year, 130 campers will travel to the Pocono Mountains from August 22-29.

According to Robyn Sole, director of Operations for a Ronald McDonald House in Philadelphia, "It is good for the campers to be with other kids with whom they share a common bond. They are all at various stages of their treatment, and children who are undergoing treatment get hope from veterans of treatment."

The camp is located on a waterfront area where horseback riding, tennis, hiking and arts and crafts are just some of the activities offered. The older members of the group go on an overnight excursion during the week as well.

The campers are divided into groups according to their age for most of the daytime activities, but at night everyone gets together to participate in camp events. All campers are able to attend the summer camp free of charge, making the experience available to everyone.

> "Something special happens there that I can't describe."
> Karen Scott

The camp needs volunteers to keep things running. Sixty volunteers are part of a staff including experienced activities counselors, nurses, social workers and pediatric oncologists. The volunteer staff varies in age and occupation, and the only requirements are being at least 20 years old, in good health and "sensitive to the needs and concerns of children." Some volunteers return every year and others are newcomers to the camp.

Villanova Emergency Medical Service acquires van

A new V.E.M.S. van helps members serve more efficiently.

Special to the Villanovan

As many of Villanova's organizations and volunteer groups realize, new equipment needed to improve their service to the community is in great demand and often hard to find. But through hard work and community cooperation, the Villanova Emergency Medical Service (V.E.M.S.) has recently acquired a vehicle that will increase its capacity to serve the University.

While the van may look like an ambulance, its use by V.E.M.S. will be that of a vehicle to transport its personnel and equipment to calls on campus. The vehicle will not be used to transport V.E.M.S. patients. This practice is forbidden by the limits of the organization's liability policy.

The vehicle may also appear to be brand new, but it is in fact a 1981 Ford van ambulance. It was acquired by V.E.M.S. with the cooperation of a local hospital.

> With the addition of a vehicle to their program, their response time will be dramatically shortened.

When first obtained by V.E.M.S. the van needed a great deal of work including body work, painting, polishing and mechanical improvements. These projects were jointly funded by the Office of the Dean of Students and the Department of Public Safety. The majority of this work was accomplished by V.E.M.S. members who donated their labor and expertise to the project.

Currently, members of V.E.M.S. respond to campus emergencies on foot. With the addition of a vehicle to their program, their response time will be dramatically shortened.

V.E.M.S. members will also be able to utilize a greater quantity and variety of specialized medical equipment which will be carried on the vehicle. The vehicle will also be used as a medical command center for major special events on campus such as Homecoming and the Special Olympics.

Cribben retires as professor

Special to the Villanovan

After 36 years of teaching at Villanova, Sister Mary Margaret Cribben, R.S.M., associate professor of library science, has retired.

In 1956, Cribben began teaching summer sessions and Saturday classes at Hallahan High School in Philadelphia, during which time Villanova held classes there as a service to those who lived nearby. She joined the University's library science department in 1963 and was later tenured and promoted to associate professor.

Altogether, Cribben has taught 30 courses at Villanova, investing the personal time and effort to initiate five of them. She authored the program that enabled Villanova to certify school librarians through the State Department of Education in Harrisburg. Cribben also served on numerous departmental committees and chaired various workshops involved in library sciences.

A regular contributor to Catholic Library World, Cribben is a member of the American Library Association, the Catholic Library Association and the Pennsylvania Library Association. She is also a charter member of the Library Public Relations Association.

Cribben, a Springfield, Pa., resident, has served as a library consultant to schools in several states and was the national chairperson of public relations for the Catholic Library Association. She is a former president and board member of the Philadelphia Booksellers Association.

Cribben received a bachelor's degree in education and two master's degrees, in educational administration and religious studies from Villanova, and a master's degree in library science from Drexel University, where she also served as an adjunct professor.

A staunch supporter of Villanova athletics, Cribben has been voted into the Villanova Hall of Fame by the Varsity Club and was presented with its Jake Nevin Award for Service Recognition. In her honor, the women's athletic department annually presents the Sister Mary Margaret Cribben Inspiration Award to a female athlete who inspires the team just as Cribben has inspired generations.

Cribben still works with the University, but in a capacity different from her accomplishments in library science. She is working with Meg Warner, executive director of the Wildcat Club, known officially as the Villanova Educational Foundation Corporation. Cribben now works in Galberry Hall, helping out with Admissions phone-a-thons, letters to parents of new students and Auction '92, which will take place on April 10 at the Radnor Valley Country Club.

Villanovans study abroad

By GRETCHEN FISHER
Assistant Features Editor

Most students look to the summer months with mixed emotions. Classes are over for four months, yet so is the non-stop activity of college that we always complain about but sometimes miss when it is gone. However, this will not be a problem for those students studying abroad this summer, who will enjoy both the social and academic aspects of college life while exploring another country and relaxing during the summer months.

Sponsored by the Office of International Studies in cooperation with the department of modern languages, the foreign studies summer programs consist of an intensive study of the country's language combined with an acclimation into the country's society and culture.

The cities scheduled to be visited this summer are Cadiz, Spain; Galway, Ireland; Jerusalem and Ramallah, Israel; Dijon and Paris, France; Siena, Italy; Concepcion, Chile; Freiburg, Germany and Urbino, Italy.

The summer programs range in length from four to seven weeks, and each costs $2,950. The fee for some programs does not include transportation and meals. Most programs consist of two courses, equivalent to six Villanova credits.

Students live in a variety of residences, including dorms, hotels and private homes. A 2.5 GPA and University-student status are required for participation in all of the programs. Cadiz, Dijon and Freiburg require two semesters of the language at the college level.

The Cadiz program, directed by Dr. Mercedes Julia, begins with a tour of Madrid and the surrounding area, including Toledo, Avila and Segovia. The following weeks are spent studying the language and culture of Spain in the city of Cadiz on the Atlantic coast.

Students journeying to Galway will be introduced to Ireland's history, literature, society, archaeology and dramatic arts during two weeks in Dublin, Galway and the Aran Islands. This will be followed by five weeks of courses at the University College Galway Summer School. The students will travel with Dr. Sterling Delano to Ireland, where they will meet up with Dr. James Murphy, who is on sabbatical there.

Students interested in Arabic and Islamic studies will travel to the Old City of Jerusalem for an eight-day tour and then continue with a six-week program at the Sixth Birzeit University International Summer School in Ramallah, a Christian-Palestinian town of 25,000 people, 12 miles north of Jerusalem.

The six-week French program, directed by Dr. Beatrice Waggaman, begins with a four-week course of study at the Universite de Bourgogne in Dijon, the medieval capital of the province of Burgundy. The following two

Camp for children with cancer

Karen Scott works in the Human Resources Department at the Children's Hospital of Philadelphia and has been a counselor for the past three years. She explained that she felt apprehensive the first year she went, but she quickly discovered that these campers were normal children "with the same desires and goals as every child. It's a great experience, it changed my life. Something special happens there that I can't describe."

Scott became close with the other counselors and staff, stating that, "everyone is there for the same reason."

The benefits of this experience seemed to affect several aspects of her life. "This helped me with my job because I now know better what kids in this situation go through. Doing this helps me to keep my life in perspective," said Scott.

The sign-up process consists of filling out an application and an interview. Applications are being accepted throughout April. Anyone interested in receiving an application should call (215) 387-8406 to have one mailed to them. For more information on the camp see Barbara Haenn in the Campus Ministry Office.

This camp is a special and unique experience for both the campers and counselors. According to Scott, "You almost feel guilty because you get so much out of the experience and you hope the campers get as much out of it as you do."

Top 10

If April Fool's Day passed you by, the practical jokers in Dougherty 201 suggest these Top 10 pranks to make belated fools of your friends.

10. Walk up to a really stiff Villanovan (not a far walk) and say, "Your shoe is untied."
9. Tell "Ed, The Pizza Guy" that there is a "Mike, The Pizza Guy" also selling pizzas for six bucks.
8. Use a joy buzzer during the Sign of Peace in church.
7. Put chalk in all the erasers you can find.
6. Approach someone and pretend you're hoarse. When they ask you if you have a frog in your throat, actually spit one out at them.
5. Sabotage the left rear leg of your friend's chair in the cafeteria.
4. Replace the chalice in Church with a dribble chalice.
3. Tell someone Villanova is diverse.
2. Tell everyone that you got your fake I.D. so you could vote twice in the Villanova elections.

And the No. 1 joke recommended to reclaim the spirit of April Fool's Day is:

1. Let Rollie know that all the male cheerleaders at UNLV have ponytails.

QUIZ
Peace and Justice

1. Another critical Right to Live/Right to Die question made headlines in the news this past week. The issue related to the life of an infant. What was the infant's name?

2. During this year's Academy Awards, what issue dominated most of the personal remarks and was marked by the wearing of red ribbons by most of the celebrities present?

3. Name three countries, aside from the United States, that are also in the midst of elections or political campaigns.

4. March Madness is caused by what event in the sports world every year?

"If you keep saying something, over time it catches up and you change attitudes. The first act is to see yourself as a participant," said Gustafson.

Sullivan and Gustafson discussed the environment as an emerging political issue, and the implications of the upcoming Earth Summit in Brazil. Presently President Bush has not made a decision regarding his attendance among approximately 60 world leaders at the summit.

"The countries have to learn to work together step-by-step. In the political battle, the real issue often gets lost. The non-governmental groups have played a big part. We all have a common interest in the air and water, and we have a right as human beings to take a stand," said Sullivan.

Villanova's Earth Day effort "was fun, but hopefully everyone will also learn something, and now that they've learned something, take action, even if it is only on a personal level," said Griffith.

weeks will be spent studying and living in the city of Paris.

Students taking part in the four-week program in Siena, directed by Dr. George Radan, will be introduced to Italy's history, art, literature and Renaissance society through trips to various cities, including Venice, Florence and Rome. During their stay, students will live in a family-style hotel in Siena.

The six-week Concepcion program, directed by Carlos Trujillo, will introduce students to Chilean and South American cultures, languages and societies. Students will also tour Santiago, Valparaiso and Vina del Mar and will study in Concepcion.

Students studying in Germany this summer will take part in six weeks of instruction and excursions in the area surrounding Freiburg and also a weekend in Berlin. Students may use the last five days of the trip for independent travel. The program will consist of instruction by the program's director, Dr. Franz Birgel, in conjunction with the University of Freiburg.

Students interested in Italian language and culture can also participate in the Urbino program. Directed by Dr. Gaetano Pastore, the program will begin with a two-day stay in Rome, followed by a five-week course of study at the Universita degli Studi di Urbino in the town of Urbino, located in the Apennines near San Marino in central Italy.

A student who studies overseas for the summer is a smart student," said Dr. Thomas Ricks of the Office of International Studies. "Summer programs get you ahead." Students interested in the summer programs should contact the program directors or Ricks in the Office of International Studies, Tolentine Room 208.

LSAT Premium Program:
The Best Way To Prepare For The LSAT

If you're one of the nation's 95,000 applicants determined to get into an accredited law school, you know the competition is tough. Since there are only 44,000 openings, a high score on the LSAT is crucial.

That's why Ronkin created the LSAT Premium Program which offers a choice of three varied levels of assistance.

• LSAT Preparation Course
Using the most recently updated curriculum, our 40-hour course stresses critical thinking, argument analysis and logical reasoning. Besides classroom time, our comprehensive LSAT course provides live tutorials, three diagnostic exams, three practice exams, a computer-based tutorial program, homework materials that include released LSATs, and a toll-free Dial-A-Teacher line. Two-day clinics, which are included in Ronkin's LSAT Gold and Platinum Packages, are also available for an additional fee.

• LSAT Gold Package
In addition to the 40-hour LSAT course, Ronkin's LSAT Gold Package includes our two-day LSAT Intensive-Study Clinics offered immediately prior to LSAT examination dates. These clinics concentrate on Logical Reasoning and Logic Games. The Gold Package also includes our Law School Success Program which covers law school exam preparation, legal writing, legal research, and career planning.

• LSAT Platinum Package
This plan provides everything you'll need to get into law school and to be a success. Enroll and you'll receive our LSAT Preparation Course, LSAT Intensive-Study Clinics, Law School Success Program, plus our Law School Selection and Application Assistance Programs.

The Campus Index in the March 27 edition of the Villanovan dealt with posters put up by Villanova Democratic Socialists of America (DSA) regarding a Pro-Choice march in Washington, D.C. The Campus Index said that the posters were approved by the office of Student Activities and that the Villanovans for Life took down the posters. In reality, Lucyna Gorski, director of Student Activities, said that the posters were stamped by accident and the Rev. John Stack, O.S.A., dean of Students, told DSA to remove the posters until the matter was considered further. DSA removed all of the posters. Villanovans for Life says it had no part in taking down the signs. The Villanovan regrets the error and apologizes for insinuating that the Villanovans for Life removed the posters.

Metallica expands their sound

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Senior Reporter

Metallica bassist Jason Newsted spoke to David J. Criblez in an exclusive interview for the Villanovan.

There are many people who cringe at the strike of an electric guitar chord, so much so that they are almost afraid of it. Heavy music, now misconceived and labeled as being 'heavy metal,' has risen in both popularity and, in some instances, content. This past year several bands such as Guns N'Roses and Skid Row have captured the eyes and ears of both the critics and youth around the globe with their wild styles and jagged good looks, not to mention riots and arrests.

However, bigger history was made. A 10-year-old underground group that feeds off the energy, spirit and dedication of their fans, who worship them religiously, have finally received the recognition they always deserved. They achieved this through a strong friendship and their honest reflections on the world without jumping on any political bandwagon or sporting a flashy image. They are solid, bold, more powerful and more poetic than originally perceived. That band is Metallica and they have received justice, once and for all.

VILLANOVAN: Metallica is said to have an inner circle surrounding them, separating you from your peers and tightening your bonds with your fans. How do you perceive this?

JASON NEWSTED: "I think that's all still the same. We are very conscious of keeping the intimacy, keeping the touch within our family. Our family is our friends and our followers. That's our first priority after our music. It helps us remember where we came from and how we got where we are. It's very important to us."

V: Do you think that since your 1988 LP, ... And Justice For All, that circle has widened?

JN: "Yeah, it has widened all along our 10-year history, as our albums and tours go by. Our following has snowballed but the circle still remains ... which is important."

V: What was it about the Justice album that brought such immediate attention to Metallica?

JN: "I think it had a lot to do with the single, 'One.' It was our first video that was very thought provoking, surpassing a lot of the material that was being shown at the time. It also contained quality songwriting that people have begun to expect from us."

V: How would you compare your past audience to your present one?

JN: "Nowadays it has bloomed and blossomed over the past two years. Our audience was 13-20-year-old white males which made up the core. Every once in a while you'd see some girls ... but now you see a spectrum within the circle. You see 5-7-year-old kids with their parents, next to them the core audience and also many more girls and people of all colors, shapes and sizes. Many cultures seem to have opened up to us, fitting us in their own little niche."

V: Your new LP, Metallica, has broadened the circle to the utmost extreme. What caused people to open their ears as well as their minds?

JN: "We are much more focused on what we wanted to do. We have become more knowledgeable since we did 260 shows on the last tour in 22 different countries. We read a lot, we met a lot of people, we found out a lot more about ourselves. We also had direct ideas that we wanted to capture along with a way of going about doing it. We worked very hard on the musicality. The Justice album was a bit too far to the extreme of being progressive and self-indulgent. We worked from basic riffs but also built a strong foundation out of our rhythm section. James (Heitfeld, Metallica's lead singer and guitarist) really proves himself as a singer to the point of where he has established a powerful confidence in himself. He really shows his potential. All these factors came into play."

V: It has been said that after the 1988 "Monsters of Rock" tour some of the songs became too much in a sense of length and velocity. What exactly occurred?

JN: "It was a bit too much. Now on the new tour we put some of those songs in a medley. It works better. We came to an end of being really technical. This time we concentrate more on moods and textures."

V: Some of the core fans have labelled the new album "commercial" while others refute it. What is your reaction?

JN: "It's commercial in the sense that it can be played on the radio and more people are digging our music. It does not mean that we have changed as people or that we are a different band. I invited those who doubt us to come to our live show. If they don't think we are the best live heavy band then they have a few screws loose. We have so much more to offer, than to play 240 beats to every song. Many bands, that came out the same time as us, continue to play within the same mode without any changing of pace. They are

'Silence' sweeps predictable Oscar awards

The 64th Annual Academy Awards saw 'Silence of the Lambs' sweep every major category.

By AARON NICODEMUS
Entertainment Editor

Has the Oscar stopped screaming? As seemingly all the statues at the 64th Annual Academy Awards were collected by "Silence of the Lambs," it seems only appropriate to dedicate the night to the year's best movie.

This theme was emphasized right from the beginning. Host Billy Crystal was wheeled out onto the stage by two hospital orderlies, complete with the mask worn by Hannibal "the Cannibal" Lector. He greeted Anthony Hopkins and remarked, "I'm having the Academy over for dinner. Care to join me?"

Crystal's humor kept the show light and his version of the traditional song combination (which includes all Best Picture nominations) was pointed and short.

The Oscars is rooted in its own tradition, and some might even say mired in it. There were few surprises March 30, as "Silence" won Best Picture, Best Director (Jonathan Demme), Best Actor (Hopkins), Best Actress (Jodie Foster) and Best Screenplay Adaptation.

There were a few unexpected twists, though not with the voting. The space shuttle Atlantis astronauts, holding a floating Oscar statue, congratulated George Lucas by space-link for receiving a memorial director's award. Bryan Adams performed "Everything I Do, I Do It For You" in a grey sweatshirt and jeans. Hey, Bryan, people usually dress up for this gig.

Although gay and lesbian members of the group "Queer Nation" protested outside, they did not manage to disrupt the glamorous proceedings. Their problem was with their perception that Hollywood's "homo-bashing" was creating a negative image of homosexuals, by portraying them as psychopathic killers ("Silence of the Lambs") or criminals ("JFK"). Many of the famous stars wore a red ribbon to symbolize AIDS awareness and the constant battle being waged against it. The wild crowd of gay protestors outside the awards may have had an influence after all.

Sentimental favorite Jack Palance, winner of the Best Supporting Actor for his portrayal of Curly in "City Slickers," provided one of the night's more memorable moments. Claiming, at 72, that he was still as fit as most of the audience, he proceeded to do several one-handed push-ups on the stage to prove his point. "If I was doing them with two hands, I'd be here all night," he claimed.

Barbra Streisand got unrelenting sympathy for her Best Director snub at the hands of the Academy. "Prince of Tides," even for its sympathy votes, did not garner any Oscars for its numerous nominations.

The Oscars is Hollywood's big night, full of flash and pageantry. While the stars were abundant, the laughs were sparse and the three-hour show proved to be tedious. Billy Crystal may be a great host, but Oscar's act needs a little polishing. The night's winners will remember the show forever: the show's viewers will not.

Phantom haunts the Forrest Theatre

OPERA.

The magic of Andrew Lloyd Webber has once again arrived in Philadelphia. Since mid-February the Forrest Theatre has played host to the legendary "The Phantom of the Opera." Until recently, "Phantom" thrilled American audiences only on Broadway. Now through July, the Philadelphia area will have the opportunity to live within the Paris Opera House that the Phantom calls home.

The overall visual aspect of "Phantom" is amazing. The sets are as intricate and complete as they would be in New York. The play begins as a prologue at a Paris Auction in 1911. With the strike of a chord, the stage begins to transform before the audience into a true Paris Opera House stage in 1881 including the rising of a ballroom chandelier from the center of the stage to the ceiling of the Forrest Theatre.

Perhaps the most memorable transformation occurs during the famed piece "The Phantom of the Opera." As the Phantom lures Christine into the labyrinth underground, the audience is literally taken on a journey through the back halls of the Opera House, including a ride on the candlelit waters into the Phantom's dwelling place. The curtain rarely closes. Therefore, all the set changes must take place on stage in subtle and smooth ways.

No details were overlooked in this production, including the magnificent costumes that are obviously true to period clothing. The capes and masks overwhelm the stage, especially during the Masquerade Ball. In this scene the entire company is fitted in elaborate costumes that allude to the elegance of a time gone past.

As always, the cast proved to be the most essential element to the play. Kevin Gray, who appeared as the Phantom, came straight from the Broadway production of the play where he was cast as the Phantom and also as Raoul. Keith Buterbaugh, who plays Raoul in Philadelphia, also was cast as the Phantom and Raoul in New York previous to Gray. Both Gray and Buterbaugh have clear, distinct, well-trained voices that perform the score as it should be. Teri Bibb as Christine gives a charming performance especially in "Wishing You Were Somehow Here Again." Gray's highlight is the Phantom's "The Music Of The Night."

Webber who has given the theatre plays such as "Evita," "Cats," "Jesus Christ Superstar" and "Aspects of Love" may have reached the pinnacle of his career with the music of "The Phantom of the Opera." The melodies are simple with repeated variations and vocal harmonies. They gain enchanting qualities. As a result, it is vital that the voices create the desired effect. This production brought the audience to tears.

Base and Walker headline 'Nova concert

By COLEEN KENIREY

One of the biggest dance hits of the '80s was "It Takes Two," a track which combined a hip-hop beat, James Brown samples and the singer's self-important rap lyrics. It became the song of choice at dance clubs and emanated from the open windows of every cruising IROC and Mustang in the summer of 1988. The track launched the career of the previously unknown Rob Base and D.J. E Z Rock and continues to be a consistent favorite at fraternity parties and bars or wherever a dance floor is available.

Rob Base's debut release also spawned "Hype It Up," "Get on the Dance Floor" and "Joy and Pain" which could not match the success of "It Takes Two" but did maintain Base's presence on club play lists. The powerful dance tunes on The Incredible Base, the rapper's follow-up album, were praised by critics, proving Base to be more than a one-hit-wonder.

Base's music takes R & B, rap and hip-hop influences of the recording artist's childhood and makes them accessible to a pop audience. It is this ability which allowed his initial hit to make the crossover onto the mainstream music charts and which will make his performance at Villanova April 10 a successful one. Base's songs cross racial and cultural audience lines because they have danceable beats and are simply about having a good time.

Villanova basketball player Chris Walker will also make his on-campus debut as a musician April 10. Walker's gospel-trained voice has just begun to be recognized since he has been featured in a Big East half-time special aired during the NCAA March Madness on ESPN and he has also contributed a song to a Big East Highlight film. This exposure, in addition to his appearance at Jake Nevin, will allow Walker a chance to achieve his goal of "stepping right out of basketball and stepping into the entertainment business" after graduation.

Walker will perform all four songs from his demo tape, containing two ballads and two hip-hop up-beat tunes. The romantic R & B selections are "Making Love In The Dark" and "The One." The other songs have thumping synth-bass backbeats and some rap back-up.

They deal with the opposing subjects of a "Special Girl" and a girl who should be avoided in "Mission Impossible." Walker's vocals will make a crowd-pleasing transition to the stage with assistance from back up singers Larry Redmond, Clay Henderson, Brian Taylor and Villanova Choir members Roshonda Scipio and Stephanie Grimes. The music will be provided by Sean "The Diesel" Morris, who composed all of the musical arrangements for Walker's lyrics.

Two rap acts will also perform at the concert. Scott Houghton, who calls himself Scotty Shock, is a 1990 Villanova graduate whose raps deal with serious issues such as sex and drugs. He will perform tracks including "I Like It," which samples the disco hit of the same name, and "Overload," a fast-paced song with a strong beat. The rap duo Unit One Mob, comprised of Cool Scott and M.C. Dizzy, will provide their original brand of music, which they describe as "all about positive energy and positive lyrics." Their song "I Write The Book," a danceable tune reminiscent of the Elvis Costello song of the same name.

Judybats create modern sounds at 23 East

By COLEEN KENIREY
Assistant Entertainment Editor

The 23 East Cabaret will host The Judybats April 3. The band's originality is apparent from their name which they adopted in homage to the bat-toting puppet in "The Punch & Judy Show." The original members — singer Jeff Heiskell, guitarist Ed Winters, keyboardist/violinist/singer Peggy Hambright, bassist Timothy Stutz, and acoustic guitarist/singer Johnny Sughrue — met while they were attending the University of Tennessee. They have recently added drummer Kevin Jarvis to their lineup. Ever since, they have been creating unique modern songs which receive abundant airplay on college radio.

The Judybats' major label debut was 1991's Native Son and they have recently released Down In The Shacks Where The Satellite Dishes Grow. Prior to these albums they made two maxi-singles: When Southern Bells Ring and Daylight, which featured their live favorite "All I Want to do is F*#@ Your Hair" and a cover of the Gary Numan hit "Cars." They were also part of the Just Say Anything alternative music sampler with "Don't Drop The Baby." This track typifies their lyrical style, poetic but often morbid, with "Don't drop the baby 'cause he might cry/ Don't touch my soft spot 'cause I might die."

> This track typifies their lyrical style, which is poetic but often morbid.

FLASH: Irish band Ghost Of An American Airman have recently released their debut album, Life Under Giants, on the independent American label, Hollywood Records. The album was produced by Mark Opitz, who has previously worked with INXS, Crowded House and The Divinyls. The band's singer, Dodge, followed the lead of Natalie Merchant of 10,000 Maniacs by writing an ode to Jack Kerouac, "Bring On The Mystery."

Ghost Of An American Airman oppose the bad publicity their hometown of Belfast receives as "dangerous territory." Their songs focus on more everyday issues such as the experiences of shipyard workers in "When The Whistle Blows," emphasizing the characteristics Belfast shares with other towns. This Irish band performed successfully in America at the Bitter End and the New Music Seminar in New York and will arrive at the 23 East Cabaret April 9.

Down-to-Earth rocker Eddie Money will appear at the Chestnut Cabaret April 4, singing his hit singles "Take Me Home Tonight" and "Two Tickets To Paradise" as well as material from his newest album, Right Here. The Ambler Cabaret wil have John "Dr. Dirty" Valey gracing its stage April 4.

Lightning Seeds shine with poetic lyrics

By MONTA MONACO
Features Editor

The Lightning Seeds' new album, Sense, is a musical paradox. The rhythm is lighthearted and buoyant while the lyrics delve into complex personal territories such as birth and death.

Perhaps singer/songwriter/producer/multi-instrumentalist Ian Broudie should add poet to his entourage of titles. Without the music, the words to his songs read like powerful pieces of modern poetry. The messages are not necessarily political like other progressive bands, nor do they perpetuate rebellion. They more or less describe perplexing emotions and concepts.

For example, "The Life of Riley" beautifully describes the birth of a baby as a shooting star falling from the heavens to this world. Broudie insightfully comments. "But it's certain nothing's certain/From cradles and sleepless nights/You breathe in life forever/ And stare at the world from deep under eiderdown."

The most brilliant numbers appear first on the album. Aside from "The Life of Riley," the most enchanting songs are the title track, "Sense," and Blowing Bubbles." The whole album is mesmerizing, but after the first few songs the music all seems to sound similar and some of the meaning is lost.

Sense is the follow-up to the 1990 debut Cloudcuckooland that introduced The Lightning Seeds to the pop-music world. This first album was colored with a naive tint that Broudie sought to recreate on the follow-up. To do this, Broudie entered the studio only with melodies and chords determined to spontaneously create masterpieces that would capture the innocent shade that characterized The Lightning Seeds from the beginning.

Broudie plays most of the instruments himself, with some guest backing vocals from former Specials/Fun Boy Three frontman Terry Hall and Icicle Works leader Ian McNabb. The album was co-produced by Simon Rogers who handled a great deal of the tecnical work.

Broudie spawned from the same Liverpool music scene as Echo and the Bunnymen and OMD. However, it was his production career that really sparked first. Throughout the '70s and '80s, Broudie produced albums by such artists as The Fall, The Primitives, and Wall of Voodoo. Missing being on the other side of the keyboard, Broudie released a single, "Pure," that led to the production of Cloudcuckooland.

Sense is an enjoyable album. Broudie needs to work on making the music a little more innovative — it sounds a little too much like groups such as Erasure and Midnight Oil. On the other hand, Broudie's lyrics are extraordinarily original, but the technotronic music doesn't always do the lyrics poetic justice.

Bassist Newsted reveals Metallica's force

not doing much now. We have continued to grow and show more confidence in our musicianship and ability. There must be growth. We still keep to our roots but we are still learning. We are the type of people who like to make things happen. When we are together it gets magnified 1000 times."

V: Your producer on the new record, Bob Rock (Motley Crue, Bon Jovi), has produced many pop-metal bands contrasting Metallica's style. How did you go about choosing him?

JN: "We talked to many people. When we were in pre-production rehearsals and we had him come down and listen. No one ever did that before. We listened to his ideas and realized that he was there to make Metallica stronger. He has helped us progress as a band and learn. But it was hard for him sometimes cause Lars (Ulrich, Metallica's drummer) and James are so specific with every detail it was hard for him to do his job ... Meticula. (laughs)"

V: The rhythm section sound that Rock derived is immense. How did that culminate?

JN: "It's definitely the heaviest sound we have encountered. When I joined this band I had to totally scrap my idea of what a rhythm section was. I grew up listening to Rush records and I learned straight off the record how to play bass. Lars always plays with the guitar. It was hard to not play with the drummer. With my last band, Flotsam and Jetsam, the drummer and I could not be broken apart. So on this record Lars and I played together. It was all part of the realization, it had to be more of a team effort in order to make it more orchestral."

V: The album went to Number One on the Billboard charts, which is a dream to many artists, but it has been said that your Number One chart positioning was not as joyous of an occasion as it might seem to have been. Why?

JN: "We don't show it so much. It was an honor to get our heavy music recognized to that extent. Before we were ignored by the media and others because we didn't really follow the standard promotional motions that other bands did. Then we started selling 2, 3 and 4 million albums strictly within the core family and it came to a point where we could no longer be ignored. Now with the new album we gave radio a bit to work with, so they realized they were wrong for ignoring us before. We are extremely proud but we are not the type to toot our own horn a whole lot. There are things that we are very proud of, and to some extent, arrogant about, like the live show. I even felt that way when I was a fan of Metallica. I am still a fan but I get to play in the band now, so it's cool. (laughs)"

V: The older material was more focused on anger and aggression but the new material seems to be more internally centered. How did that cross-over come about?

JN: "James touched back to his childhood on this record. Those feelings were slowly creeping out on the previous records but I think he feels more confident that the public can relate more this time around. He explored things that he kept covered before."

V: Was your new single and semi-ballad, "Nothing Else Matters," a risk for Metallica?

JN: "James came in with the song ... and it was simply a beautiful piece. We wanted to go with it. It doesn't matter what the public conceives of it. We have to reach our own expectations first and those are higher than anybody else's."

V: What is the concept of the jet black cover of the nameless new LP and what does the elusive snake image on it represent?

JN: "It's nothing. We had ideas of putting scary pictures of the news and stuff but then we decided 'what's the use?' But this time we wanted to keep it real simple and leave the music as the focal point. We had titles such as: 'Don't Tread On Me,' 'Through the Never' (both titles of songs on Metallica) but we had no use for that anymore. The snake comes from this kid who was one of the Minutemen in Virginia in 1760. He has this snake embroidered to his back pack with the saying 'Don't Tread On Me' under it. The officer told him to take it off but the boy explainded how the snake stood for vigilance and always being on guard. The snake will fight to defend what it thinks is right or what is its own. It will never start a fight but if taunted it will attack. It's a symbol of our strength and protectiveness."

V: Do you think because of the band's heavy sound that you often get misinterpreted?

JN: "I think people who won't give us the time of day are people that are very close-minded. It does not really bother us ... either way we are not going to change for anybody."

V: You have a very unique stage setting for the new tour. How would you explain it?

JN: "Revolutionary, my man, revolutionary. It's incredible. We are apart of the audience. We have mics all over the stage in order to get away from the standard 60x80 stage, guitar player there, bass player there, drummer center. We all move about. There are no amps on stage, they are all underneath. The view from every seat is great. The point is to make ourselves as accessible to the fans as possible.

We have a taping section for those who wish to record the concert on video or audio tape. We have "the Snake Pit," which is a section within the stage itself where certain fans that either are friends of ours or contest winners hang out. The stage is shaped like an arrowhead, it's cool. Kirk's (Hammett, Metallica guitarist) got different pedals all over. Even Lars moves about with several different kits. We wanted constant changing and constant movement. It's designed specifically for the fans."

V: Earlier you described your core fans as a family. They seem to have the same dedication as Grateful Dead fans. How would you describe them?

JN: "In many ways they are similar to deadheads. Our fans are very close to us and very loyal. For example there are groups of people that live within certain regions where they have a 300 mile radius that they will travel to see us play any gig we have within that area. After a while we get to know them and we help them out with passes and we get to be friends. It is very common in our scene."

V: How would you describe your relation with the new fans?

JN: "I think a lot of them are not aware of where we came from and what we are all about. They just know us for the new album, that's O.K. 'cause that's the future. For example, some kid's big brother got him into Metallica. His thing is the new LP while his brother's thing was Kill 'Em All. It's a beautiful thing, no matter what. That is why we put together this 25 minute movie that opens the show (no band opens for Metallica on their new show). It's like Metallica opening for Metallica. (laughs) It goes back to Mustaine's stuff (Dave Mustaine, now of Megadeath, was originally the lead guitarist for Metallica who was since replaced by Kirk Hammett). It goes all the way up to us back stage getting set up."

V: Have you found that some percentage of the core family lost interest along the new movements?

JN: "I think so. But, its about .3 percent. They were more of the Slayer fans anyway. I have nothing against them at all. Our message is to choose for yourself and never follow others."

V: When you replaced Cliff Burton (original Metallica bassist who died in a bus accident) what did you experience with the core family? Was acceptance tough?

JN: "It was mostly instant acceptance. Most people saw what it was ... I was there not to replace Cliff but continue for him. He was one in a billion, he was a creative genius. No one will replace him and I know that better than anyone else. The first year I saw signs in the audience 'Cliff R.I.P., Welcome Jason.' That helped me go along in what was a very trying time for me, those first couple of years. These guys were my friends and my pals and they gave me as much confidence as they could. Yet they still had to be tough on me to see if I was the man for the job. Cliff was so important to them that it was hard for them to channel their emotions. But it took a lot of patience on both parts. Now we're working on six years and its pretty strong."

V: How did you hook up with Lars and James?

JN: "I was doing everything to get in the business from tape trading, to gigs, to writing. I was contacting all kinds of people from big to small companies. There was one guy at Elektra (Metallica's home label) that I would annoy every week. (laughs) Pictures, tapes, tickets to gigs. When Lars was seeking a bassist he put the word out and when everybody he talked to my name popped up cause of all my previous contacts. They all knew that I worked hard and was very persistent with what I was doing. That was it."

V: How would you describe each of you as people and what do you listen to?

JN: "Lars is the rocker. He knows every detail about Metallica. He's very articulate. He's like a pack-rat, he keeps everything from the room list at each hotel to memorabilia. We are lucky to have some one like him. He lives Metallica 25 hours a day, he can't turn it off. Sometimes it's his blessing and others it's his hindrance. Lars listens to whatever's rockin': Skid Row, Guns N'Roses. James is his own person. He's naturally gifted. He can sit in a room with any instrument, leave him alone, come back 15 minutes later and he'll be making music with it. He's similar to Cliff. He's also very serious and very proud. He doesn't like to say things like 'I'm sorry' but inside he has a huge heart and he's very considerate. He listens to Lynyrd Skynyrd, The Allman Brothers, Southern picking kinds stuff. Kirk is eccentric. Not huge on common sense kinda-guy but he is very learned and well-read. He goes through like three books a week. He's also an avid collector of art, comics and loves monster movies. He would have been comfortable in the Renaissance period. He listens to a lot of Rush and that mystical rock. I'm more of a home-body stable person. The anchor. I don't drink a lot or even go out to rock clubs a lot. If I do go out, I'll go to jazz/blues clubs. I play a lot of sports, eat a lot of vitamins that type of thing. I listen to a lot of Motown, R&B anything with a predominent bass in it, Tom Waits. Not much of today's music fits with me. I'm more in touch with the past, really."

'Power' pursues justice

By AARON NICODEMUS
Entertainment Editor

For centuries, racism was not just tolerated, it was encouraged and legitimized. Apartheid is the modern version of racism established in political and social realms. According to a wise South African proverb, a raging waterfall begins with a drop of water. Banishing apartheid begins in much the same way, with small change. With white South Africans having recently voted to disband the world's most glaring example of racial segregation, maybe the trickle will finally form a surge.

"The Power of One" traces the life of one young English boy, P.K. (Stephen Dorff), as he grows up in South Africa. Set in the '30s, the film opens with P.K.'s birth. His father has just been killed in an elephant stampede, and his mother attempts to run their huge farm by herself. When P.K. turns 7, he is forced to attend a school run by Afrikaners (German descendants), where as the only English boy, he is nearly killed by Hitler-influenced youths.

His mother dies soon after, and P.K. is able to leave the school and live with his grandfather. There he meets a wise old German pianist, who takes the boy under his wing. As WWII begins, South Africa jails all Germans, including P.K.'s friend. But since the prison is run by Afrikaners, who admire a refined German, they allow P.K. unlimited access. He meets Pete (Morgan Freeman), a popular and intelligent inmate, who teaches him how to box. As P.K. grows up, he becomes more and more disgusted with the harsh system of apartheid and its cruel treatment of the black majority.

Under the tutelage of the two men, P.K. becomes strong in mind and body, skilled in boxing and aware of the injustice that envelopes his country. At the prodding of Pete, P.K. is able to unite all the tribes in the prison to sing for a concert for the province's governor, only it is in the native tongue. Since P.K. is white, can speak their language and does not discriminate among the tribes, he becomes the physical embodiment of the ancient myth of the "rainmaker," a savior of the black people from the chains of apartheid.

At this point, the film takes on a "Dead Poet's Society" feel, with the schoolboy P.K. tramping around town in his tie and jacket uniform, chasing a love interest and exploring the limits of his book knowledge. In such a violently enforced apartheid society, however, his attempts at "mixing" blacks and whites and teaching English are met with painful and violent conflict.

"The Power of One" is a moving and magnificent epic with a terrific soundtrack and beautiful scenes of South African life. There is a problem with coincidence and chance, which the plot relies heavily upon. It seems that every single aspect of P.K.'s life has some influence either on the future or on the politics of South Africa, and is a bit far-fetched.

Dorff is a pleasant surprise as the lead character, and his supporting cast (Freeman, John Geilgud as his secondary school principal) is excellent. "The Power of One" does provide a personal and potent statement against apartheid and hope for the future of this violence-stricken nation.

FAST FORWARD: Ah yes, that wickedly infamous smile of Hollywood is coming back again. Jack Nicholson is the owner of an attack-dog business in "Man Trouble," set for release sometime in April. Nicholson falls for one of his wealthy clients (Ellen Barkin), and conflicts between their mixed social class affair soon become apparent.

REWIND: "Rambling Rose" was one of 1991's most underrated films. With strong performances from Laura Dern, Diane Ladd and Robert Duvall, the film earns high marks and is well-suited for video. Basking in nostalgia, "Rose" is a warm and honest Southern story about a wild adolescent girl and the family which hires her to work for them. Both Dern and Ladd earned Oscar nominations for their performances.

CLIPS: Villanova's Cultural Film Series features the French film "Chocolat," set in French colonial Africa. Based partly on the experiences of director Claire Denis the film "probes the barriers between white and black, Europe and Africa." The film will be playing at the Connelly Center Cinema Saturday, April 5 at 7 p.m., Sunday, April 6 at 3:30 and 7 p.m., and Monday, April 7 at 7 p.m.

Bruce returns fully matured

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Senior Reporter

ROCK QUARRY

When looking into the eyes of Bruce Springsteen you can't help but see a man with a deep, bold stare on his face as the rest of his body looks like he just awoke and awoke and tumbled out of bed. However, his look is not staged but rather represents his sheer honesty that is quite evident on both of his new albums Human Touch and Lucky Town.

In the past with albums such as Born To Run and Darkness on the Edge of Town, Springsteen spoke from the city streets simply because that was his origin. Then as Born in the U.S.A. exploded over the entire world in 1984-85, Springsteen's working class blue-collar image made him into an international superstar. Here danger set in. Springsteen had money and fame before, but not to this over-blown level. He could have continued to ride that wave of hype by simply filling the shoes of that set image that would have turned him into a cartoon.

But Springsteen was far too smart to fall into that trap. He realized that through it all he changed as a person. He lost his street crawler grizzle but the rock-n-roll poet/musician remained. Touch and Town, like 1987's Tunnel of Love, are reflections of his life today. Each song is similar to a portrait; a scene is set while the details of emotion shine through, each with their own individuality.

Touch and Town differ more musically than lyrically. Where Touch is rhythmic and up beat, Town is more melodic and low key.

The Touch songs take on different shapes and sizes. "Soul Driver," "With Every Wish," "Roll of the Dice" and the title track are larger in scale than the ditties "Cross My Heart," "57 Channels (And Nothin' On)," "Real World" and "Gloria's Eyes." However, their impact is at an even balance. In fact, in some cases, the small tunes even are more effective.

Town contains a majority of those small tunes that could be expressed simply through Springsteen and his acoustic axe, Nebraska style. It's a smaller album that deserves its own separation from Touch which is why it is not the second half of a double album. Here Springsteen can be most appreciated as the lyrics come alive without being hindered by flashy instrumentation. Its simplicity is its attractive quality and is the running theme through each song.

"Book of Dreams," "If I Should Fall Behind" and "The Big Muddy," each from Town, are from the heart with a grand sense of realism making them identifiable and close to home. This rings true with both albums making them bonded by his outlook on life. They both show his newfound faith in love and relationships that was broken and lost on Tunnel of Love, which had followed the break-up of his first marriage. He declares, "I'm searchin' for one clear moment of love and truth. I still got a little faith." ("Real World," Touch).

Springsteen is now a father of two and a husband once again. Here his palette is cleared for a new beginning but he warns, "You may think the world's black and white and you're dirty or your clean. You better watch out you don't slip through them spaces in between." ("Cross My Heart," Touch)

However, his new material is strong but he might encounter a few problems with his live show. Although he has been regarded as one of the best live performers in rock-n-roll history, he has dismembered his backbone, namely the E Street Band. Springsteen did fly solo on the Tunnel of Love LP, but it was the E Street Band that accompanied him on tour supporting it.

Springsteen's current studio direction is out of the E Street big band realm; therefore, they are not necessary in this sense. But, without a doubt they will be missed on stage.

Another problem might be a loss of communication with the live performances of Town's smaller tunes that have the potential of getting lost in football stadium arenas.

But, the truth is, Springsteen can't look back. The easy road to continued fame and fortune would be to write more Born to Run's or Born in the U.S.A.'s which would also lead to a road of boredom. Springsteen is growing as a person and along with that, comes his growth as an artist. His albums document his personal stages. What makes him so unique is his ability to capture these moments in the same desirable storytelling delivery that has mesmerized people since day one.

'Obscenity' answers rage

By PAUL J. BARBEN
Staff Reporter

Paul J. Barben spoke to Joe Hackett in an interview for the VILLANOVAN

VILLANOVAN: Is your play "The Obscenity" a comedy or a drama?

HACKETT: I tried to make it a musical but it didn't turn out that way. [laughs] It is a drama essentially.

VILLANOVAN: What is the setting for the play?

HACKETT: It takes place in someone's home, the kitchen and the family room. The play is about a relatively large family, but there are only four members in it: the father, the mother, one of the sons, and the sister. Ray Cerecini, who played a role in "All My Sons" here at 'Nova, plays the father. Andrew Firda plays the son and Kate Geoghegan plays the daughter. Ruth Scarborough, who is from Philadelphia, will be playing the mother. John Griffin, a good friend of mine, asked me if he could produce it. He is the director of the play and almost solely responsible for its production. I owe a great deal to him.

VILLANOVAN: How long have you been working on "The Obscenity?"

HACKETT: I started out with the idea last summer but it really didn't materialize until I got into a playwriting class. It was actually offered as a graduate and undergraduate course. As an undergraduate I was only required to complete a full scene. Bruce Graham helped me out a lot and was very inspirational to me. He is an incredible playwright. He's so in tune with the rhythm of a normal conversation. He has taught here but now he's working on his play "The Champagne Charlie Steaks" in Philly. Bruce made his way through community theatre. I wrote one scene for Bruce and he kept asking me for answers, so I just kept writing more scenes.

VILLANOVAN: What playwrights, if any, would you cite as major influences for yourself?

HACKETT: Arthur Miller, definitely. He brought to the theatre what everyone in a family can identify with. Anyone who goes to the theatre can feel something for one of his plays. And that's important. That's "the method" of the stage.

VILLANOVAN: Do you, as a playwright yourself, think that there are a sufficient amount of classes offered in the area of theatre here at Villanova?

HACKETT: This school has a good theatre faculty and I think that they have some pretty good programs but I certainly would not call Villanova art prone. For example, Villanova graduated a playwright by the name of David Rabe. This man went to Vietnam, came back and got a masters degree in theatre at Villanova. He wrote many plays, one of them, "Hurly Burly," has been to Broadway. It was on Broadway for over four years,and, for a drama, was the second longest running play on Broadway. Villanova's library doesn't even carry the play. I would think Villanova would be proud of an alumnus like this. It turns out that the school just dropped the theatre major as an undergraduate bachelor's degree.

VILLANOVAN: Were there the proper means to develop your theatrical ability?

HACKETT: Well, students really have to work for it. What is interesting about people involved in theatre at Villanova is that they have a lot of character. At many state schools, it might be easy for a kid to come in as a freshman and feel good about being enthusiastic about the arts. But here, it is a little tougher.

Fortunately, upperclassmen seem more mature and their diversity may be leading the school in a positive direction.

VILLANOVAN: Do you think that the average Villanovan will be able to identify with this play?

HACKETT: Yes.

VILLANOVAN: Why?

HACKETT: Because I see an unanswered rage in the people here — a ruthless passion to shoot as high as possible. But it seems everyone runs into some wall, whether it is in the gym, a bar, or an apartment. I think "The Obscenity" understands that.

VILLANOVAN: Being that you are a senior, do you plan on taking the play with you when you leave?

HACKETT: Bruce Graham told me that it is becoming "in vogue" to present longer one acts, say an hour-and-a-half play without an intermission. So I'm thinking about that. I'm definitely going to try to sell it after it gets produced. It is an incredible opportunity to have people who want to perform it. I've done a lot of work with student theatre as far as acting is concerned,and so I have a lot of support from the group. It's great to be able to have such a forum to see what happens with the play. It sounds unprofessional to hear that it is a "work in progress," but that is essentially what it is."

"The Obscenity" will be performed in St. Mary's theatre at 8 p.m. on the following dates: Wednesday, April 8; Thursday, April 9; Friday, April 10; and Sunday, April 12.

BINKY'S GUIDE TO LOVE
LOVE TIPS FOR THE UNLOVEABLE
WHEN YOU SAY YOU HATE ME IT MAKES ME THINK MAYBE YOU DON'T LOVE ME.
CHAPTER XI:
WHY YOU'RE SO SCREWED UP
THE BRIEFEST OF OVERVIEWS
LOVE SECRET #15 ONE OF THE JOYS OF TRUE LOVE IS GAZING INTO YOUR BELOVED'S EYES AND DISCOVERING NEW SOURCES OF BEAUTY AND DELIGHT.
A PENNY FOR YOUR THOUGHTS.
I WAS JUST NOTICING BOTH YOUR EYES ARE ON THE SAME SIDE OF YOUR NOSE.
ONE THING ABOUT YOUR SEEMINGLY FUTILE SEARCH FOR LOVE IS GUARANTEED: COMPLETE AND UTTER DREAD.
WAS THAT WOMAN IN THE CAFETERIA SMILING AT ME OR SNARLING AT ME?
NO MATTER HOW STABLE YOU THINK YOU ARE, WHEN IT COMES TO YOUR FRANTIC SEARCH FOR A LOVER, THE FACT IS THAT DEEP DOWN INSIDE YOU'RE A QUIVERING FOOL.
WHAT DID IT MEAN WHEN SHE LADLED ME THAT EXTRA CLAM CHOWDER?
MAYBE YOU'RE SOMEONE WHO LIVES A CREATIVE AND PRODUCTIVE LIFE, PRETENDING YOU AREN'T BOTHERED THAT YOU'RE A LOVELESS MUTANT.
WHY DID I SMACK MY LIPS AND QUIP "YUM--CORNSTARCH"?
NO, IT DOESN'T BUG YOU A BIT THAT YOU'RE ALL ALONE IN THE BIG CITY EATING TASTELESS DINNER SALADS WITH ROCK-HARD CHERRY TOMATOES.
WHY DIDN'T SHE RESPOND WHEN I COMPLIMENTED HER HAIRNET?
NO, YOU'RE NOT SEETHING AT ALL THAT YOU'RE SURROUNDED BY HAPPY, SIMPERING COUPLES.
WHY DID SHE LADLE THE GUY BEHIND ME EXTRA CLAM CHOWDER TOO?
THEY THINK THEY'RE SUCH HOT STUFF WITH THEIR GIGGLING AND NUZZLING AND RICHLY VARIED, REGULAR SEX.
WHAT DID SHE MEAN WHEN SHE SAID "HAVE A NICE DAY"?
LOVE IS AGONY BECAUSE YOU KNOW YOU'RE GOING TO SCREW IT UP COMPLETELY AND END UP ALONE AGAIN, REJECTED AND HUMILIATED.
WHY DID SHE SHORT-CHANGE ME?
BUT MAYBE YOU CAN HARNESS YOUR SEETHING RAGE AND SPLITTING HEADACHES AND EMBITTERED LONELINESS AND THROBBING SEXUAL FRUSTRATION INTO SOMETHING SWEET AND POSITIVE.
I MUST HAVE THAT BEWITCHING LITTLE TEMPTRESS.
IF YOU DON'T SUCCEED AT FIRST, FAIL AGAIN.

Track excels in California

By MIKE AGOLINO
Staff Reporter

The Villanova women's track team kicked off its 1992 outdoor season March 28 with a solid performance at the Anteater Invitational held at the University of California-Irvine. Two Wildcat runners came home with NCAA Outdoor Championship provisional qualifying times and four more qualified for the ECAC Championships, helping the Cats to start the outdoor season on a strong note.

In the 3000-meter event, junior Cheri Goddard took first place, finishing in a time of 9:22.8. Teammate Kate Fonshell took second place, finishing in 9:23.7. Both Goddard and Fonshell earned NCAA Outdoor Championship provisional qualifying times. In addition, Villanova's Nnenna Lynch took fourth place in the event with a time of 9:31.1. Lynch's time qualified her for the ECAC Championships.

In the 1500-meter event, two Villanovans also qualified for the ECACs. Junior Chris Gentile finished in third place, running a time of 4:27.9, and sophomore Carole Zajac took fourth with a time of 4:28.3. Junior Abby Hunte also qualified for the ECACs in the 800-meter event, finishing in third place in a time of 2:12.3.

Villanova Head Coach Marty Stern was happy with the way his team performed, and he was especially pleased with the performance of Goddard.

"Cheri Goddard is one of the hottest runners in the country right now, and she continues to perform well against tough competition. The entire women's team continues to look good, and we are all looking forward to the rest of our season," said Stern.

In its next meet, the women's team will travel to Big East rival University of Miami to compete in the Miami Invitational this weekend.

The men's track team traveled to the University of California-Irvine March 28 to participate in the Anteater Invitational. The trip proved to be rewarding, as Villanova captured two individual victories and claimed one IC4A qualifier.

> Quintana ran a great PR (personal record), and we're all proud of not just our Californians, but of all our men.
> Head Coach Marty Stern

Californians Terrence Mahon and Louie Quintana each won their respective races in front of a hometown crowd. Mahon prevailed in the 5,000-meter run thanks to a strong finish. His time of 14:36.1 placed him well ahead of the field. Fellow Californian Dave Hartman finished sixth in 14:54.6.

Quintana was victorious in the 1,500-meters with a time of 3:48.7. He led a pack of Wildcats to a 1-2-3-4 sweep of the race. Following Quintana were Brad Sumner in 3:50.1, Mike Going in 3:51.4 and Kyle Watson in 3:53.0. Both Quintana and Sumner achieved personal-best times with their efforts.

Sophomore David Cook finished third in the javelin with a throw of 191 feet and five inches, qualifying him for IC4As. Freshman Ken Nason, a native of Ireland, placed second in the 800 meters with a time of 1:51.7.

Head Coach Marty Stern was thrilled with the Cats' performance in the homecoming-like meet. "What a thrill to see the Quintana, Mahon, and Hartman families come out in full force to cheer for their sons," Stern said. "Quintana ran a great PR (personal record), and we're all proud of not just our Californians, but of all our men."

Villanova travels this weekend to the University of Miami to compete in the Miami Invitational.

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Rick Bontatibus and Scott Chisholm

This week the Villanovan recognizes men's lacrosse players Rick Bontatibus and Scott Chisholm as co-Athletes of the Week. The pair of sophomores are the top goal scorers for the 4-3 Wildcats.

Bontatibus scored five goals in the team's recent loss to No. 5 Towson State while Chisholm added two assists. In the team's 20-4 win over West Chester, Chisholm had four goals and Bontatibus three.

The lacrosse team will have played six of the current Top 20 teams in the country this season and behind the play of Bontatibus, Chisholm and others, the club has shown it can compete on the same level.

Lax rips West Chester

By BOB TRAVISANO
Staff Reporter

After a heart-breaking loss last week to No. 5 Towson State, the men's lacrosse team came back to annihilate West Chester 20-4.

On a frigid afternoon March 28, the Wildcats raced out of the gate at such a pace that West Chester would never catch up. According to Head Coach Randy Marks, "West Chester was certainly not as strong as they have been in past years and it was nice for us to win a game that was fairly easy. Fifteen different players scored for us."

In this one-sided game, the Cats scored at what seemed to be a constant rate. The flow of picture-perfect goals was incessant. At 8:41 left in the first, Scott Chisholm sent a blast through the pipes to make it 3-0. At 5:06 in the first, Rick Bontatibus came around the cage at right and slipped it under the goalie to make it 4-0. With a few minutes left in the second, Doug Deroucher sent in a blast that would make it 10-1. This sequence was repeated several more times.

On the day, Chisholm had four scores, Bontatibus had three, freshman Joe Greco had three scores, Kevin Crowley had a goal and an assist and Scott Morgan had two goals. Everyone in the second attack group scored. "They played very well when they had the opportunity," said Marks.

The defense played a key role in the rout. "I think matchup-wise our close defense was a lot stronger than their attack was," Marks said.

"They went into a zone defense and we controlled the ball. Once they went into that zone defense, where they felt they couldn't match up to us man-to-man, we just controlled the ball, were very patient and created a lot of good openings and good shots. Their goalie probably slept well that night," said Marks.

The 'Nova goalies had a spectacular game in the cage. Senior Taymore Zarghami, junior Brian Kash and freshman Greg Temo combined for 14 saves in a concerted effort, while only allowing four goals on the game. Temo made his college debut in the cage.

"Everyone got some experience [in this game], including the younger kids. Sometimes it's nice to be on the sideline when you are winning. You can relax a little bit when you have a 20-goal lead," said Marks.

The Cats will play at St. John's tomorrow at 2.00.

The tennis team capped off its week with wins over Franklin and Marshall and King's colleges.

Tennis takes two of three; Boutrous still unbeaten

By JUSTIN KESTNER
Assistant Sports Editor

By the end of last week the men's tennis team was seeing triple. The Cats' record stood at 3-3-3 (three wins, three losses and three cancellations).

Inclement weather negated the Seton Hall and West Chester University matches. Because of its suffocating schedule, 'Nova was unable to reschedule either of these contests. The team is in the midst of a brutal stretch where it must play six matches per week, weather permitting.

"[The weather] is a problem," conceded Head Coach Dr. Robert Langran. "It is hard to get into a rhythm because you're playing one day and then you're not for a couple of days. And then when you finally are, the conditions aren't very good."

The Cats did manage to play three matches last week. They began by losing 5-4 to Monmouth College March 25. It marked the third time this season that the Cats lost a match by that score.

The contest was tied 3-3 following the singles portion of the match. Tom Boutrous at No. 2, Steve Forrest at No. 3 and Dan Daros at No. 6 all won their singles matches. But Mark Pizzi at No. 1, Bryan Cavalier at No. 4 and Andy Sullivan at No. 6 could not defeat their respective opponents.

In doubles play, the No. 1 team of Forrest and Daros and the No. 3 duo of Sullivan and Kevin Reider both lost in straight sets. The No. 2 team of Pizzi and Boutrous gave 'Nova its only doubles victory of the day.

But the Cats' fortunes changed dramatically March 28 when they traveled to Franklin and Marshall College. Despite high winds, 'Nova was able to maintain its concentration and dominate F&M, winning by a score of 9-0.

The Cats followed the F&M win by recording their second consecutive victory, an impressive 7-2 triumph over King's College March 29.

Pizzi lost a tough battle at No. 1 singles, dropping a 6-7, 6-4 decision. Boutrous gave the team a lift by earning a swift 6-2, 6-2 win at No. 2 singles. In the processs, Boutrous remained undefeated this season. Forrest prevailed at No. 3 singles by a 6-2, 6-2 margin, while Cavalier was on the losing end of a 6-3, 6-7 score at No. 4 singles. Sullivan and Daros won their respective matches at No. 5 and No. 6 singles to give the Cats a 4-2 edge.

Two extra singles matches were also held. Flaherty won 6-1, 6-2 at No. 7 and Rob O'Driscoll registered a 6-2, 6-1 win at No. 8 singles.

The tandem of Forrest and Daros posted a 7-5, 6-4 victory at No. 1 doubles. Pizzi and Boutrous turned in a solid effort at No. 2 doubles as they won 6-1, 6-4. Sullivan and Reider combined to give the Cats a sweep of the doubles contests, winning their thrilling No. 3 doubles match 4-6, 6-1, 7-6. In the contest, they saved four match points en route to the win.

The Cats play today at Fordham before traveling to Queen's College for a match tomorrow. They will square off against rival Georgetown Sunday at home at 11 a.m.

centages and championships and nothing else. Did Massimino leave on his own behalf, or did the expectations and pressure become too much for him?

"I just feel he got pushed out by the press and people around here, and that people didn't give him a fair shake," senior nursing major Tanya Creglow said angrily. "How long is he gonna sit there and put up with it? People don't agree with everything he does, but you have to give the guy a break."

"I think it's a shame because of the fact that Rollie's been around for so many years and he's kind of a symbol of Villanova basketball, and not only Villanova basketball, but Villanova pride," said Kathleen Downs, a junior liberal arts major.

Although many students do not know what to think of the move, one thing is certain — Rollie Massimino has left behind a legacy at Villanova. From his tirades on the sidelines to his stylish Windsor shirts hanging out to his enthusiasm and "family" approach to the game, Massimino crafted a program that gave the University a national identity. Students, alumni and fans can only hope his successor will represent Villanova in an equally dignified manner both on and off the court.

Kerry Kittles and Eric Eberz, signed letters of intent to play for Villanova next fall. Another, Lawerence Thomas, verbally committed.

Harris, from Marist High School in Bayonne, N.J., is considered by recruiting experts to be one of the top 10 shooting guards in the country. Coach Mike Leonardo said that when Harris signed his letter of intent, the 6-foot-4 player assumed that Massimino would be at the University for four years. Harris has set an April 15 deadline for Villanova to find an adequate coaching replacement. If not, he will ask to be released from his letter of intent in order to make himself available for the late signing period.

Leonardo said, "This is the biggest blow I've been dealt since I've been coaching," referring to Massimino's sudden departure.

Kittles, from St. Augustine High School in New Orleans, was the only recruit not aware of Massimino's departure when contacted the afternoon of the announcement. Kittles and his coach Bernie Griffen were extremely surprised and disappointed when notified.

"I was very disappointed that Coach [Massimino] didn't tell me," said the 6-foot-5 Kittles, a projected wing player for the Cats.

"Coach Massimino was the big reason that Kerry signed," said Griffin.

Eberz from St. Joseph Institute in Buffalo, was also disappointed. "It's like telling me that someone in my family died," said Eberz coach, Ed Kobierecki. However, Kobierecki believes that Eberz will most likely stay if they find an adequate replacement.

Thomas, from Elizabeth High School in New Jersey, has not signed an official letter of intent. Thomas' coach, Ben Candelino, said that Thomas would keep his options open until the April 15 signing date. According to Candelino, Massimino said that he would not talk Thomas out of attending 'Nova, but would still be interested if Thomas wished to play for UNLV.

While incoming recruits are unsure of their futures, the current players' security poses another concern. None would speak about transferring, but many did not rule out the possibility. Rumors have circulated that a few Cats will consider this option.

The basketball program faces many questions with Massimino's departure. Seven years ago, the Cats claimed the national championship in a miracle year when all the pieces fit together. Today, the program faces a puzzle filled with only questions. Hopefully, the snowball of April 1, 1992 will be a fond yet distant memory.

Women's lax rips Haverford

By ALEX SCOFIELD
Staff Reporter

After two consecutive game postponements, the Villanova stickwomen were eagerly awaiting their makeup contest against Haverford March 29. For nearly two weeks the Lady Cats' record had stood at 1-1. 'Nova hoped to regain a winning record with a win over their Main Line rivals.

With a stifling defense and a strong second-half offensive effort, the Wildcats climbed over the .500 mark with a 10-4 win over Haverford. "I think we controlled the mid-field today," said Head Coach Moira Lewis. "Haverford plays our style of ball, and when we play a team that plays our style, we do better."

For most of the first half, however, the Cats found themselves trying to match pace with their competition. Twice in the first half, Villanova had to play catch-up after Haverford took 1-0 and 2-1 leads.

Towards the end of the half, the Lady Cats picked up the tempo. With Villanova down 2-1 and six minutes remaining, Leigh Ann Leone flew in on the left-hand side of the field, and Haverford goalie Joy Zarembka was helpless against Leone's game-tying shot. On a solo drive, co-captain Anne Heilman put the Cats up 3-2 with 1:02 remaining in the half.

At 6:46 into the second half, Heilman scored at a seemingly impossible angle, breaking a 3-3 tie. Three minutes later, Villanova went on a scoring blitz, putting up four points in less than 2:10. Before the Haverford women could react, the score was 8-3 and the game was no longer a contest.

The most encouraging story of the game for the Wildcats was the play of Heilman. Coming off a recent back injury, Heilman was in full force, notching three goals and three assists.

"[The injury] doesn't bother me when I'm playing," she said after the game. "I'm just excited; this is definitely the best we've looked all season."

Heilman's three timely goals prevented Haverford from ever pulling away from 'Nova. She scored with the Cats down 1-0, broke a 2-2 tie and her goal with the game tied at three put Villanova ahead for good.

Also contributing to the Villanova attack was Leone. She netted five goals for the game, bringing her to a season total of 14.

Villanova will host Georgetown at 2 p.m. tomorrow

Final Four Preview

By ANDY FITZPATRICK
Sports Editor

Michigan vs. Cincinnati

Date: Saturday, 5:42 p.m., Channel 10

Team Facts: Cincinnati has not beaten higher than a fifth seed thus far in the tournament.

Although the Final Four will be a new experience for Michigan's Fab Five, Head Coach Steve Fisher is no stranger, having won a national championship in 1989.

Outlook: The first semifinal of the evening kicks off with the Fab Five facing the Five No-Names with a spot in the championship game Monday night at stake. Both teams are surprised to have made it this far but only one will prevail tomorrow night.

Cincinnati Head Coach Bob Huggins has assembled a team of transfers and junior college stars who have come together very quickly. The Bearcats prefer a fast-pace tempo fueled by their multiple trapping defenses. The key so far has been getting everyone involved and Cincinnati plays the ultimate team game with no particular star. But Cincinnati will have to keep the eager Wolverines from the offensive glass and create turnovers, something Ohio State could not do in the regional final, if it is to beat Michigan.

Prediction: Michigan

Duke vs. Indiana

Date: Saturday, 8:10 p.m. Channel 10

Team Fasts: Indiana Head Coach, Bob Knight has won the national championship in his last three appearances in the Final Four. (1976, 1981, 1987). The only loss was Knight's first appearance, a semifinal loss in 1973 to Bill Walton and UCLA.

Duke has now reached the Final Four five consecutive years, twice on Christian Laettner buzzer-beaters.

Outlook: It is Teacher vs. Pupil. Knight vs. Krzyzewski. Legend vs. Legend. But this national semifinal will be decided on the hardwood by the players, not the coaches. Indiana vs. Duke.

Indiana has been on a mission in this tournament ever since blowing its final game to Purdue. Knight has been cracking that whip hard as of late and the Hoosiers are in prime shape to knock off Duke as senior center Eric Anderson has raised his game in the tournament and younger players such as Alan Henderson and Damon Bailey have matured.

Prediction: Indiana

Michigan vs. Indiana Prediction: The Fab Five will square off against Indiana in the rubber match, after the two teams split during the season. This is where Michigan's run will end. Knight and the Hoosiers have too much experience and should be able to slow the pace to their liking. Coming off a huge Duke win, the Hoosiers will not be denied Monday night.

runs. A throwing error by the Temple shortstop allowed two more 'Nova players to cross home plate to up the lead to 7-3. Four runs, one hit. Thank you Temple.

Reliever Derek Woods picked up his first win of the year against three losses with three solid innings. The junior replaced freshman Dan Kusters, who recovered from a rough first inning to pitch four scoreless innings. Stopper David Herr halted a Temple rally in the ninth with two strikeouts to pick up his third save.

"I'm pretty damn proud of this team," said Head Coach George Bennett. "This is a young team with a lot of non-recruited players getting the opportunity to play and they are making up for the lack of talent. A prime example is [Dan] Mariniello."

Mariniello is hitting .390 on the season and was on-base four times against Temple. The center fielder has jump-started the 'Nova offense from the leadoff spot, leading the club in hits and runs scored. Pitcher Brad Baker is another player drawing praise from Bennett. The senior leads the team in ERA at 3.19 and has been "really gutty," according to Bennett.

The win at the Vet places 'Nova into the second round of the Liberty Bell Classic against West Chester, winners over Drexel April 14 at 3 p.m.

"We're just glad to still be in it [tourney]," said Bennett, when asked about playing in the Vet. "The players were a little more excited and they were more involved. We did have a lot of help, though [from Temple]."

This weekend the Cats will host the Eagles of Boston College starting at noon both days at McGeehan Field.

Rollie Massimino's ranting and raving will be missed on Villanova's sideline.

Opening day lifts spirits

By MICHAEL DeBLASI
Staff Reporter

It is a rite of passage unparalleled in the life of a baseball enthusiast. Whether a player or fan, in any level of the game, from little league to the major leagues, opening day is anticipated with the fervor of a joyous young child rushing to unwrap Santa's presents on Christmas morning. Opening day marks the annual renewal of America's most cherished creation. An invention of a prophetic man named Abner Doubleday, who envisioned a promising future for the game of baseball.

No one could have imagined, however, the state of the game in 1992. Enjoying economic prosperity and a raging popularity, the sport reigns as prominently as ever. Yet, too often the media headlines tell of alarmingly escalating player salaries, labor union disagreements, individual problems with substance abuse and private disgraces such as Pete Rose's gambling addiction or Julio Machado's recent murder arrest. A travesty occurs as the spirit of the game, which flourishes in the soul of all who love baseball, is forgotten.

Fortunately, saving grace will come this year on opening day, April 6. The day when starting lineups are exchanged for the first time in nearly six months. A day when questions -focusing on pitching staffs, off-season acquisitions and rookie prospects will begin to be answered. It is a day of hope for every player, coach and team in the game. A day when everyone is in first place and anyone can be an all-star. Opening day in baseball unfolds a new chapter each year in one of the greatest novels ever drafted. One that is filled with integrity, truth, determination, skill, knowledge, passion, joy and love — the esteemed elements of life to the humanitarian and the elements of baseball dearest to the baseball purists.

What did Doubleday create if and when he masterminded the concept of baseball? Webster's Dictionary defines baseball as "a game played with a hard rawhide-covered ball and wooden bat, by two opposing teams of nine players each. It is played on a field with four bases, forming a diamond-shaped circuit which a runner must complete to score a run."

Historians often refer to it as the national pastime but, however it is defined, baseball is truly America's game. Young children in little league grow up playing for fun and trying to imitate their favorite professional heroes. These heroes are grown men playing in the major leagues who make millions of dollars playing a child's game. Although the roots of baseball are planted in the youth of society, perhaps because of the basic innocence of the sport, it is a game enjoyed by all ages.

Envision a typical Sunday in August as a light breeze whispers on a bright, sunny afternoon. Forty thousand smiling fans are nestled into the friendly confines of a nostalgic stadium, eating hotdogs and popcorn, waving a pennant and rooting for their favorite players and team. The infielder, poised, anticipates gobbling up a one-hopper, while the outfielder stands on the freshly mowed grass crouching slightly, awaiting the chance to dive across the green landscape and catch a low-liner.

The hitter steps into the batter's box with 32 ounces of Louisville, Kentucky's best lumber in his hands. Only 60 feet, six inches, separates the hitter from the pitcher, the ultimate confrontation. The pitcher winds and hurls a white sphere at better than 90 m.p.h. toward home plate. In a matter of seconds and with the crack of the bat, the sphere soars 400 feet into the afternoon sky and lands gently in the outstretched arms of a thrilled young child.

The boy has a souvenir, a part of the game that he loves so much. The home team has won and the crowd exits for home. The day's game is over and a fantasy enters the mind of a wondrous child. There will be another game tomorrow and many more fantasies to come but, for now, a small boy tucks away into his bed and drifts asleep with a vision firmly in his mind, and a hard rawhide-covered ball held securely in his hands.

Where does basketball go now?

By CHAD PETROZZA
Copy Editor

"I couldn't believe it. I was waiting for someone to say April Fool's."

These words uttered by junior forward Calvin Byrd captured the chaotic atmosphere of the Villanova campus on that day. A day when Head Coach Roland Massimino resigned as basketball coach at the University and accepted the head coaching job at UNLV. It is no joke. Massimino is gone.

On Wednesday April 1, the campus awoke to what seemed to be just another spring day. Although the weather was fairly warm, one could see a snowball forming on campus, but everyone blew it off thinking it would melt. the snowball started forming with a rumor that Massimino had been approached by UNLV officials about its coaching vacancy. Big deal. "Rollie would never leave the University that he placed on the map back in 1985 ... right?" students said.

In the early afternoon more rumors began surfacing that Massimino called a player meeting and told of his decision to accept the job out west. Shortly thereafter the players confirmed the rumor, and everyone sat in awe of the size of this snowball. Then it became official, after 19 years at 'Nova Massimino decided to move on leaving behind nothing except this gigantic snowball.

It is easy to get caught up in the beauty of snow and forget one important detail — it melts. This problem faces the basketball program. What happens to this team when the snow melts? In other words, where do the Cats go from here?

Due to Massimino's sudden departure, several questions surround the program, both for current players and incoming recruits. If an adequate successor is found, many doubts will be erased.

But right now, three situations must be rectified in order for Villanova basketball to maintain its place among the Big East Conference's top programs. They are: the coaching situation, incoming recruit apprehension, and present 'Cats who need direction.

I couldn't believe it. I was waiting for someone to say 'April Fools.'
Calvin Byrd

The search for a replacement begins. Many names have surfaced and the list will keep growing. In selecting a coach the University comes to an important crossroad. Will they dish out the big bucks for someone well-known or will they look for a bargain-buy? In response Athletic Director Dr. Ted Aceto said, "I hope we hire the best coach for our situation."

The three front-runners at this time seem to be John Calapari, of the University of Massachusetts; Pete Gillen, of Xavier; and George Raveling, of the University of Southern California.

Calapari, a fiery coach who took his Minutemen to the Sweet 16 this year, has been likened to Kentucky's Rick Pitino. Gillen is a former assistant at Villanova and Raveling is a former player.

Also Manhattan's Steve Lappas and Tulane's Perry Clark may be in the running. Should the University decide to hire a current staff member, Assistant Coach John Olive would most likely be the choice.

Hopefully the new coach, whoever he may be, will be received with a little more respect than the students gave Massimino on his departure. The mocking cheers at the press conference were a total embarassment to the University. Whether you liked him or not, the fact remains that Massimino ran a clean program and brought notoriety to Villanova. He should be respected, not ridiculed. Although UNLV students are looked down upon by many, they can teach some people at this University a lesson in respect.

When Jerry Tarkanian resigned due to NCAA allegations, the student body responded to his departure with cheers of respect, not ridicule. And this for a man who ran one of the dirtiest programs in college basketball. Where did Massimino falter? An outstanding player graduation rate? Oh, in that case he is justly ridiculed. Beware to prospective coaches. It is not how you play the game, it is win, win, win. And if you win a national title, you better win another.

In addition to hiring a coach, 'Nova must find a way to keep its 1996 blue-chip recruiting class from withdrawing their commitments and looking elsewhere. Three recruits, Roscoe Harris,

Players surprised by Massimino's departure

By ANDY FITZPATRICK

The current Villanova basketball players reacted in a state of disbelief, shock and most of all surprise after former Head Coach Rollie Massimino announced to the team at lunchtime April 1 that he is leaving 'Nova to take the head coaching position at UNLV.

Massimino took time out before flying to Las Vegas to meet with his players for the last time. The meeting lasted between 20 and 30 minutes and was very emotional, according to the players.

"He [Massimino] was so emotional that he couldn't really talk," said junior center James Bryson. "He went around the room and started hugging all of us."

"I couldn't believe it. I was waiting for someone to say 'April Fools,' " said junior forward Calvin Byrd.

"I'm totally shocked," said Bryson. "That was the main reason I came — because of coach [Massimino]. I kind of wish I had a couple of years left. Maybe I'd leave and go with him."

Bryson and walk-on Marty McCarthy both emphasized that the team as a whole is sticking together. "We told everyone we were going to stay together and work with the young guys," said Bryson.

One of the younger players, freshman Ron Wilson, took the news especially hard. "It's like losing a member of your family but it's the best thing for him. Especially after 1985 there was a lot of pressure like the Big Five that he couldn't help."

Byrd stated concern for the younger players, saying "it hit them a lot harder than all the guys in my [junior] class. Jon Haynes transferred to play under coach and he hasn't had his chance yet."

"It leaves all of us [transfer Jon Haynes, four incoming recruits] in limbo," said Wilson. "We'll have to see about the new coach and what kind of new system there will be."

Sophomore Anthony Pelle expressed surprise at the move, saying that he went into Massimino's office every day and knew nothing of the happenings. When asked about any thoughts of transferring, Pelle responded that "it's too early to think about that now."

Although the players were shocked and disappointed, most realized that it was the best move for Massimino because of all the recent pressure by the local media concerning the Big Five and other controversies.

"The man's gotta be happy and he didn't look happy," said Byrd. "It's all about being happy. He's been taking heat from the media, alumni and everybody."

"You have to believe he knew that UNLV is one of the best places to coach," said senior Paul Vrind. "They can get anyone they want as far as recruiting nationally."

"It's definitely an end of an era," said McCarthy. "He [Massimino] said the move was not based on the players, nor the money. It was just time for a change."

Cats crack Temple in Liberty Bell

By ANDY FITZPATRICK
Sports Editor

For the past few weeks it has been extremely hard to play baseball because of the awful weather. But, given the way the baseball team is playing, it cannot get warm fast enough.

After starting the year 1-6, the Cats have reeled off an impressive 9-2 run, culminating with a 5-2 win at Rutgers April 1 to move over the .500 mark at 10-8. This past week the Cats' list of victims included two wins over both Connecticut and Temple.

The second win over Temple occurred March 31 in the first round of the Liberty Bell Classic at Veterans Stadium when 'Nova overwhelmed the Owls 7-4 with a four-run eighth inning rally that broke a 3-3 tie.

The rally was more of Temple's doing, though, than Villanova's. After a one-out Keith Conway single, Temple reliever Byron Kauffman issued four walks, three consecutive ones with two outs. The last two forced in two

THE POINT AFTER

Students mixed, but remain upbeat

By JUSTIN KESTNER
Assistant Sports Editor

News of Rollie Massimino's resignation as head coach of the men's basketball team spread quickly throughout the campus the afternoon of April 1. Passed off by many as an April Fool's Day prank, reality soon set in: Massimino was gone.

After 19 seasons and over 350 victories, Massimino ended his career in a sudden, shocking manner. Goodbye Main Line, hello UNLV. Student reactions ranged from surprise and disappointment to relief and excitement.

"I think it's a tremendous loss," said Student Government President Mark O'Rourke. "Rollie Massimino brought a lot of winning traditon and success to Villanova's basketball program. But I think we have to move forward. We really wish him well at UNLV."

But others such as Bob Downs, a junior communications major, expressed disapproval. "I think UNLV is definitely getting an excellent coach," Downs said. "However, I'm very disappointed in his decision because I think the juniors especially are losing out and I think it's kind of like a sellout. I don't see where the loyalty is."

"I'm just a little surprised because of the UNLV-type of ballplaying," said junior accounting major Larry Redmen. "Personally, I think he really just did it for the money."

Some feel Massimino's departure was due. The Cats have not had a spectacular year since 1988, when they came within a game of the Final Four. Was Massimino becoming complacent with his position? Did he feel he had accomplished everything after winning the championship in 1985? Was 1989, when the Cats were ranked 12th in some preseason polls but failed to reach the NCAA Tournament, a sign of a declining program?

"I think Rollie did a lot for the program but good riddance," said sophomore accounting major Brian Davis. "Don't let the door hit him on the way out."

"Rollie Massimino's a class guy and he's made his mark on Villanova," said sophomore political science major Jeff Langa. "He's won a championship and now it's time to move on. He's had a great team this year and he couldn't work with it. It just seems he needs a change of pace and a change of scenery."

Others believe Massimino's exit was premature. They feel he was unjustly forced out by those who value winning per-

West campus construction planned for '94 completion

By KATE SZUMANSKI
Assistant News Editor

The University is planning to build five new housing facilities at a cost of $25-30 million on the area of west campus located behind St. Mary's Hall, said John J. Gallen, executive director of Facilities Management.

"Optimistically, we will be able to open [the dormitory facilities] in the fall of 1994, but everything has to click into place between now and then," he said.

The goal of this phase of the west campus development project is to construct five apartment-style housing facilities for junior and senior students, said Gallen. "We envision right now two bedrooms of two students each with a common living room, kitchenette, bathroom and one-half bath" in each of the apartments, Gallen said. The kitchenettes will include a microwave, refrigerator and range, he said.

"All of the facilities will be contained within that space," he said. "There will be 30 apartments per building."

The process of hiring a developer for this construction is new to the University, said Gallen. "We put an advertisement in the Philadelphia Inquirer and the New York Times asking for an expression of interest in the project, aimed mainly at developers, for the design, build and finance of this project," he said.

The University has received approximately 40 inquiries from developers and has sent out requests and questionnaires for their qualifications, Gallen said. "We want to see if these people really have the experience to construct such facilities," he said. The responses are due back to the University April 13, he added.

"We then have 45 days to review them [the qualifications] and come up with a short list of those we feel are the best qualified. We will then submit a more detailed package to them [the developers] and ask them to make a proposal on this development," Gallen added.

"The five dormitories will be on the County Line Road side of the baseball field and will be within view of the baseball field," said Gallen. There will be four apartment buildings in a row and another down near the small peninsula between the baseball field and the soccer/rugby field on the other side, he added.

Tennis and basketball court replacements will be constructed on this area, said Gallen. "The others will be kept intact," he added.

The dining facility in St. Mary's Hall will be increased "to accommodate those small numbers of students who may want to have some sort of meal plan," said Gallen.

Former VU student to be sentenced

By ELIZABETH BARSZCZEWSKI

Stephen Maloney, former University student and member of the swim team, is now awaiting sentencing after standing trial following a series of events which began a little over three years ago.

In March 1989, Maloney was accused of entering the unlocked room of a female student on campus and attempting to make sexual advances towards her, said Radnor Township Police Detective William Zimmerman. The woman was able to beat the assailant away and then left to find help, Zimmerman said. Maloney was arrested by Villanova security later that morning.

Maloney was later acquitted in March 1991 of all charges by Judge A. Leo Sereni in a non-jury trial concerning his alleged assault of the female student in her room.

Upon hearing of this attack a second woman came forth to Radnor Township police and filed a complaint of rape against Maloney, Zimmerman said.

This second woman accused Maloney of raping her during Homecoming Weekend 1988 in his room at Stanford Hall.

Maloney was then charged with one count of rape and one count of corrupting the morals of a child, said Anne Osborne, sheriff of Delaware County. He was acquitted of both these charges, Osborne said.

Maloney was, however, convicted on one count of assault and one count of involuntary deviant sexual intercourse and may face a maximum sentence of 22 years in jail and $30,000 in fines, said William H. Ryan, district attorney of Delaware County.

'Nova's 150th anniversary marked by special events

By JENNIFER CASTELLI
News Editor

The University will mark its 150th year during a celebration that commences in September 1992 and lasts through September 1993, said Christine Lysionek, managing director of the sesquicentennial celebration.

The year-long commemoration begins the weekend of Sept. 18, concurrent with the traditional Parents' Weekend. The celebration will officially begin Sept. 19 with a parade of historical eras; a welcoming address by the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., University president; and a ribbon-cutting and symbolic balloon "lift-off," according to a preliminary schedule of events.

"The sesquicentennial is a time for renewal. It is a chance for us to reflect on our historical roots and examine why we are who we are," said Lysionek. The year-long celebration is also a community building activity that draws alumni, faculty, staff, students and the community to the University, she said.

St. Thomas of Villanova Church will be rededicated on the feast day of St. Thomas of Villanova Sept. 21. On Sept. 22, the Rev. Kail C. Ellis, O.S.A., dean of Arts and Sciences, will coordinate a dedication of the new liberal arts building, to be formally named the St. Augustine Center for the Liberal Arts.

Ellis will also be sponsoring the presentation of the Mendel Medal Award for outstanding achievement in the sciences.

A Sesquicentennial Scholarship Benefit Auction will be held Feb. 10, 1993. The auction of donated items will "benefit a new or existing scholarship fund," according to the schedule of events.

A series of academic conferences and lectures sponsored by various departments within the University will also commemorate the sesquicentennial year.

The Center for Peace and Justice Education will sponsor conferences on native Americans and Christopher Columbus. The Center will also sponsor the presentation of the St. Thomas of Villanova Peace Award Oct. 29.

The theatre department will present several productions in conjunction with the Villanova Playwrights Season, including "Compassionate Leave" and "The Mayor's Wife." There will also be a Playwrights Workshop series in which selected new pieces by Villanova playwrights will be performed in studio productions or staged readings.

The department of religious studies will be sponsoring several activities, including the annual St. Augustine Lecture, the Simon Shaheen and the Near Eastern Classical Music Ensemble and a lecture on "Particularity and Pluralism."

Parking costs raised

By LARISA EPATKO
News Editor

The cost of parking stickers will increase next year from $50 to $75 for the main parking lots and $100 for inner campus lots, according to the department of Public Safety.

The rise in parking fees was instigated "to cover the costs of providing parking and various other services, including roadway repair, lot improvements and striping," said Jeffrey Horton, director of Public Safety.

The $50 parking price has not changed in eight years, Horton added.

The price increase was approved by the budget committee and, in comparison to other parking fees in the area, the University still charges less, according to Horton.

Over 250 people are assigned to park at the new Liberal Arts building, which will leave available spaces on main campus for other faculty and staff, said Horton.

When west campus is developed, Horton said he hopes the University takes parking into consideration, especially with upperclass residents.

In order to streamline the parking registration process, Public Safety will hold walk-in registration from June 1 to August 28 at St. Clare House.

All faculty, staff and eligible students can purchase new parking hang tags or stickers for the 1992-93 academic year between the hours of 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Applicants are to bring a valid driver's license, vehicle registration and current Villanova identification, according to a Public Safety announcement. Arrangements may be made for faculty and staff to register through the mail.

Regular fall registration will be held on Aug. 1 for senior and junior commuter students and on Sept. 1 for sophomore and freshman commuter students. Senior and junior resident students may register Sept. 2, and all other students can register Sept. 3 and 4.

Enforcement of regulations will begin Sept. 7, and special registrations may be held upon request dependent upon resources, according to the announcement.

MOSCOW

President Boris N. Yeltsin maintained that he would indeed fight efforts put forth by the Russian Parliament to limit his powers and would use his authority to its greatest capacity to move ahead with much needed economic reforms.

Parliament leaders are demanding that Yeltsin relinquish some of his powers and ease the hardships caused by his market reforms.

A crucial session of the Congress of People's Deputies is set to be held, at which time a new constitution will be debated. The new constitution would replace the political system left by the Communists.

JERUSALEM

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir avoided a crisis in the governing Likud Party by persuading Foreign Minister David Levy not to resign due to a feud over sharing power.

The two parties came to a compromise shortly before Levy was to tender his resignation at the cabinet's weekly session.

Levy, the cabinet's strongest proponent of the U.S.-sponsored Middle East peace talks, also made known his harsh criticism of Shamir and the strains in Israeli-U.S. ties over negotiating strategies.

NEW YORK

Both Democratic presidential candidates, Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton and former California Gov. Jerry Brown, were forced to defend themselves amidst charges of hypocrisy and dishonesty during the New York Democratic primary.

Clinton faced questions concerning his draft status in the late 1960s after reports surfaced in both the Los Angeles Times and the Associated Press that Clinton had received an induction notice before entering an ROTC program in the summer of 1969.

When asked why he was never called into service after being eligible for more than a year, Clinton said, "It was simply a fluke I wasn't called, and there are no facts to the contrary."

Brown faced questions with regard to a Los Angeles Times study which showed that a large percentage of those people appointed to judgeships in the final years of his tenure had contributed money to both his senatorial and presidential campaigns.

"Nobody's happy. Everyone's miserable," said a senior Clinton campaign aide, adding that voter turnout in New York could be as low as 800,000. This is only half the turnout seen in 1988.

WASHINGTON, D.C.

An estimated half-million abortion-rights advocates marched April 5 in Washington, D.C.

The peaceful crowd was the largest to gather in Washington since the 1983 civil rights rally that commemorated the 20th anniversary of the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s March on Washington.

Abortion-rights activists chose to hold their demonstration just two weeks before the Supreme Court is scheduled to hear a Pennsylvania abortion case. The hearing of this case is expected to result in the placement of limitations on a woman's access to a legal abortion.

Women's Studies courses integral part of departments

By JENNIFER CASTELLI
News Editor

In light of the recent debate over the institution of the new Core curriculum in the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences, many have questioned the intentions of women's studies courses and their role in departmental curriculum.

Some faculty members fear that the women's studies courses offered within the departments are too politically directed. Dr. Colleen Sheehan of the political science department said in an April 3 edition of the Villanovan that she fears that the courses designed for the new Core curriculum will push a political agenda.

Sheehan added that she is afraid that women's studies courses will force the feminist issue.

"The women's studies courses in the Core are not new. They have been taught in the department for a number of years," said Dr. Barbara Wall, O.P., director of the Women's Studies program.

"Women's studies courses are primarily courses in a discipline developed by faculty in that discipline," said Wall. All faculty members in any given department and the Women's Studies Committee must approve a women's studies course before it is implemented into departmental curriculum, Wall added.

Women's studies courses are legitimate courses within the specific curricula of departments, not a separate department by itself, said Wall.

Wall denied that women's studies in any way try to force the feminist issue. "People who criticize women's studies courses are in effect criticizing ongoing contemporary research in areas of gender studies," said Wall.

"Women's studies are a perspective rather than just a subject matter," said Dr. Sally Griffith, who has taught many courses dealing with women's history. Most history courses are traditionally oriented and have not been sensitive to women, said Griffith.

Some faculty also believe that women's studies courses are not just about gender issues but human issues as well.

Students learn how factors such as gender, race and class make a difference in everyday life, said Dr. Marie McAllister of the English department. McAllister has taught several women's studies courses, including most recently the class Gender and War.

"To claim that these courses are peripheral to University curriculum would be to claim that any number of our courses in departmental curriculum are equally peripheral," said Wall.

Students who have taken women's studies courses generally speak positively about what they have learned from the courses.

"After I took a women's studies course, I began to notice how discrimination and stereotypes permeate every aspect of life, like in the movies and TV commercials," said a sophomore English major who is enrolled in the course Philosophy of Women.

"Women's studies courses change how we approach things and promotes an interest in thinking," said McAllister.

Wall added that the goal of women's studies courses is to "enable students to deal more adequately in the world in which they live."

New Liberal Arts Center construction continues

By ELIZABETH BARSZCZEWSKI
Assistant News Editor

The new liberal arts building, the St. Augustine Center for Liberal Arts, is scheduled to open in fall of 1992, said John J. Gallen, executive director of Facilities Management.

Construction on the facility has been going very well and is nearing completion, Gallen said.

The center is a 90,000-square-foot facility which includes office space, seminar rooms and a computer room set aside specifically for faculty use, said Gallen.

The center will also house all members of the liberal arts faculty, Gallen said. The faculty will be able to relocate to their new offices by the end of July, he added.

All offices in the new building will have windows providing faculty with a view of either one of the twin courtyards or a view of campus, said Gallen. All faculty members also will have the ability to be connected to the University's computer system from their offices, he said.

Six new seminar rooms also will be located in the center, said Gallen. Plans to convert the second floor of Vasey Hall into classrooms will have to be done after all the liberal arts faculty has moved out, Gallen said.

In total, there should be a net gain of 10 classrooms and some labs once the moving and renovations have been completed, Gallen added.

As of now there are no additional plans to construct more classrooms or labs, Gallen said. "With the plans to downsize in the next couple of years, I think we'll be able to work with what we have as a result of the construction," he said.

New ID card to be used in fall '92

By CHRISTINE FINGERHUT

New identification cards, nicknamed the "Wildcard," will be issued to University students next fall for access to dormitories and use in Connelly Center and the University Shop, said Dr. Richard Neville, director of Student Life.

Committees in the Student Life Office and the Business Office have been working for one year on plans to implement a new I.D. card. Similar cards have proven extremely popular on other college campuses, said Neville.

The main focus of the new I.D. card is its use as a key to the dormitories, said Neville. This will allow for a greater flexibility in security, he said. I.D. card readers will be installed on the main doors of all dormitories to allow students access to the dormitories during the day, but restrict access after midnight to the residents only, he added.

The new I.D. card will allow students to purchase items in the Lindback award winners named

From the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A. University president
Special to the Villanovan

I am pleased to announce that the 1992 Lindback Award for distinguished teaching will go to Dr. Robert L. Nydick of management and Dr. John Immerwahr of philosophy. I congratulate them on behalf of their students and colleagues who voted for them in recognition and appreciation of their fine work in the classroom. Their awards will be presented to them at graduation.

The Lindback Committee nominated three other faculty as finalists in this year's balloting. They were Dr. J. Porter Tuck, psychology, Dr. Martin Asher, economics and Dr. Ronald P. Hill, marketing. I would like to commend these finalists as well and offer my personal appreciation to them and all the other faculty who were nominated by their peers and students in this year's award process. As a University committed to undergraduate education, it is most important that we recognize and honor our gifted faculty who make teaching a major part of their commitment to the University. The Lindback Award is one small way in which we can show our appreciation for the diligence and care that our faculty bring to their teaching.

The Lindback Award is funded through a grant from the Christian R. and Mary F. Lindback Foundation. Terms of the grant allow the University to select two award winners each year, each of whom receive a cash prize of $1,000. No one can win the award more than once.

Anderson speaks on need for a new United Nations

By THOM ARNO
Staff Reporter

John Anderson, independent candidate for the U.S. presidency in 1980, spoke on "Does a New World Order Require a New United Nations?" April 3 in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

Anderson, former Congressman from Illinois (1961-79), was recently elected president of the World Federalist Association (WFA), a national organization dedicated to restructuring and empowering the United Nations.

The WFA looks to demand a new United Nations, one that possesses "the power, authority and funding to accomplish the high purposes set forth in the present U.N. Charter," Anderson said.

To do this, the WFA claims it needs a U.N. executive, Peace Force and Verification Agency.

The executive, similar to a secretary-general, should have the power to enforce U.N. laws on all violators, while the Peace Force would provide "back-up" enforcement," said Anderson.

The Verification Agency would monitor previously agreed-upon limits on national armaments and military forces, Anderson said.

A U.N. legislature with adequate powers and a judiciary composed of world and regional courts with jurisdiction over cases of violators of U.N. law are desired as well, Anderson said, adding that the WFA also wants a Bill of Rights, Environmental Agency and appropriate funding.

> The World Federalist Association (WFA) looks to demand a new United Nations, one that possesses the power, authority and funding to accomplish the high purposes set forth in the present UN Charter.
> John Anderson,
> president of the WFA

The Bill of Rights is geared toward protecting individuals from violations of their U.N. rights, and the Environmental Agency would have the power to "protect the global environment," Anderson said. Funding would have to be substantial and not subject to "the whims of national governments," he added.

The eight requirements would bestow the new United Nations with the "capacity to develop, enforce and abjudicate world law, with checks and balances to prevent usurpation of power," said Anderson.

At the end of the lecture, Anderson fielded questions from students. One student asked if giving the United Nations such militaristic powers to settle disputes was actually turning the United Nations into a "system where people had the power to punish ... not a system of social justice."

With peace-keeping missions, the United Nations should be confided with the power to dispense social justice and not be based on a punitive system, Anderson said.

The WFA plan requires the assistance of today's youth with a new sense of idealism and awareness of "today's problems," said Anderson.

Physics program trains minorities in engineering

By ANTHONY GIACCHINO
Staff Reporter

Dr. Alan J. Phares, a physics professor at the University since 1977, directs a special program for minority students from Philadelphia-area Catholic high schools in Mendel Hall each Saturday morning.

The purpose of the program is to train and encourage ethnic minorities in the fields of science and engineering. Phares said that ethnic minorities, such as blacks and Hispanics, are under-represented in these professions.

The immediate goals of the program are to strike an interest within the students which will lead them to further pursue these fields in college.

The Comprehensive Regional Center for Minorities in Philadelphia receives the funding for this program from the National Science Foundation.

The participating high schools include Little Flower, Archbishop Prendergast, Bishop McDevitt, Olney High School, Cardinal O'Hara and Archbishop Wood.

The class lasts from 8:45 to 11:45 every Saturday morning. The students are first exposed to experimentation and the relevant fundamental concepts are introduced and then developed.

Most of the topics that have been covered are consistent with those found in a college-level physics class, including simple pendulum motion, free fall, optics, vectors and Newton's Laws.

The 120 students have attended the classes since September. The program will continue through the month of June. During the summer session, the class will be held six hours a day for five days a week.

The program "gives the student a flavor of what it is like to explore deep analytical thinking. It also presents them with a view of mathematics and science different from what they have learned in their high schools, said Phares.

Phares said he hopes that the program will help them excel in their future scientific and mathematical education.

> I always tell them [the students] that they can reach any heights they want; it just depends on how much they invest.
> Dr. Alain J. Phares, Physics professor

"I think that this program is an excellent experience for me. I am able to associate with others from different schools, and I have a pretty good idea of what college will be like. I feel that I have learned a lot in this program, and I often use my knowledge from this class in my other classes at school," said one student.

"When I become a nurse, I will look back and remember this program and know that part of the reason I am here, doing what I want, is because of the experience I have received in this program," said another student.

"I always tell them that they can reach any heights they want; it just depends on how much they invest," Phares said.

New policy aids the environment

By JIM DOWNS
Staff Reporter

Food Services has begun a program that will allow students to bring their own cups to the continental breakfast, served Monday through Friday from 9 to 10 a.m. in the Day Hop.

The idea was suggested by a student who thought it would be environmentally safe and convenient to begin the program.

Mary McKenzie, director ot Food Services, said she agreed to the proposal and felt that it will be served as an experiment to see if a program can start on regular basis next fall in the other dining halls.

Allowing students to bring their own cups into the cafeterias will cut down on the amount of trash that accumulates as a result of styrofoam.

Students will not be allowed to take the cups out of the hall filled with any type of drinks. The policy of not being allowed to remove any type of food or drinks will still be in effect.

Students are not able to remove food from the cafeterias because it creates too much trash, and in the past, some students abused the system, said McKenzie.

The goal of instituting this program is to minimize the use of styrofoam and adopt china into the cafeterias. The University is presently unable to afford china because of administrative cuts and lack of workers to clean the dishes, McKenzie said.

The problem that arises from the new regulation is the lack of student participation, said McKenzie. About 150-180 students eat in the Day Hop during the continental breakfast and only three students bring their own cups.

Delta Gamma volunteers in Games for the Blind

The sisters of Delta Gamma Fraternity spent time volunteering at the Northeastern Pennsylvania Games for the Blind, April 4.

Members of Delta Gamma volunteered as timers, referees, line judges, counselors and huggers for a number of sporting events and activities including gymnastics and swimming.

Delta Gamma's philanthropy is Aid to the Blind and Sight Conservation.

Amy Sikorski, president of Delta Gamma, said "It's a great way to work hands on with our philanthropy."

"By participating in Blind Athletes Games, we are actually participating rather than just raising money for a charity," Sikorski said.

Giving the time to help others meant a lot not only to the atheletes but also to the volunteers, said Foundations Chairperson Tricia Gerds.

"I gained so much by participating because I felt like I was making a direct influence on their lives," said Gerds.

"It is good to see sororities like Delta Gamma invoking a positive influence on society," said Delta Gamm Public Relations person Courtney Dowling.

'Nova community joins in 1992 Greek Week games

By RYAN FANNON
Staff Reporter

University fraternities and sororities competed in the annual Greek Week events and fundraising March 28 to April 5. "Participation was good and it was a great way to show Greek spirit as a whole," said Julie Rospars, sorority coordinator.

The winners of Greek Week were Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity and Delta Delta Delta sorority.

The goal of Greek Week was to bring the Greek community together in an effort to show enthusiasm for the University's Greek system, according to Gary Bonas, associate director of Student Activities.

One of the highlights of the week was the Thing-a-thon, a fundraiser held April 4 at the University of Pennsylvania to benefit Action AIDS, said Rospars.

Members of the Villanova Greeks participated in various activities at the Thing-a-thon for 12 hours with volunteers from Penn and Temple, Drexel and West Chester universities.

Some of the events in Greek Week were skit night held April 2 in the Jake Nevin Field House, College Bowl in which sororities and fraternities competed in a trivia contest, and various other sports.

The fraternities that placed were Sigma Phi Epsilon, second place; Alpha Phi Delta, third; and Lambda Chi Alpha, fourth.

Among the sororities, Alpha Phi finished second; Kappa Kappa Gamma, third; and Alpha Omicron Pi, fourth.

The week ended with a Greek banquet April 5 at Horace P. Jerky's restaurant, where the winning sororities and fraternities received their awards.

Former runner appointed leukemia program chairman

Courtesy the Leukemia Society of America

Noted running star and commentator Marty Liquori has been appointed national chairman of the Leukemia Society of America's "Team In Training" program, an activity that enables runners of all abilities to participate in races and at the same time enlist support for the national voluntary health agency.

Liquori, a Villanova University graduate, first gained national recognition for his athletic feats back in 1968 when he became the second-youngest man to run the mile in under four minutes. With a No. 1 world ranking in the mile and 1500-meter runs in 1969 and 1971 and in the 5000-meter competition in 1977, Liquori continued his athletic experience into sports and broadcasting ventures.

In 1972, Liquori founded the Athletic Attic sporting goods chain, which has over 235 franchises nationwide and overseas. In the same year, he began his career as a commentator for ABC Sports.

The Leukemia Society's "Team In Training" program started in 1986, when Lucy Duffy, a participant in the New York City Marathon, passed out pledge forms to solicit donations for the Society for each mile she completed in the 26.2 mile course. Duffy's husband lost his life to leukemia two months after Lucy ran the marathon and raised $30,000.

In 1987, the first year of the "Team," 44 runners raised $320,000, making the event the largest single fundraiser ever held for the Society.

This year, over 500 runners from the New York City and Philadelphia metropolitan areas, Albany, Atlanta, Cincinnati, Kansas City, Milwaukee, Omaha and Tampa will be competing in the New York City Marathon. The runners will raise funds for the Leukemia Society's battle against leukemia and related diseases, which will strike over 80,000 Americans this year. Other teams are being formed to raise funds around other races held throughout the country.

"Team In Training" members receive a special gift package and tee-shirt and are invited to participate in special training sessions and parties.

"It's so great to see people around the country who are into physical fitness and are also channeling that energy to help the many children and adults with leukemia," said Liquori. "I'm honored to be selected as chairman of 'Team In Training' and will do all that's within my power to stop this tragic disease from taking more lives."

For information about "Team In Training," leukemia and related diseases, contact the Leukemia Society of America at 800-955-4LSA.

Hood College freezes tuition

In contrast to the national trend of skyrocketing tuition costs, fees at Hood College will be frozen for students entering the 1992-93 academic year.

For the first time in 20 years, this private college for women is holding firm on cost — tuition remains at $12,078, with room and board still at $5,675.

"It was a decision the board made to demonstrate their commitment to families paying the high cost of education," said Nancy Gillece, director of admissions.

Though Hood officials will not know how the announcement will affect enrollment for 1992-93 until the May 1 application deadline, Gillece said the feedback has been very positive.

"People appreciate this commitment," added Gillece, who said that the school is not certain how many years the freeze will last.

A subcommittee reviews costs annually and comes up with the tuition fees, she said.

Poster touts skiing and studying

Vermont's governor recently revealed a slick new poster with a skiing theme to recruit students to the state's 23 public and private schools.

Gov. Howard Dean displayed the poster at a press conference without apologies for its recreational slant.

The poster, which lists the state's public and private schools read: "Vermont: It's a Great Location for an Education. Want to make tracks in your field of choice? Look to Vermont."

The poster features a student reading at her desk, which has a computer on it. Behind her, colorfully-clad skiiers can be seen on a steep slope, and her state-of-the-art ski equipment is prominently featured.

More Harvard grads serve as clerks

The number of Harvard Law School graduates serving as legal clerks to judges has increased by 50 percent from 1982.

Currently, 157 graduates are clerking at the state and federal levels in 32 states, and 12 are on the Supreme Court.

In addition, 61 Harvard alumni are at the U.S. Courts of Appeal, 66 at the U.S. District Courts, 15 at state supreme courts, two at lower state courts and one at other federal courts.

Chavez to teach Chicano studies

National labor leader Cesar Chavez has agreed to teach a Chicano studies course during Spring Quarter at the University of California, Santa Barbara.

Chavez made the plight of migrant farmworkers national news by organizing consumer boycotts of fruits and vegetables and publicizing the dangers of pesticides.

He has accepted a one-time position to teach a class on the history of the United Farm Workers, the labor union he founded, reported The Daily Nexus, the student newspaper.

"It is unprecedented. I think we're very lucky because it isn't often you get a celebrity teaching a course," said Yolanda Broyles-Gonzales, who heads the Chicano Studies Department.

Broyles-Gonzales said she believes Chavez chose to teach at the Santa Barbara campus because the Chicano Studies Department was the first of its kind established in the nation.

Cafeteria food scam reported

If you ask other students, the motive had to be financial — good taste certainly had nothing to do with it.

Police at Oregon State University have uncovered a scam involving 27 students who falsified computer records to receive free food from university food services.

Police allege that junior Rehan Ahmed Zakai, 23, who works in the student identification center, was the main instigator of the scam that netted over $25,000 worth of university food over a one-year period, the school paper The Daily Barometer reported.

Police believe Zakai entered the names of 27 students, including himself, into university records showing that they paid for a university meal plan, when in reality they had not.

According to the Daily Barometer, 25 of the 26 other students have confessed and all have agreed to repay the school's food services and face criminal charges of first-degree theft or aggravated first-degree theft.

Award increases

By College Press Service

The House overwhelmingly approved a bill March 26 to increase the maximum Pell Grant award and allow as many as one million more middle-income students to participate in the program.

In a bill to reauthorize the Higher Education Act, the House voted to increase the maximum grant from $2,400 to $4,500 a year for needy students.

The bill also would extend Pell eligibility to more middle-income students with family incomes above $35,000 a year. An additional one million students could become eligible for grants under the bill, House aides said.

But House education leaders also dropped a controversial plan to convert the grant program to an entitlement with guaranteed funding. Some Democrats joined conservatives in questioning the cost of the plan, which was approved by the House education committee last year.

The most recent action effectively ends debate on the entitlement plan, at least for this year. The Senate already dropped its entitlement plan in February citing a lack of support.

Many student groups and educators expressed disappointment with inaction by Congress, saying an entitlement would have provided needed guarantees to low-income students struggling to pay for college. As an entitlement, Pell Grants would no longer be subject to the annual appropriations process that often leaves the program short of its authorized funding level.

"We agree that this bill is a step forward, but we're disappointed that the House could not bring forward a bill that is a giant step forward," said Selena Dong, legislative director for the United States Student Association.

Involuntary deviant sexual intercourse is a first degree felony and carries with it a maximum prison sentence of 20 years and a $25,000 fine, Ryan said. Maloney's conviction on one count of indecent assault may earn him a sentence of up to two years in jail and a $5,000 fine, Ryan added.

Following Maloney's jury conviction he filed post-trial motions, citing what he felt to be errors in the proceedings, said Osborne who was an assistant district attorney for Delaware County at the time and handled the case on appeal for the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

Maloney filed these motions on two grounds, Osborne said.

First, the defense felt that the court had been prejudiced toward Maloney by testimony given by the victim, said Osborne. In her testimony, the victim reported hearing about another attack on campus, Osborne added.

The defense also made the argument in their post-trial motions that the jury may have been influenced by a newspaper article about the case, said Osborne. The headline of the newspaper article read, "Ex-Nova student denies charges." Judge Joseph T. Labrum spoke to the jurors individually and all said that they either had not seen it or had not read it once they saw the headline and realized it concerned the case at hand, Osborne said.

Labrum decided to arrest judgement and granted Maloney a new trial.

Osborne countered these motions, arguing that in no way did the victim ever refer to Maloney in her testimony. The victim never identified him, said Osborne. She could have come forward in the hopes that there might be more education on campus concerning rape and assault, Osborne added.

Osborne also argued against the notion that the newspaper headline unduly prejudiced the jury. It was the position of Osborne that the headline did not influence the jury since they had already heard that Maloney was denying the charges during the court proceedings, she said.

The superior court then reversed Judge Labrum's decision and reinstated Maloney's conviction, said Osborne.

"We're certainly gratified by the decision of the superior court which reversed the judge's decision to overturn the conviction by the trial court," said Ryan. "It has been the position of this office that there was no error in the trial," Ryan said.

Maloney did appeal to the State Supreme Court to hear his case but they denied his appeal and the conviction of the trial court still stands.

Labrum, as well as defense attorney John Duffy, could not be reached for comment.

When contacted by the Villanovan, Maloney was unable to comment on the specifics concerning his trial due to the legal implications of the case. He did, however, express his feelings regarding the case saying, "The entire fight to prove my innocence has been a frustrating experience."

Florida professor studies student responses to death

By College Press Service

The 1990 murders of five college students may help other communities cope with similar tragic circumstances, said University of Florida researchers who studied the way students and citizens responded to the killings.

"We're going to produce a report that will be used primarily as a guide for law enforcement officials, so if something like this happens in another community, they'll have a basic idea of which groups are likely to be affected and what kind of reactions can be expected," said Dr. Michael Herkov, an assistant professor of psychiatry at the University of Florida's School of Medicine.

Herkov and co-researcher Monica Biernat, a University of Florida social psychologist, conducted surveys of students and Gainesville residents and how they coped with fear and stress in the aftermath of the killings.

Herkov said there was little data on how different groups of people responded to such tragedies. The idea behind the study, funded by the National Institute of Justice, was to develop profiles of how people might be expected to react.

Other studies have dealt with community stress in natural disasters such as tornadoes or hurricanes. But a serial killing is different, Herkov said.

"With this type of event, you never really know when it's over. In fact, there were months here when no one had been arrested," he said. "People didn't know what was going on. That's a very different psychological event because the stressor never leaves."

Although students reported high stress levels, the researchers also found that community residents reported feeling a great deal of stress. Forty-one percent said their lives were "devastatingly disrupted" by the murders. It also appeared that students recovered more quickly than others in the community, Herkov said.

Nearly half of those surveyed said the lack of information from the police and the sense of mystery increased their stress and fear.

"There appears to be a very subtle line — too much information appears to frighten people, but keeping things secret tends to frighten them also," Herkov said.

New Wildcard

Connelly Center, the University Shop and Cafe Bartley, said Neville. The ID card will also be accepted by the laundry machines in place of quarters, he said.

The ID card will work from a declining balance which will be billed to the student, said Neville. At the beginning of each semester, students will be notified of a minimum amount to be placed in an account, he said. The account will work as a credit to each student's social security number, he added.

The new ID card will maintain its uses as identification for access to on-campus facilities and meals in the dining halls, said Neville.

Current University students will not need to get a new ID card because each account balance will be accessed by the student's ID number and by stickers like those currently used to check out books from Falvey Library, he added.

After a contest held to name the new ID card, the All-campus Card Marketing Committee selected the "Wildcard."

The University is working with Griffin Technologies to expand the uses of the "Wildcard." Griffin Technologies supplies the ID cards currently used by University students.

'Nova yearbook recognized in national competition

The 1991 Belle Air Yearbook has received two national awards from professional press associations.

The University publication was named a "Pacemaker" by the Associated Collegiate Press (ACP) as one of the eight best yearbooks in the country. An award-plaque will be presented to the Belle Air advisor, Dr. Joseph Kinney, English, at a ceremony during the ACP convention in Chicago next October.

The Belle Air was also honored for its "Medalist" rating in a nationwide competition by the Columbia Scholastic Press Association.

Last fall, the Belle Air was unanimously selected to be featured in the Northeast Class of '91 Yearbook, a regional showcase of the 12 best yearbooks from among 2,000 competitors from Maine to Virginia and from the East Coast to Indiana, Kinney said.

"I'm proud that the 1991 staff has been recognized nationally for continuing Villanova's outstanding tradition of creative and journalistic excellence. And I am hopeful that the 1992 yearbook will continue to achieve a favorable response from its readers and evaluators," said Kinney.

The 1992 edition of Belle Air is expected to be available on campus before the end of April.

Juniors, sophomores and freshmen interested in joining the 1993 yearbook staff should contact Kinney.

Professor's remarks test bounds of academic freedom

By College Press Service

The chairman of a black studies department, a university football coach, a gay campus minister and a philosophy professor — these four have more in common than most would think.

On the increasingly politically correct campuses of the 1990s, Leonard Jeffries, Bill McCartney, the Rev. Peter John Gomes and professor Michael Levin have found themselves in the middle of an academic freedom fight that has more faces and sides than possibly imagined.

Jeffries was the latest to feel the heat when the City College Board of Trustees voted March 23 to have Edmund Gordon, a retired Yale University professor who served as the chairman of Yale's black studies department, replace Jeffries as chairman of City College's black studies program.

Although Jeffries will remain at the school as a tenured professor, he has told The New York Times he will file a lawsuit against the school over the violation of his academic freedom.

Jeffries' removal as chairman was the result of a speech he gave in July at a black arts festival. "You can't trust the white boy," Jeffries told the largely black audience. He added that Jews and the Mafia conspired in Hollywood to portray blacks unfavorably in the movies and that Jews helped finance the slave trade.

Immediately following the speech, city and state government officials as well as members of New York City's large Jewish and Italian communities urged City College officials to take some kind of action against Jeffries.

There will also be three major keynote addresses about St. Augustine to precede a conference coordinated by the Rev. John Rotelle, O.S.A., on the saint's life. The conference will be an "exploration of contemporary social issues within the context of the teachings and influence of St. Augustine," according to the schedule of events.

"This is an important opportunity for students to get involved and experience some things that they might never get a chance to again," said Lysionek.

The history department will serve as the host site for the 1992 annual meeting of the Pennsylvania Historical Society. Also, the Irish Studies Department will sponsor the annual meeting of the American Conference of Irish Studies. The conference is entitled "The Great Hunger: Ireland and the United States."

The steering committee in charge of the sesquicentennial planning put out a call for volunteers and divided those volunteers into 10 subcommittees. "We had a very strong response. One hundred and twenty people from all walks of campus life helped to generate ideas for this," said Lysionek.

The steering committee also worked with existing student organizations on campus to coordinate events.

The Interfraternity Council and the Panhellenic Association will be commissioning a time capsule to be constructed that is representative of life at Villanova in 1992, said Gary Bonas, associate director of Student Activities. This will be the first time that the University has ever had a time capsule.

The time capsule will be buried on campus in a ceremony and it will be recovered at the University's bicentennial celebration in 50 years, Bonas said.

The Special Olympics Fall Festival, Homecoming Weekend, Martin Luther King Jr. Day observances and the New Student Orientation Program will all incorporate aspects of the sesquicentennial celebration into their annual program. The Annual Jazz Festival sponsored by the department of music activities will be expanded "to achieve a representation of international performers," according to the schedule.

Several events will be held for faculty, staff and alumni members of the Villanova community, including a Spirit of Philadelphia Brunch Cruise April 25, 1993.

Promotion and publicity of the event will be carried out in several ways, said Lysionek.

Two separate sesquicentennial information kits will be sent to alumni, faculty, staff, students, parents and the press. The first kit will be sent to outline major events occurring between September 1992 and January 1993. The second kit will cover the calendar from February 1993 to September 1993. The kits will also include ticket information and a calendar of events, highlights and descriptions of major programs and activities.

Also, two sets of 24 sesquicentennial logo light pole banners will line Lancaster Avenue from Galberry Hall to Stone Hall. There will also be banners for Austin Hall at the Admissions entrance, the front of Kennedy Hall and the main gate side of Connelly Center. There will also be three ceiling banners for du Pont Pavilion and six large banners for light poles in the stadium.

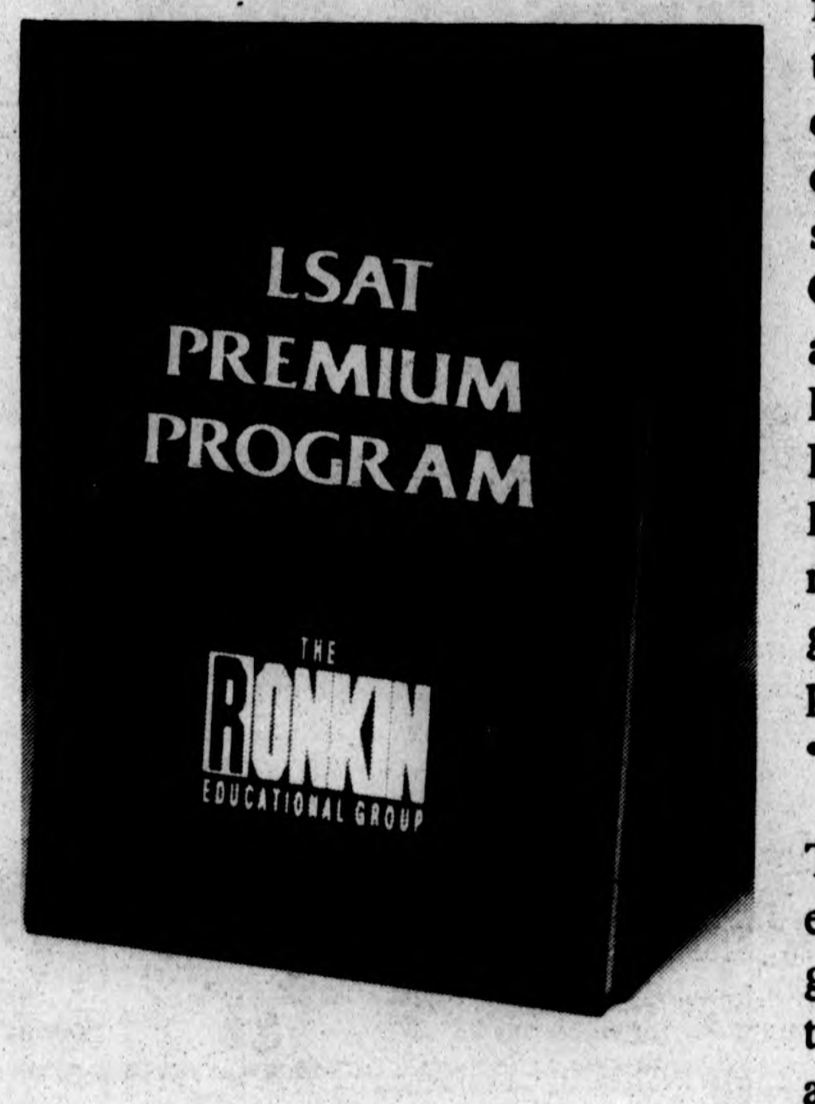
The induction ceremony will be held in Corr Chapel at 5 p.m. April 12. Faculty advisor, Dr. Robert Stokes will be assisted by the current officers during the ceremony. They are: Robert Pyskadio-president, Dean Libutti-vice president; Sue Wall-treasurer; Geoffrey Rosamond and Laura Schiller-secretary; and Joseph Guarino-senior week representative. Present circle members are encouraged to attend. A reception in Connelly Center immediately follows the ceremony.



Ronkin's New
LSAT Premium Program:
The Best Way To Prepare For The LSAT

If you're one of the nation's 95,000 applicants determined to get into an accredited law school, you know the competition is tough. Since there are only 44,000 openings, a high score on the LSAT is crucial.

That's why Ronkin created the LSAT Premium Program which offers a choice of three varied levels of assistance.

• LSAT Preparation Course
Using the most recently updated curriculum, our 40-hour course stresses critical thinking, argument analysis and logical reasoning. Besides classroom time, our comprehensive LSAT course provides live tutorials, three diagnostic exams, three practice exams, a computer-based tutorial program, homework materials that include released LSATs, and a toll-free Dial-A-Teacher line. Two-day clinics, which are included in Ronkin's LSAT Gold and Platinum Packages, are also available for an additional fee.

• LSAT Gold Package
In addition to the 40-hour LSAT course, Ronkin's LSAT Gold Package includes our two-day LSAT Intensive-Study Clinics offered immediately prior to LSAT examination dates. These clinics concentrate on Logical Reasoning and Logic Games. The Gold Package also includes our Law School Success Program which covers law school exam preparation, legal writing, legal research, and career planning.

• LSAT Platinum Package
This plan provides everything you'll need to get into law school and to be a success. Enroll and you'll receive our LSAT Preparation Course, LSAT Intensive-Study Clinics, Law School Success Program, plus our Law School Selection and Application Assistance Programs.

So if you're looking for the best in LSAT and law school preparation programs, call The Ronkin Educational Group.

Omegas — For most of you this is the last personal you will read. These last three years have been a blast. Thank you all for taking me under your wing sophomore year and making me a part of your elite group. Good luck to all of you in the future and never forget the good times. Love forever, the President of Omega Omega Omega

To the cranks of G-3, now that the year has come to an end, we wonder where the year has gone. We loved the good times, all the bad . . . wait a minute we were never there!! J.M. + K.B.

The '92 newspaper staff — Karen: half-way there — thanks for putting up with me! I know my problems amuse you. I am truly sorry that he's graduating — you know who I mean. Liz — you and I need to find attainables and stop obsessing. John — we will have an awesome time at the formal tonight. Chad — one day you too, will master the art of border taping. Pete — El remember this for future reference. Tom — Miami rules! Maybe I'll bring you back some souvenirs. Coleen: remember I warned you! Nick — good luck w/o the Dave-Man. You have to find a lot of new writers. MCM

Mike — Dance with me!

Tom — Are you JAZZED? I'm JAZZED! Love always, Liz

Feats — You wild women! Karen — I have organized the shower, you just need to let me know where you are registered. I am sure the rest of your colleagues will bring the tupperware. And to the rest of you Features women — you guys are awesome. Do not let Karen's impending nuptials upset the fine organizational skills your section has displayed as of late. — Liz

MK — Isn't it strange how life works? One day you are in love with a sax player, the next it's a Bakerboy. I have learned a lot this year. You tend to grow up over ice cream and intense conversation in Connelly. What will I do without you over the summer? Who can I go to in desperate need of a hug? But . . . I'm over him, I'm really over him! Love you lots, L. (a/k/a Lucy, a/k/a Sally, a/k/a the one who is sick of getting the fuzzy end of the lollipop.)

To all my friends (and you know who you are): "Life is a cosmic giggle and I am ready to start laughing!" You are all the BEST (especially for putting up with me for these three years). Time has flown by, so I guess that means I've had fun. If any of you dare to forget me and all the good times we've had . . . I vow to make your future lives miserable. Keep smilin'. Love "N-O-T-E-S" xoxoxoxo

Darkman — Where are you? Are you still a student here at 'Nova? Just 10 more days and you can party with the cool crowd! Can you believe it, I remembered where the office was. Call me. You know who.

Kristin — So are you gonna become a real student again next semester? I need someone to go to Wendy's with every day after classes. Have a great summer. Get yourself over to Kelly's with us before the summer! — Heidi

MAGS — This is your farewell personal. Too bad we can't publicly broadcast your personal life anymore. Happy Belated 22nd Birthday. Yes you are older than me. Good luck and don't forget us peons when you move onto bigger and better things. — Heidi

Personals

Tom, Chad, and Pete — Janet and I challenge you to a battle of the best apartment — meaning the best party!! Monta and Janet

Hi Mar! Well, we've survived Shakespeare and soon we're off to Sienna — what a great way to spend the summer. Keep thinking Armani. Good luck with exams! Love, Maura

Criblez — How can this be? You're leaving. I've never had an issue without YOU! Ooo, withdrawal! It's been a long, strange, demented three years but it's been worth it! Hey, you're cool! Love, Maura

Fellow Hot News Babes — The issues just flew by didn't they? — NOT. Thanks for so much, especially for listening to all my little stories about the man I currently/ formerly/ maybe/ sort of/ still/ formerly like. God help me! What will we do all summer without our weekly dose of ROLLERMAN? Maybe there's still hope for the News Eunuch — you never know what could develop over the summer. Love you guys always, Betsy

APP — It was the best of times, it was the worst of times . . . you guys are the best. Even though we may be going our separate ways, always remember these last eight months. I doubt that I will ever find such a great group of friends. I mean, who else would endure four months of MAHIO stories and the occasional superfluous scope updates? Number 44 forever. I love you all lots. — Liz, Betsy, Dizzy Lizzy, El and the former Mrs. Mahio wannabe

Larisa and Jen — News hips. I can just see it — a double wedding with the two of you and ROLLERMAN and the NEWS EUNUCH. The two of you will have to fight over which one you want. Can't wait till next semester — I will have many more stories to tell. Can I just tell you! Love you both, your assistant (not your favorite). — Liz/Betsy

Kate — Hey baby, this semester really wasn't so bad. Thanks for everything — especially all your comforting advice about that ever-present, clueless, potential hook-up. Hello! Could he buy a clue! Can't wait till next semester and those to come. Thanks for also keeping my secret pertaining to my "secret love." Oh, how I do love Thursdays. Love ya, your Port Richmond Connection

Brynn — How many hours have we spent talking in your room? And all about MEN. I've come to this conclusion: men stink. Well, maybe not all of them — there are some exceptions. Remember Nov. 5, 1991? Within 10 yrs. I will not be marrying anyone I currently know. UGH! Could you imagine that. I love ya babes! Stop listening to all that sad music! There's hope for you yet. After all, if I could get over MAHIO — you can do anything. — Elizabeth

To the sisters of AOII — "Sometimes, when I'm all alone, I think about my life — think about good times, old friends, special moments and places — and I am awed by my experiences . . . " Thanks for four wonderful years of friendship and a lifetime of sisterhood!! Alpha love always, Antoinette

Hey Group 26 — Four fantastic years together . . . only 30 days 'til graduation. Thanks for all the great memories. Special hugs to: "Tough" Tara; "Messy" Matt; "Marvelous" Mike; Devin; Jeff K.; and Ray (my B'day buddy)!!! Keep smiling, "Adventurous" Antoinette

What have you learned?

Can you believe it? The Villanovan publishes its last issue of the semester today. Warm weather and "quad ball" are back. The end is near.

What memories will you take with you into the summer? The year has been filled with events. What have you learned?

From our perspective, it has been an intense year. In these pages, we read the horrible and moving story of a Villanova rape victim, who shared her experience in an open letter to the University community. We learned not only that rape exists on our campus, we also found that it shatters lives here.

In November, we debated multiculturalism, and we considered the proposed Liberal Arts Core curriculum. The paper served as a forum in which members of our community voiced their opinions. We challenged the so-called "Concerned Students of Villanova," and questioned the politically correct motives of people who said the College Republican's advertisement should not have been published.

We learned that diversity frightens people, and listened to the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., as he reminded us that Villanova endorses "the exchange of ideas in the search for truth and knowledge."

Recently, we engaged in debate over academic freedom. Many people have voiced their opinions about whether or not the Democratic Socialists of America should have been permitted to post flyers advertising a pro-choice march. We questioned our own ideas about a university, and wondered if a balance could be achieved between our Catholic identity and free expression.

The issues of today will continue into next year. We ask everyone to challenge themselves and grow in debate. Take these memories — along with memories of fun and friends — with you; they are marks of an educated person.

Good luck on finals, and have a safe and happy summer.

O'Rourke's term successful

A year ago Mark O'Rourke began his tenure as Student Government president confronted by doubts and uncertainty due to his lack of experience and his controversial win in a run-off election against Anston Asbury. Now at the conclusion of his term, we believe O'Rourke has erased those doubts and improved Student Government's standing with both the administration and the students. Through his actions, not just proposals, he has improved the quality of student life and made strong in-roads for the incoming Student Government and president-elect Ken Batchelor.

O'Rourke's strengths are his willingness to confront and criticize administration on the students' behalf and his dedication and organization. He met regularly with Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., University president, and created administration awareness of student issues. Also, his dedication and organization are displayed in his knowledge of Student Government issues and his actions at Senate meetings. O'Rourke began his term without experience, but his dedication and willingness to listen, to both students and administration, allowed him to be successful. All passed Senate proposals were initiated by Student Government in the last year.

O'Rourke stepped into office last year lacking experience and the respect of administration and many students. He was able to overcome these doubts and provide a strong voice for students. In just two years, Student Government has overcome the embarassing tenure of Chris Sperduto and regained respectability. Hopefully, the new Student Government will pick up where O'Rourke left off.

Coach deserved better farewell

To the Editor:

Nineteen years! What does that mean to you? Since 1973, Rollie Massimino has been the head coach of the Villanova basketball program. Yet, on April 1, when his resignation was officially announced at the Jake Nevin Fieldhouse, the crowd neglected to remember this service, cheering at the news.

Granted, the Big Five exists in disarray today and Villanova lost in the first round of the NIT this year, but Rollie has done what few people have accomplished. He is not only one of the few coaches in college basketball to have won a national championship, but he has served as symbol of excellence for Villanova, molding young, undeveloped athletes into men of athletic and academic integrity. Rollie deserves much more than a heartless good-bye. Rather, we owe him a thank-you for dedicating his heart and soul to Villanova.

To the Editor:

I am sure that the Villanovan will receive many letters about Rollie Massimino's move to the University of Nevada — Las Vegas (UNLV). Choosing mostly to voice my opinions among my friends, I have never written anything to a paper to express myself. But feeling so strongly about an act by some of the student body, I feel compelled to write. This act that I refer to is the applause that broke out at the press conference when it was announced that Rollie was leaving.

I am shocked that the students would act this way. Rollie Massimino is the factor that put Villanova on the map in the incredibly competitive world of college basketball, and it was Rollie who contributed greatly to the good name and image of Villanova University.

These students should be ashamed of themselves. In my opinion it was a spiteful thing to cheer the farewell of a great coach and a great man. Perhaps they have forgotten Rollie's 100 percent graduation rate for his seniors, or his 16 winning seasons, or his 11 NCAA tournament appearances, in which five of these resulted to a trip to the Elite Eight, and one resulting in a national championship.

Maybe these past couple of seasons haven't been as great as expected. We do expect winning at Villanova, we should not demand it. I have been a Villanova basketball fan as long as I can remember, since my father went to Villanova. While I agree that it may have been time for a change, I do not agree with blasting Rollie as he leaves, which is what these thoughtless, cheering students did.

I, for one, would like to wish Massimino well with his new job, and to thank him for the wonderful memories.

Brendan Walsh

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to the behavior of Villanova students at the press conference held at Jake Nevin Field House to announce Coach Massimino's acceptance of the head coach position at UNLV.

"Coach Mass" has worked at Villanova for 19 years, and in those years he has established himself as a first-class coach and the University as a first-class program.

Regardless of personal attitudes towards Rollie, there has to be some level of respect for a man who has given so much to the University; both in athletics and to the entire Villanova community.

Is it truly necessary to boo and scorn a man who has given so much to our University? Massimino has loyally served Villanova for 19 years, and we thank him with "Nah Nah Nah Nah, Hey, Hey, Hey, Goodbye?" This vulger show of disrespect embarrassed me, and angered me. The only thanks we can give for 19 years of service are jeers.

What about the players? They have lost more than a coach; they have lost a friend, a confidant, a father-figure, an individual who has held great love towards them. How did we respect our team April 1? Did we support members of our community? No, rather we made their frustrations greater by dividing loyalties and ostracizing them.

What about the new coach? Will he feel truly welcome in a school where the students are happy to see a man who has become almost an institution leave?

Regardless of your personal attitudes towards 'Nova basketball, Massimino or the athletic program at V.U. in general, the events at the press conference should be carefully scrutinized and evaluated. When you graduate, don't you want to feel that your four years here have made a positive impact on the university? Maybe someone might miss you; maybe you influenced someone in your undergraduate four years. What about 19?

Good job, 'Nova. At least we made the news.

Alumni disgusted and embarrassed by cheers

To the Editor:

I would like to remind the student body of an event that happened a few short years ago. Does the year 1985 bring back any memories? Well since the memory of the student body seems to be so short, I'll remind you — NCAA Championship. Who led us to that championship? Rollie Massimino.

No one has done more for the image and reputation of our school over the last 19 years than Massimino. The display put on by the students at the press conference announcing his departure was appalling. To cheer that this man is leaving our school is disgraceful. If there is displeasure with his recent performance, well I guess I can understand that, but it seems to me that it could be put aside in deference to the contributions that Massimino has made to our school over the years.

I was embarrassed and almost ashamed to be associated with the school that means so much to me. I expected more from our student body then the fair weather attitude associated with professional sports. Villanova is a fine institution and deserves more thoughtful and mature conduct from its representatives. If this behavior is indicative of the caliber of students being admitted to Villanova these days, I strongly suggest that the Admissions department review its admissions process and criteria.

To the Editor:

I was completely apalled and embarrassed to see the lack of respect that Villanova students displayed in reaction to the announcement of Rollie Massimino's departure. Regardless of whether or not it was "time" for Rollie to leave as head coach, that is not the overwhelming point.

The bottom line here is the attitude of some of the students which was so callously expressed to the media.

More importantly than basketball or academics, are the values that Villanova tries to instill in its students. Respect, loyalty and dignity all seem to have been forgotten here.

Kimberly A. Hutman

To the Editor:

I had a dream April 3. Villanova was playing basketball somewhere; I do not know where. They won because everyone was happy. I was in a small room with windows all around talking with someone about the team. I do not know who it was. Then in walks Rollie Massimino. He was wearing a white long-sleeve shirt with brown stripes and a tie. I got up off the table I was sitting on and went over to him..

I put my arms around him and said, "I will miss you," and started to cry. When I backed away I saw tears in his eyes. I then walked out of the room down a long well-lit hallway, picked up an old time white Villanova windbreaker and said to myself, "Handle it." Then I awoke, crying. It was around 4:30 a.m. I lay in bed sobbing; thinking about Villanova basketball and Villanova.

My association with Villanova basketball began before I arrived here as a freshman in 1966. My brother Joe was here and he introduced me to Villanova and Villanova basketball.

I can remember sitting in the stands watching a Villanova University of Pennsylvania game that wound up here 32-30 in the Quakers favor; I cried and I was proud.

I thought about sitting in the rain under a poncho in come God forsaken place in Southeast Asia with a pocket radio and an ear plug in my ear listening to the 1971 NCAA men's basketball championship.

We lost, but I cried and I was proud. Then Jack Kraft left and along came a guy named Rollie Massimino. "Never heard of him," I said to myself, but "I will give him a chance."

I got to know Massimino after I arrived here in September 1979. I came to appreciate more what he stood for and what he was trying to do.

On April 1, 1985, I was sitting in my dad's TV room watching the NCAA men's championship basketball game (my dad will be 80-years-old this July and has always been a Villanova fan and part of the Villanova family.) When Dwyane McClain picked up the basketball after the clock read 00:00, my dad and I cried and we were proud. But, on April 1, 1992, I watched a press conference; watched and listened to Villanova students cheering and singing after the announcement of Massimino's resignation. I sat there and cried, but I was not proud.

As I lay in bed and tried to understand why, I hoped that the greeting given to the next men's baskstball coach would be different than the farewell to Massimino. I hoped and prayed that if would be a Villanova greeting. Then I thought of Massimino and how he must feel and I cried myself back to sleep.

Hoops ready for a change

To the Editor:

As I read newspaper accounts of Rollie Massimino's decision to leave Villanova and listen to analysts discuss the idea of Massimino at UNLV, I cannot help but think that most are missing the obvious: UNLV is not getting the Rollie Massimino that brought Villanova University into the National Championship spotlight. Nor did it hire the Rollie Massimino who used a basic core of loyalty and a sense of family to construct his program. No, UNLV could not have hired Rollie Massimino, because the real Rollie Massimino left Villanova more than a year ago.

In recent years, amid numerous disappointing seasons that were not supposed to happen, Rollie changed. During my years at Villanova, if anyone had told me that Massimino would have to be physically restrained from going after a heckling fan, I would have thought they were crazy. After all, this was the man who did not tolerate even cheers from the crowd that he thought were in poor taste. However, this did indeed happen, and reportedly on more than one occasion.

Clearly, the person that I saw giving a press conference in Las Vegas was not the same Massimino who turned down an offer to coach in the N.B.A. just a few years ago, citing his loyalty to his "Villanova family." Yet, yesterday, the "new" Massimino sought a quick divorce from this "family."

I question if Villanova's loyalty was too strong and too blind. Let's face it, Massimino would likely have gotten his walking papers at most other large programs in the country as a result of his average 15 losses per year since 1986. Yet, Villanova valued family more than Massimino.

Don't get me wrong. Although once a staunch Massimino supporter, I have been looking forward to his moving on, whether voluntary or not. However, I do feel that Massimino's slap in the face to Villanova University is inexcusable.

In closing, I felt that I had to point out that, although I am happy at the long-overdue "face-lift" that will be given to the basketball program, I am most disappointed in the way in which Massimino left. Regardless of the career opportunity, he could have and definitely should have afforded his "family" the common courtesy of straightening out his affairs before he left.

I wish him well in his new position, but would like to caution him that his new employer is probably one of those many schools that would have fired him after two bad seasons, when Villanova gave him another chance. Massimino may not have liked to answer for less than spectacular seasons in Philadelphia, but Las Vegas fans expect and demand wins, lots of them. Success and a clean program are not mutually exclusive. There are many great coaches out there who can do both. UNLV may be just as likely to drop Massimino for one of them if he produces even more than he has in recent years at Villanova. Then again, the new Rollie Massimino may suddenly decide to divorce himself from this new "family" and beat them to it.

I believe the saying in the Villanovan is "Who Knows, Who Cares?" It is time for Villanova's basketball program to get back on track. I have every confidence that the new coach will do just that.

Professors consider other responses to poster

To the Editor:

In order to help generate the sort of "unfettered discussion" and "exchange of ideas" that the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., recommends in his April 3 statement to the Villanovan, I want to pose a question or two regarding that very statement.

On the one hand, Dobbin asserts that, in line with its religious and institutional commitment to the immorality of directly intended abortion, Villanova "cannot provide institutional support for a message or activity which promotes or advocates abortion." On the other hand, the president says that "Villanova encourages debate and examination of all aspects of the important moral and social issues of our time, including abortion."

Now consider the following possible approach to the contested advertisement for the April 5 March for Women's Lives. It is an approach suggested but not exactly expressed in the letter of Lynn Curry, Monica McDermott, Rebecca Schoenike and Michelle Rossi to the Villanovan April 3. The idea would be to advertise the march, to have the individual students Curry, McDermott, Schoenike and Rossi be the "contact points" for interested marchers, and to include a University disclaimer on the poster. Does the use of University space and approval for this posting so entangle Villanova in advocacy and promotion of abortion as to render its display unacceptable?

Suppose that the answer is "yes." Then how are we to respond to Villanova student organizations seeking to put University funds to use in paying the expenses and honorarium for a scholar who would give a public lecture at Villanova that criticizes the Catholic viewpoint on the morality of abortion, or who would otherwise defend the morality (or legality) of abortion? Reputable scholars in theology, philosophy and law like Beverly Harrison, Peter Singer and Lawrence Tribe come to mind.

If the posting described above is unacceptable, then so must be the invitation to lecture, no? In this second case, University resources far surpassing poster space are employed in what appears in some real sense to be entanglement with "promotion or advocacy." But is not this sort of invitation precisely part and parcel of the academic process whereby "unfettered discussion" and "the exchange of ideas" is advanced? People like Harrison, Singer and Tribe could surely assist our stated "devotion to free inquiry."

Perhaps a relevant distinction can be drawn here between "advocacy" and "free inquiry." But certainly University involvement in promotion or advocacy of the pro-choice "message" can reasonably be held to be greater in the case of the invitation to lecture than with regard to the projected posting.

Imagine, however, that one wants to draw the distinction. Then on what ground exactly is the posting refused? University funds are not involved here; nor is the name of a University student group implicated. The Curry letter quotes the notion that such a posting might well "fly in the face of sensitivity;" but so might, I could guess, a pro-choice address by any of the folks I mentioned above fly in the face of the sensitivities of many members of this campus community. Villanova is, after all, a Catholic University.

Attend, finally, to another case (and the relevant case in point). Here a University student group (say, Villanova DSA) advertises the march with a University disclaimer included. I think that a reasonable case can be made that Villanova's devotion to free inquiry would be dangerously jeopardized by refusing the posting.

I am not sure about these inferences. I do think, provisionally, that the first scenario I outlined with reference to posting does not provide the dreaded "institutional support" that Dobbin refers to. The second scenario may be a bit more difficult to defend. Still, the defense may be absolutely imperative in order to protect free and open inquiry as Dobbin envisions it.

If DSA cannot advertise — with the University disavowal — then how in consistency can it stimulate University discussion through the invitation of speakers who come here on University funds? If these invitations are ruled out, then how is free discussion on abortion promoted on a par with discussion of other issues such as affirmative action, the future of eastern Europe, or the justice of health care distribution in America?

To the Editor:

Like the majority of Americans, I find myself struggling with the arguments of the "right to life" and "pro-choice" movements. Both movements have compelling points to make ("a fetus is a human life" vs. "a woman should have control of her own body"); both engage in the worst kinds of slander against their opponents. I believe that the government's policy toward abortion should not be made without reference both to the special status of the fetus and the rights of the mother. On the whole, my personal beliefs are closer to the "right to life" movement than the "choice" movement.

Having said that, I think it is intellectually scandalous that posters advertising a pro-choice rally in Washington (which, by the way, half a million persons attended) were torn down by orders of University officials. I saw those posters — there was nothing extraordinary or lurid about them. They simply promoted attendance at the rally. Of course, the teaching of the Catholic Church is against abortion, but it is merely stating a fact to say that abortion is a deeply controversial issue in American society, one about which moral persons (including Catholics) have reached opposing conclusions.

I do not believe the University should, except in the most extraordinary of circumstance, be in the business of "approving" or "disapproving" posters. I heartily enjoyed seeing the "illegal" posters which have been put up this week on campus. A University official was quoted in the Villanovan as expressing surprise that the socialist student organization would be active in the pro-choice movement. To this, I can only say that University administrators should not be deciding which viewpoints are politically correct for socialist (or other) students.

We are a university, not a backwater. Let's have academic freedom. Let's have free speech. Leave the posters alone.

COMMENTARY

Administration justified in response to DSA

By MARK O'ROURKE

In the April 3, 1992 issue of the Villanovan, Lynne Curry, Monica McDermott, Rebecca Schoenlike and Michael Rossi in their letter to the editor stated that they felt they were the victims of outright censorship and that their academic freedom had been seriously infringed upon. I feel that placing censorship and academic freedom in the proper context should be the first order of business. These two words are often poorly defined and blatantly overused in modern academia.

The question that needs to be posed is: "Where can academic freedom at a Catholic institution of higher education appropriately take place? "Another relevant question is, "What constitutes censorship?"

At a Catholic college or university, academic freedom can and should flourish in the classroom. The classroom is a laboratory of learning where the pursuit of knowledge can occur. The University's Mission Statement clearly states this point: "the University is a community of persons of diverse professional, academic and personal interests who, in a spirit of collegiality, cooperate to achieve their common goals and objectives in the transmission, pursuit and discovery of knowledge." In addition, the Mission Statement states: "Although Villanova functions as an independent institution in te conduct of its own arrairs, in matters theological it recognizes its obligation to the Magisterium of the Church." Other appropriate places besides the classroom allowing for academic freedom include: dining halls, residence halls, the Villanovan, WXVU and open forums.

Academic freedom provides for the discussion and debate of all issues. Moreover, academic freedom is essential for the survival of academic inquiry. However, academic freedom does not translate into political advocacy such as supported by the Democratic Socialists of America (DSA). The Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., University President, also clearly states this fact: "Villanova is open to ... full and frank discussion of controversial issues ... without compromising the institution's obligation to bear witness to the Church's moral teaching."

This is the reason why the appropriate action was taken when the posters were removed from Villanova's campus. The content of the posters was not consistent with academic freedom at a Catholic university. These posters were not supporting academic inquiry of this issue through debate and discussion. Rather, they were politically advocating a position that is irrefutably inconsistent with the teachings of the Catholic Church.

The DSA should seek to be an alternative to the other student political organizations — the College Democrats and College Republicans. DSA should not act as a facade or front for a group advocating and encouraging the ideas of the pro-abortion movement. In addition, if the DSA maintains this cause as part of a hidden agenda, they would be violating the spirit of collegiality that Villanova seeks to maintain in its community. The DSA also seems to view this issue as simply political, but they must recognize that at Villanova University this issue is not simply viewed as "political," but more importantly, as a moral and ethical issue.

In this light, I would encourage those responsible for hanging the posters to understand the role and importance of Catholic higher education. Villanova was the first Catholic university founded in the State of Pennsylvania. Thus, it was Villanova that first brought diversity (Catholicism) to the protestant Main Line. The Mission Statement helps illuminate the essence of Catholic higher education: "Villanova welcomes students who consider it desirable to study within the philosophical framework of Christian humanism. Similarly, the University seeks to employ on all levels those who are sympathetic to and supportive of its character and identity."

As Villanova approaches its sesquicentennial year, all Villanovans — administration, faculty, students and alumni should pledge to reaffirm the fundamental reason Villanova was founded and continues to exist: to be a Catholic institution of higher learning. Thus, Villanova must demonstrate an unyielding fidelity to its mission and that of the Catholic Church: to proclaim the Gospel in word, in sacrament, in witness and in service. Villanova must show that the Church is a herald of true human values which works to overcome the forces in contemporary society wich work against the unity and sanctity of the family and the sacredness of human life.

> Academic freedom does not translate into political advocacy

In conclusion, the DSA should clearly recognize that this situation was handled in an adequate, appropriate and just manner. If the DSA wants to be treated fairly, then this organization should re-examine its tactics and approach to this issue. Why not try sponsoring an open forum with the other student political organizations to debate this issue? Finally for all who disagree with me, thank you for taking the time to read this article. Remember that academic freedom at a University grounded in Catholic doctrine is indeed protected and preserved for all of the members of its community.

I would like to sincerely thank Dobbin, Dr. Richard Neville and the Rev. John Stack, O.S.A., for acting decisively and justly in this matter. The student body and University community should realize that this is not a "student vs. the administration" issue, but rather an occasion where confusion concerning the role and nature of a Catholic University was clarified. The coming year during Villanova's sesquicentennial should also provide the university with other opportunities to reaffirm its mission and identity.

Reaction to posters concerns many

By RICK ECKSTEIN

Frankly, I am worried about "the University's" decision to restrict posters announcing last week's March for Women's Lives in Washington, D.C. And if the 105 people in my classes are any indication, most Villanova students are also worried. In our class discussions on this issue, we disagreed on many specifics such as whether the posters actually did and did not "advocate" a prochoice position and whether the Catholic Church's position on abortion was correct. However, there was a clear consensus that the posters did not imply University support for this rally, and that removing the posters threatened the core values of this or any university: a dedication to the pursuit of knowledge and truth through free and unfettered academic discourse.

I must admit my surprise at the strength of these students' convictions. Indeed, these class discussions made me realize that "academic freedom" should protect not only teachers' actions but students' actions as well. The fact that I could raise this issue in class and write this article without fear of reprisal, demonstrates Villanova's commitment to my academic freedom. Neither Bob Jones University nor Grove City College would be as tolerant.

Unfortunately, it seems that Villanova is unwilling to make such a commitment to the academic freedom of students (and student groups) who wish to pursue these discussions outside of the classroom. I imagine this worries more than just 105 sociology students, the five students quoted and photographed in the April 3 issue of the Villanovan and one professor.

> The fact that I could raise this issue in class and write this article without fear of reprisal demonstrates Villanova's commitment to my academic freedom.

If these posters are defined as "institutional support" of a prochoice position (and thus restricted), we might want to look at other similar violations of Villanova's "Catholic mission." For example, I have seen books in the library which actually advocate for women's reproductive freedom while condemning those institutions (such as the state or the Catholic Church) which try to limit this freedom. Other books discuss the advantages and disadvantages of various birth control devices. Movies (especially those subtitled foreign films) are shown on campus which glorify both pre-marital sexual intercourse and senseless violence. Since Villanova University buys these books and rents these films, it seems to me that it is providing institutional support for a message or activity that contradicts the moral tradition and teaching of the Catholic church.

Of course, it is improbable that Villanova will begin burning books and banning movies. Universities committed to the frank discussion of controversial moral and social issues do not do these things. Why, then, restrict posters or student groups which reflect such a commitment? In class, one student commented that if the church's position on abortion is truly convincing, people will be persuaded (as she was) without having to censor opposing views.

Another student still undecided about abortion said she was less likely to consider the Church's view if it was being crammed down her throat. I find it ironic that the University's recent actions, exercised in the name of Catholic values, might actually alienate young Catholics from Catholicism.

Similarly, some students (both Catholic and non-Catholic) said that they would have gone elsewhere if they knew Villanova might not tolerate certain ideas. These people believe college should provide the opportunity to learn about and think about important social and moral issues. Afterwards, they hope to decide for themselves where they stand on these matters. They also worry about what future employers and law schools will think of them if Villanova develops a reputation for not tolerating certain ideas and not allowing students to form groups representing a variety of viewpoints.

Finally, many students indicated that their parents did not insist they attend Villanova in order to minimize contamination by ideas that contradicted Catholic teachings. Instead, it is the existence of such teachings at Villanova, not the absence of differing views, that makes this University attractive to many students and parents.

Although I am Jewish, it is Villanova's "Catholic mission" which has in part contributed to my growing affinity for this University. Personally, I see this Catholic mission reflected in the humanistic attitudes of students, faculty and staff. One of my friends teaches at a small, "elite," liberal arts college in Florida, where students do not volunteer to work in soup kitchens and do not give up Spring Break to build houses for unfortunate families. In his classes, students are unwilling to discuss the moral implications of Camel Joe cigarette ads or the declining standard of living facing many Americans. They only want to get their degrees and make as much money as possible. When I told him about recent class discussions, he grew envious and offered to switch jobs with me. No way.

We cannot have it both ways with academic freedom. Either the University encourages all ideas and opinions or it encourages not all ideas and opinions. We cannot claim to be absolutely committed to unfettered discussion except for a few things here and there. If we choose to limit certain ideas in the name of Catholic teaching (or whatever justification), we should also be willing to honestly admit that academic freedom at Villanova is not quite absolute. Of course, there may be consequences to such a position: faculty, staff and students who cherish academic freedom may choose not to attend Villanova or even to leave Villanova.

These are serious issues worthy of serious reflection. I want to thank my current students for their thoughtfulness and honesty in our recent discussions. Their commitment to academic freedom has solidified my personal commitment to academic freedom and has motivated me to write this viewpoint. At some schools, the collective pursuit of knowledge and truth is often forfeited when uncomfortable, controversial and offensive ideas emerge. Let us hope that Villanova does not become one of these places where ideas are restricted because they are not "religiously correct."

Despite a year of diversity, stereotypes remain

By JOE VINCENT JAUCIAN and LUAN TRAN

Imagine yourself at one of the University computer labs with a friend. You know very little about computers and need to print your paper.

Your friend tells you, "Go ask an Indian. They don't mind because they hang out there all day anyway and they enjoy working all night at the 7-Eleven."

You might say to yourself, "Yeah, if I become good friends with them I might be able to get a discount on my next trip to the convenience store. Or, if I'm lucky, they might show me the art of snake charming at their Strafford apartment."

But wait a minute! ... This is ridiculous. Why should we stereotype an entire group just because a few happen to act differently or happen to work at a certain place? Haven't we been trying, for years now, to rid our society of these kinds of stereotypes? Yet, we still do it with ease in our normal conversations.

It seems that we have become so caught up in our fast-paced world, that it is much more convenient for us to categorize others. Are we so busy nowadays that we have no time to learn about another culture or reach out and meet people of another culture in order to break down these stereotypical barriers? Or is it that we just do not care? It is much easier for us to make fun of and stereotype another culture than to actually make an effort to learn about another culture.

Stereotyping others gives us an easy means of judging people we do not know and whom we may not even care for. Should others become targets of our criticisms because of our lack of knowledge or concern? Because of this apathy, it is harder for us to tolerate the differences between cultures. Yet, these differences we make fun of also make us unique as individuals and unique as a culture.

Therefore, when we stereotype others, we degrade our unique characters. We are saying, "Hey! That person should be like me." Are we that insecure that we cannot even accept people for what they are or how they act? Must we speak condescendingly about others because of our nature of make ourselves appear better?

We must learn to overcome this attitude of intolerance and to realize that we are all the same regardless of our different cultures or backgrounds. And that poking fun of and stereotyping others of a different culture just lessens the possibility of expanding our minds but most of all learning about ourselves.

However, can we learn about ourselves by the way we treat foreign students on campus? For the 300 international students from 45 countries, it is difficult for them to adapt to the diversity indifference at Villanova. Because of social isolation, they interact among others of their ethnic group. They also experience a status quo attitude from students to keep the University's homogeneity consistent. And if they want to belong, they must do things on our own terms and conform to our needs. But should this type of apathetic attitude continue? If so, then are we rejecting the University's Mission Statement?

By LUAN TRAN

Two consecutive years of campaigning for diversity awareness on campus by Student Government marks a move in the right direction, but the effort shows little progress.

Last year, former Student Government President Kerry Stromberg initiated the idea of getting more students and organizations to participate in community events and to get involved with cultural activities. Her ideas helped set the groundwork for the "Year of Diversity" to maintain its eventual course of progress towards change. However, this vision of change needs to have "less talk, more action" as the University approaches its 150th anniversary.

So far, Stromberg's effort proves to have little effect. So let us try to celebrate this special year and subsequent years with an open-mind by embracing the University's Mission Statement more sincerely to "promote learning and understanding" and act on the diversity issue.

"The diversity study may remind us of who we are. But it also helps us understand where we need to go. All of us must work to accept 'others' and learn to embrace differences for our University education to be truly successful" (the Villanovan, March 20).

First, if we want to learn and understand differences, it is crucial that we let go of the idea of homogeneity as a notion of acceptance and to recognize diversity to welcome all peoples of different backgrounds. Only then can we progress towards the kind of change we have so long neglected — diversity and understanding of differences.

Second, if we want to appreciate "others" of different backgrounds, we must accept and respect their differences to enhance our own mental development. We can learn and discover who we are by the way we treat others. Think how status quo and homogeneity affected the African-Americans and other minority groups, and appreciate its biased attitudes as a learning experience to change our thinking in the future.

We have cruised through history with so much not understood. Oh, how much we have missed out. Even the Augustinian tradition that believes in "open pursuit of truth," and supports a liberal education which can "open up to cultural and intellectual differences" had to conform with the "public dialogue with the culture issues of [the] time."

However, these intolerant attitudes for change reflect the University's limitlessness towards diversity, thus rejecting the University's goals. Therefore, can we meet the academic, cultural and intellectual challenges that the future may require? Or should we remain indifferent to any changes that may take place?

Our fellow African-American friends have come a long way in history to cross the racial barriers of our society. But, nevertheless, did they come without a struggle? Should we embrace the same conditions for other minority groups before we can accept their differences? Does the University measure up to its Strategic Plan's goal to become a community of diversity in race, gender, ethnicity, geography and culture?"

Klein wants record straight

By MORTON A. KLEIN

As a child of Holocaust survivors (my parents were in Auschwitz and Bergen-Belsen concentration camps), I am very sensitive to the power of propaganda and falsehoods perpetrated against a people. In my articles concerning the Villanova Center for Arab and Islamic Studies (Villanove Arab Center) and the Center for Peace and Justice at Villanova, I simply correct significant errors emanating from their lectures and writings. I have never taken a political position on the disputed territories or on the communities (settlements) that both the Arabs and the Israelis are building there.

> I understand the value of peace and the horrors of war from a very personal point of view.

For Peter Molineaux, the young Villanova student, to label me a "demagogue," an "extremist," or a "rightist" in the issue of the Villanovan is incomprehensible and simply unfair to someone who is only rectifying factual mistakes. Molineaux also does not know that I voted and worked for liberal Democrats George McGovern and Michael Dukakis. He does not know that I marched for civil rights legislation in Washington before he was born. He does not know that I marched against the Vietnam war and have been involved in three administrations in Washington. I diligently worked to enact a national health care plan and to improve medicaid and medicare programs for our citizens.

As one who has no uncles, no aunts and no grandparents due to their murder by Hitler during the Holocaust, I understand the value of peace and the horrors of war and propaganda from a very personal point of view.

Because of my personal losses at the hands of the Nazis, I feel compelled to speak out when Dr. Hafeez Malik of the Villanova Arab Center compares the "Nazi war machine" to the "Zionist war machine." I must speak out when Malik, in The Journal of South Asian and Middle Eastern Studies, goes on to write the big Hitlerian-type lie that "Israel ... has dared to commit genocide of the Palestinians and Lebanese." The civil war in Lebanon between Christians and Muslims caused over 200,000 deaths without Israel's participation. The Palestinian population has almost tripled in the disputed territories during the last 25 years. This is a strange genocide indeed.

I also must speak out when Peter Molineaux questions the horrific conditions for Christians under Islamic rule in Egypt and other Muslim countries. Our latest Human Rights Report published by the U.S. State Department (1992) states "Christians (in Egypt) ... are unable to obtain authorization ... to build or repair places of worship ... Christians are the object of a disturbing pattern of discrimination on the part of the Government ... burning of Christian churches and Christian-owned stores are reported regularly in the press."

The American Coptic Association of Christians in Egypt writes on April 10, 1991 "No month during the last 10 years has passed without the murder beating, or torture of Christians, or without their property or churches being burned. In all cases — without exception — the criminals have been set free ... State-controlled mass media characterizes Christians as 'infidels' with a 'false' bible."

Hundreds of Christians have been massacred and injured. We must condemn these outrages.

I hope the Villanova community will join me in fighting for truth when it comes to discussions of the Middle East.

Remember Joe Andiario

To the Editor:

We are writing in reference to the article about the death of Joe Andiario (March 20 issue). Though we appreciate your effort to remember Joe in your paper, we are disappointed that you did not mention some of the things about him that were significant to his close friends and family members. We would like to take this opportunity to share some of our thoughts and feelings about Joe and what he meant to us.

Joe was very outgoing; he always went out of his way to be friendly and meet new people. We all felt the effects of Joe's positive outlook and zest for life. He was very family-oriented and was proud to be the godfather of his one-year old nephew, David.

Joe's energy carried over from his family life into his everyday activities. He coached basketball for 6- and 7-year olds for his neighborhood league. For the past few summers, he acted as manager at a private swim club, and he also worked at a local grocery store in the accounting office.

Joe was a big fan of sports. He rigorously followed Villanova basketball, and never missed the NCAA tournament. He liked to play sports, too, whether it was a game of pick-up on the basketball court, a game of racquetball at the gym or 18 holes of golf.

Joe treasured his years and memories at Villanova. He looked forward to graduating with his friends and classmates this May, and we hope you will keep him in your thoughts and prayers on that special day.

Student says, "English by default"

By PETER SHAUGER

I'm a sensitive, new-age kind of guy. So logically I should be able to find a girlfriend at this school. Any schmuck will tell you, though, that this is not the case.

That is why I could never be a math major. I have a hard time grasping these brutally simple concepts. I seem to forget that some girls enjoy when drunk guys make goo-goo eyes at their bodies. If I only had the skills to calculate exactly how cocky and rude I would have to be to find true love.

> If I became an education major, I could learn how to teach women that I am cool, and that the loser image I present is just to keep away the mean girls.

And then there is that foreign language thing. If only I spoke one. I am currently studying Italian, but along with not being able to speak it, Villanova does not offer it as a major. In Italian I could say disgusting things to girls that I am interested in, and they would respond, not having the faintest idea of what I said — "Oh Petey, how romantic!" Instead I compliment them in my native tongue. The nerve of me.

If I were an engineer I could build a bridge or something for the girl of my dreams and then name it after her. You don't understand how close I came to making that decision. But if she left me for an engineer with a bigger bridge, I don't think I could be very civil. I might take my bridge and go home, or change the name of it just to spite her, but that might confuse a lot of drivers. "Honey, wasn't there a bridge here ... Oh no," or "Aren't we crossing Bridge Betty ... No, dear, now we are crossing 'That No Good Two-Timing Son Of A Bridge Betty.' "

I hear nicknames really impress women. Political science has a really cool nickname. Female: "What's your major, big boy?" Me: "Poli-Sci." Female: "Sounds sexy. What does it stand for, Polygamy Science?" Me: "Oddly enough, no. It stands for Political Science." Female: "Eeewww gross! Get lost nerd!" Not quite what I had in mind.

If I were a communications major, maybe I could learn how to properly "communicate" with Villanova women. I could learn how to send a Valentine's Day flower and actually get some kind of response, whether it's "Get lost, nerd" or, if you are really daring, "Thank you." So I asked my roommate Chad where classes are held for communications majors. Chad: "St. Mary's, my good man." Too far of a walk from my dorm. Next choice.

If I became an education major, I could learn how to teach women that I am cool, and that the loser image I present is just to keep away the mean girls. But what if they failed my classes? Not only would I have tarnished the image of teachers all across the country, but the image of studs as well.

Let's see. I don't think religious studies could give me what I need to attract women, besides nuns and mothers that is; peace and justice is too noble for most women; business is too boring; sciences are too hard and boring. I would probably forget I was ever interested in girls if I became a philosophy major. I might find out the truth about why I haven't a girlfriend yet if I opt for psychology or sociology.

I've got it. Nursing. Lots of women there. Wait a minute, that's no good either. They would be constantly showing me up and embarrassing me (everybody knows how stupid men are, well at least I know how stupid I am).

What's left? Not much. I guess I'll be an English major. Now if I could only decide on a minor.

Issues require clarification and thought

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to the article concerning Project Sunshine's fund raising fast (March 20 issue). This is a worthy cause for students to give up lunch for a day or to eat at Connelly and 1,787 students participated raising $3,574, to quote the article. Yet Project Sunshine only receives $2 for each student who does give up lunch. I have always been under the impression that lunch is $5 per person with a meal plan. If this is the case, who receives the remaining $3? Project Sunshine does not even receive 50 percent of the money. This seems to be a large sum unaccounted for and I would appreciate any information that tells us, the students who are donating the money, where the remaining funds are going.

To the Editor:

If anyone was shocked, angry or dismayed by my alleged comments in the article on multiculturalism and the new core curriculum, I am not surprised. They were my reactions exactly.

Needless to say, I was grossly misquoted and misrepresented in the article and I want to set the record straight before I am burned at the stake. As I have since found out, this article's appearance in the Villanovan (I was told it was for a journalism paper) was a result of a tragi-comedy of errors.

Nonetheless, I must say that one of the things I talked about in this interview was my belief that the Mission Statement of Villanova was one of Villanova's greatest strengths and that I saw the new proposed changes in the core as an extension of that document. By the same token, I think those faculty members who embody the values promoted and upheld in the mission statement, in both their professional and personal lives, are in invaluable resource.

The distortion of my views to suggest that I am against Catholicism or opposed to affluent individuals does a serious injustice to me and a great disservice to the value of multiculturalism and diversity and the goal of community growth and enrichment.

To the Editor:

May I take a moment to call attention to some relatively unnoticed and certainly unsung work being done by a small group of very committed Villanovans? There is a chapter of Habitat for Humanity on our campus which has been very energetically and faithfully working to do something about the problems of the homeless both locally and nationally.

While many talk loudly and at length about the problems of the homeless, empowerment and the like, this group and others like it are doing something about it. Each Saturday of the academic year finds a group of these individuals traveling to the current work-site of the Norristown Habitat for Humanity, to assist in the construction or rehabilitation of low cost (but good quality) housing.

Each spring break, for the past two years, these and other students have put up hundreds of their own dollars and set off for the mountains of West Virginia for the privileges of sleeping on a concrete floor, eating food prepared by their classmates, waiting in line on alternate days to take a shower and being forced to participate in philosophical discussions, in order to do the same thing for the people of Appalachia.

With or without recognition, these individuals will undoubtedly continue to do the good work they have been doing. Garnering media attention is not what they are about. But what these individuals are doing to improve our world is surely as important as fraternity and sorority happenings. A bit of attention and publicity, now and then, may pick them up when they are down and encourage them to continue or even redouble their efforts.

Special thanks are due to Maura O'Hare, Tom Brinker and Brian Maroney, the student leaders of the Villanova Habitat for Humanity, to Beth Hassel, a Campus Ministry coordinator, and to Noreen Cameron, also of Campus Ministry, under whose capable leadership all this has come alive.

You Can't Take It With You
Well, you can, but who wants to? Your winter clothes, this summer, that is. Do you really want to lug them home, look at them all summer, and then lug them back again in September?

Of Course Not!
You're a sensible person. What you really want to do is drop them off at Wharton's where we will clean, mothproof, and store your winter things until you need them. No money till you pick them up. And no storage fee ($20) if you show us your school I.D. when you leave them. You only pay for the cleaning.

So come on. Leave winter to us, and get on with your summer.

Summer Storage

For two days only, students with a fall on-campus assignment, may bring items for storage to the lower Bartley parking lot April 24 and April 26 between noon and 5 p.m.

All items should be easily identifiable with name and social security number, marked clearly on each item. Carpets should be vacuumed, rolled and taped tightly.

Cardboard boxes provide the best means for stacking and storing of items, and are available, free of charge. They are located under the west stairwell in Kennedy Hall. RSA will provide tape, labels, and other storage material during the times listed above.

All items must be retrieved September 1 from noon to 5 p.m. Any items remaining after 5 p.m. will be discarded.

Neither the University nor the Resident Student Association will assume any responsibility for items stored. Check with your family insurance plan for coverage. Separate insurance plans are available through the Office for Residence Life.

Growing in Faith

This is an informal time to get to know other students and to reflect together on how the gospel message speaks to us in our everyday lives. Our meetings are relaxed and informal. They take place on Mondays at 8 p.m. in St. Rita Chapel. All are welcome. Sponsored by Campus Ministry.

Ronald McDonald Camp

The Ronald McDonald Camp will sponsor a one-week (Aug. 22-29) camp experience in the Poconos for children who have cancer. They are looking for volunteers to help staff this special camp to be run as close to a regular camp experience as is possible. A full medical staff is on hand 24 hours a day. For brochures or more information about this unusual opportunity to serve, see Barbara Haenn in Campus Ministry, St. Rita.

Year's best: Read all about it

By KAREN CAMPBELL
Features Editor

The major news stories of the 1991-92 school year in many ways reflected the concern within the University for world issues impacting the Villanova campus.

The year's top stories dealt with sobering topics, not because events at Villanova have taken a grim turn, but because it seems the University has realized the importance of acknowledging the influence of the real world upon the lives of Villanovans.

The frightening spread of Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) prompted the University to revive a task force aimed at increasing student awareness about AIDS early this year. Through AIDS education, students are encouraged to take a closer look at the dangers of the disease and its bearing upon their lives. The task force enabled the University to adopt a policy on the issue to better serve the needs of the students.

A report on college rapes forced the University to acknowledge the existence of rape and sexual harassment on the Villanova campus, the gravity of the crime and its devastating effects on the victims. This increased emphasis seems to follow a national trend that encourages victims to seek counseling and report the assault instead of harboring feelings of guilt. Through its attitudes toward campus rape the University hopes to enable students to protect themselves by offering means to prevent sexual assaults.

Issues of religious freedom were challenged mid-year due to conflicts between the University and the Greater Philadelphia Church of Christ. The University questioned the group's evangelizing methods on campus after receiving complaints from students and reports of the group's activity on other campuses.

The campus exploded over the issue of multiculturalism after plans for changes to incorporate more diversity in the core curriculum were announced. A controversial letter written by the College Republicans appeared at Homecoming and in the Villanovan arguing against the changes on the grounds that they would challenge the precepts upon which Villanova was founded. The issue provided students with an opportunity to question their definition of what a university education should include.

Aside from these more somber world issues brewing within the University, many events occurred on-campus which were newsworthy in their own right.

Upon returning to Villanova after summer break, students were greeted with the news of Wildcat basketball player Lloyd Mumford's dismissal as a result of his arrest during the summer.

The rape issue was personalized for many Villanovans through an open-letter in which a student victim retold the horror of her assault and the drawn-out pain of her recovery.

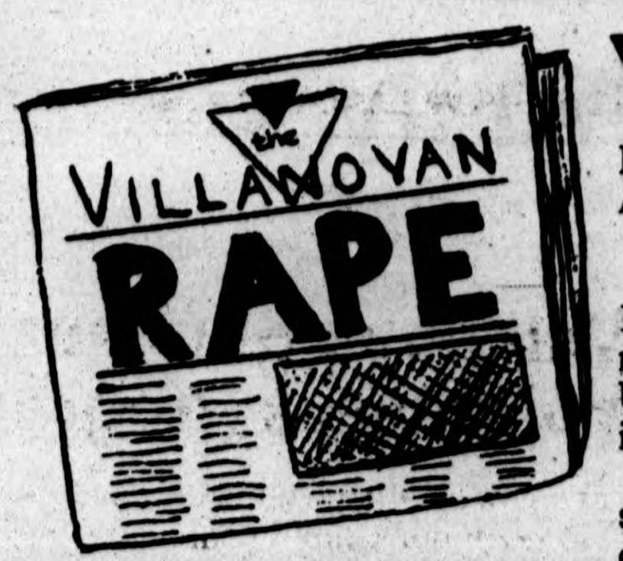
Political science professor Dr. Robert Langran courted South Campus residents in his campaign for the Radnor Township Board of Commissioners, but lost to Republican incumbent Jim Marks.

Events involving a stalker in the residence halls caused a slight uproar on campus. The man reportedly spied on students, creating a panic resulting in a temporary locking of South Campus resident halls 24 hours a day.

The University also recognized the problem of student alcoholism this year with the "Be Free for the Weekend" campaign sponsored by the Center for Alcohol and Drug Assistance. Students used this opportunity to question alcohol's integral role in the Villanova social scene, and re-examine their definition of alcoholism.

Steven Freind, a 1966 Villanova graduate, solicited support from Villanovans in his run for Senate. His campaign has elicited controversial opinions from both students and faculty.

As the year closes, Villanovans bid mixed goodbyes to Head Coach Rollie Massimino after his 19 years of service to the Villanova basketball team. Massimino departs to the University of Nevada-Las Vegas to face "another challenge, another phase in my life," he said.



Rape issue discussed

The following story appeared in the Sept. 20 issue of the Villanovan.

By LARISA EPATKO
Assistant News Editor

Four rapes were reported to Villanova's Department of Public Safety in 1990, outnumbering four other Philadelphia-area colleges.

Drexel, LaSalle and the University of Pennsylvania reported zero rape incidents, while Temple University reported one rape in their annual statistics reports required of all colleges by federal law.

Temple encountered two alleged sexual assault cases since the start of the 1991-92 academic year. A student was raped in her dormitory room Sept. 15 by a man she knew. This alleged assault follows an initial incident where a 19-year-old student said she was raped inside the Alpha Phi Delta fraternity house by a man she knew and another she did not.

Rape is the most underreported crime in the country but continues to plague the University and other college campuses, said Jeffrey B. Horton, director of Public Safety. Communication between the man and woman is important, people need to understand that no means no, he added.

"If attackers are in doubt [that no means no], they should think of the harm they're causing when forcing victims to do something against their will," said Dr. Helene Feinberg-Walker of the University Counseling Center.

Rape is an act of violence, in which a person is sexually assaulted against his or her own will, according to a date rape pamphlet distributed by the Department of Public Safety.

Rape is a "power play" in which the goal is to overpower, intimidate, and degrade the victim, said Walker.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) reports that only 10 percent of sexual assaults ever get reported to the police. The University of Michigan Prevention and Awareness Center attributes this to victims feeling that the justice system will not help them as much as it will harm them.

Multicultural program debated

The following story appeared in the Nov. 22 issue of the Villanovan.

By MATTHEW J. BRENNAN
Senior Reporter

Students and faculty members erupted in debate on multicultural curriculum Nov. 21 after the Villanova College Republicans sponsored a speaker on the topic.

Joseph Sobran, critic at large for the National Review magazine, addressed approximately 100 people in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall on the politicizing of multiculturalism.

Sobran cited a passage from the College of Arts and Sciences' Proposed Core Curriculum Report as making him "uneasy."

The diversity component of the proposed core would require one course in two areas. An international component consisting of courses with a contemporary focus on non-Western cultures and a multicultural component with a contemporary focus on either ethnic, minority and women's experiences and history will be reviewed.

"A study of cultures in social groups different from one's own is a powerful ancedote for ethnocentrisim, racism and sexism," states the Core Report.

Sobran questioned the meaning of racism, sexism and ethnocentrisim. He defined racism as "a very Western belief that human dignity doesn't depend on race."

This view is not universally held because other societies believe their cultures are superior, he added, citing the Chinese, Japanese and the Ancient Greeks as evidence.

> Students and faculty members erupted in a debate on multicultural curricula Nov. 21 . . .

Sobran referred to sexism as a "newfangled Western word," and he didn't "know of a single non-Western culture that isn't what liberals and feminists would call sexist."

He established that sexism must be defined within the context of a culture by comparing the freedom of Western women to their treatment in non-Western cultures.

" . . . The most ethnocentric assumption we can make is that other cultures are just like us in heart with only superficial and colorful differences," said Sobran.

Students and faculty members posed questions to Sobran concerning the diversity component within the core report; an advertisement in the Villanovan; and an anonymous letter distributed on Homecoming weekend, Nov. 8.

The letter, signed "Concerned Students of Villanova," stated "reservations" about the possibility of courses within the diversity component "rationalizing homosexuality and abortion, as well as breaching the principles upon which Villanova University was founded."

An advertisement, purchased by the College Republicans in the Nov. 15 issue of the Villanovan, questioned whether students "should be forced" to take classes that "legitimize gay rights and abortion," and offered an open forum on the topic, Nov. 21.

Sobran admitted his unfamiliarity with the conflict over the core report and had no knowledge of the letter or advertisement

AIDS targeted

The University has implemented a task force addressing the issue of Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) on campus, said Gary Bonas, associate director of Student Activities. Bonas chairs the committee, comprised of three faculty members and three undergraduate students.

The task force has been designed to heighten the level of education among students so that they make "responsible decisions." The task force will adjourn in a few weeks to create a plan and an agenda to implement this goal, said Bonas.

"At Villanova University as many as 195 students are HIV [Human Imuno Deficiency Virus] positive," said Bonas.

"The University was presently without a task force, after a previous one dissipated a few years ago. However, currently the University does have a written policy on AIDS," Bonas added.

"The policy deals with every individual case differently, based on individual needs; it is a humanistic Christian document," said Bonas. The board of trustees accepted the policy in 1986. But, other than this policy and the new task force, there are apparently no regularly organized programs to address the AIDS issue.

In 1985, Dr. Richard Neville, vice president for Student Life, instructed the Committee of Student Life to establish a task force on AIDS. During the next two years it was established; however, there was no student representation. The members of the task force were the Rev. Robert Martin, O.S.A., chairman, Christine Lysionek, then the assistant to the dean of Students, Bonas and Dr. Phil Greiner, the faculty representative from the School of Nursing.

The purpose of the initial task force focused primarily on education. However, by 1988 the task force began to "fizzle out," said Bonas. "Nobody consciously decided to do away with the task force, the market was saturated,

Religious group sparked controversy on campus

The following story appeared in the Nov. 15 issue of the Villanovan.

By SINEAD QUINN
Senior Reporter

Many students have reported to University officials that they have been approached by a group that appears to be "practicing the techniques of a destructive cult," said Dr. Sandra Ellis-Killian, religious studies.

Two students have been baptized into the group, said Matt Fridley, who has been an evangelist for the Church of Christ for five years. Fridley said that "nothing weird is going on" and that the idea that they are a cult is "ridiculous." He is one of about 14 salaried evangelists in the Greater Philadelphia Church of Christ, which has about 300 members in the area.

The description of the group fit the criteria of a thought reform destrutive cult, according to the Rev. Jim McGuire, the Philadelphia diocesan representative for cult activity.

The University is sending out a letter warning students about recruiters from the Church of Christ who invite students to their Bible study group.

"Students have complained of being pestered by the group," said Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president of Student Life. The University forbids any kind of solicitation on campus, and as a result, has banned the recruiters from campus.

Fridley denied that they harass students. "Yes, we do actively seek people who want to do this," he said. If any students have felt pestered, it was because they did not make it clear that they were not interested, he said. He has made it clear to members that they should ask students if they want to be called back.

Affiliates of the Church of Christ have appeared at other campuses such as Northwestern and Harvard Universities, where the administrations have issued similar warnings to their students.

The group surfaced most recently at the University of Scranton. Someone familiar with the group called Sr. Beth Hassell, P.B.V.M. from Scranton's Campus Ministry to inform her that a church member had claimed to have made inroads into Villanova's campus, the Rev. Joseph S. Mostardi, O.S.A., said. The phone call was a part of the chain of events that led Mostardi to send a memo to University staff and faculty warning them of the presence of the group.

Members of the group have attempted to recruit students in Connelly Center and Barley Hall; they have made phone calls and knocked on doors in nearly every residence hall. "They were also very active at the homecoming football game," Mostardi said. He added that he had to escort one of the recruiters from Stanford Hall.

"We expect to be kicked out of a Catholic campus, we disagree about our faiths. We are not ecumenical," said Fridley. He said that he has come to expect to be persecuted because people have heard bad reports and false accusations about the group.

Their method of recruitment is to introduce themselves to students and offer friendship. Once they start a conversation with a student they claim to have similar interests. They always try to make a connection with a student whether it be a true connection or not, Mostardi said.

Balloon Day unites campus for fun and charity

Balloon Day gave students the chance to enjoy themselves while supporting a worthy cause.

By ELIZABETH HARTNETT
Staff Reporter

Once again colorful arches of balloons have graced the heart of Villanova's campus at the 19th annual Balloon Day, held April 7. Starting at 11:30 a.m., the area in front of Connelly Center came alive with musicians, clowns and many booths sponsored by campus organizations.

This year Balloon Day was headed by Linda Jaczynski, seniors Sean Cassidy and Mike Rielly and sophomore Barb Muellen, all of whom are connected with Campus Ministry. Balloon Day was first organized in 1973 by the Rev. Ray Jackson, O.S.A. and Barbara Haenn, and it has continued to be successful since its inception.

The purpose of Balloon Day is to raise money for charity while having fun at the same time. This year's recipient will be the St. Barnabas Mission in Philadelphia. St. Barnabas Mission is an organization that aids families with a drug/alcohol problem. The goal of the mission is to try to keep the family intact by educating the children about the problem, feeding and housing the family, finding jobs for the parents and providing counseling for the addicted mother or father. St. Barnabas was selected as this year's charity because it is a very small organization lacking support from donations.

There were a great variety of activities available on Balloon Day, providing plenty of ways for students and faculty to get involved. There were about 40 food and game booths set up, all of which were sponsored by either a campus club or a fraternity or sorority. The faculty and staff had a booth selling baked goods.

Entertainment was provided throughout the day with performances by groups such as the Women's Glee Club, the Spires, the Villanova Gospel Ensemble and the Villanova Dance Ensemble.

> This is a day that makes me proud to be a Villanovan!"
> Christine Cuesta

Raffle tickets were also sold, with proceeds going to St. Barnabas. Some of the prizes included a gift certificate from the Gap, Phillies tickets, a free dinner at Rib-It and movie passes to local theaters.

Another highlight of Balloon Day is the Run, which actually took place the following day. Students signed up all during the day on Balloon Day to run. Each runner gets sponsors, who agree to pay them per one-mile lap. The run begins at Falvey Memorial Library and circles the campus from Tolentine to Bartley and then returns to the library.

According to Rielly, "It will be successful if it is well-attended," and it should be well-attended "for it is one of the big-volume activities on campus."

Balloon Day is a day to bring the Villanova community together. "It is exciting to see everyone get together to have a good time for a worthy cause," said Jaczynski. "What could be more satisfying than having fun while helping others?"

Balloon Day provides an entertaining diversion for students on campus, where events such as this one are infrequent. "It is a community get-together. It is a time for students to enjoy as well as a time to raise money," said Cassidy.

"This is a day that makes me proud to be a Villanovan," remarked Christine Cuesta.

Tiy Smith said that, "Balloon Day is extra-special because it is for a good cause."

"Classes should be cancelled so that students can enjoy the day without having to worry about attendance," said Bridget Hill.

Mike Donahue commented that "this is a great day not only because it is a lot of fun, but also because it makes you realize how lucky we are."

Rape counseling in the works at 'Nova

GRETCHEN FISHER
Assistant Features Editors

No one likes to think about the idea of rape on our campus. For many of us, rape is something that only happens to others, but for some it is a harsh reality. Rape does occur on every college campus, which is why preventative education and emergency help is vital. At many schools students are successfully developing rape education, counseling and support programs.

Tracey Hentz is an investigator and counselor with the Villanova Public Safety Department, as well as a graduate student in counseling and human relations. According to Hentz, a support group was attempted by the counseling center but failed due to a lack of student response. This could be because students do not know what to expect and many think that only the victims themselves can be involved.

Hentz explained that anyone who is interested is welcome to participate and is encouraged to contact her at 527-1407 at the Public Safety Office.

Michele Rossi, Lynne Curry, Claudia Muro and Sean Ferrier are a few of the Villanova students who are currently working to revive the program. Rossi attended a conference on student sexual assult at the University of Pennsylvania to learn more about this issue. She hopes that Villanova will model Penn's program because it is one of the most involved and extensive in the area.

Students Together Against Acquaintance Rape (STAAR), a peer education program, began three years ago by students at Penn. Beth Kaplan, one of the group's 22 members, explained that the 50 workshops throughout the semester focus mainly on prevention. Kaplan also stated that although the members receive thorough training, they act more as a referral source to other rape counselors.

"Students find it easier to come to us, other students, and we make sure they get to the proper places. At the workshops, we facilitate conversations rather than lecture. Our job is to create awareness," said Kaplan.

Villanova instituted a rape task force in 1990 to initiate a policy and procedure to deal with rape on campus. Dr. Janice McLane of the philosophy department chairs this task force. Faculty, Public Safety, Campus Ministry, the counseling center and student volunteers comprise the force. The purpose of representing so many groups on campus is not only to have a well-rounded policy regarding rape on our campus, but also to offer the rape victim a choice of groups in which to confide.

The task force aims to educate people about the problem and hopefully deal with it before it occurs, explained Jeff Horton, director of Public Safety, who is a member of the force. Horton stressed the importance of student involvement.

"This is an issue we all need to keep up with. We hope to have structured programs available soon for all incoming freshman," said Horton.

"I can act as a base," said Hentz. "But I need student involvement in order for other students to hear the message." Both Hentz and Horton stressed the seriousness of the issue everywhere. Our campus is no exception.

Midshipmen tutor needy kids

By DAMIAN KONOPKA
Staff Reporter

When we look back on our college days at Villanova, there will be many fond and exciting memories to recall. Perhaps they will include some great parties, basketball games or just meeting lifelong friends. For certain members of the Naval Reserve Officer Training Corp (NROTC), however, some of their finest memories will come from their volunteer tutoring program with a local elementary school.

This tutoring program originated in the fall of 1991 when two Villanova seniors came in contact with the Lewis C. Cassidy Elementary School in Overbrook through the help of the Philadelphia City Organization Volunteer Program. At the outset, there were six students — half ROTC — who made the weekly trip to the school. This past year, that number has grown to about 20 ROTC students who faithfully travel to tutor the youngsters. One of the members involved from the beginning is Alan Chase, a senior spanish major who discussed the program and his role within it.

Chase was one of the initial six members and is now in his last year of tutoring. He related the short history of the program, and the decisive steps that were taken along the way for it to gain the success it has today.

The program gained momentum when Capt. H.S. Stoddard became involved and heartily endorsed the program. His encouragement within the ROTC unit brought greater support and ultimately more participation among the students, said Chase.

> The children are exposed to a whole new world, a world that may be full of more promise than the harsh reality of life at home.

On April 25, 1991, the ROTC formally adopted the Cassidy School as an educational partner. At the school's annual spring concert, a ceremony was held to honor the adoption. It involved Stoddard, the school's principal and Student Council president, as well as Chase and his fellow tutoring mates.

The tutoring program involves a weekly visit to the elementary school where the tutors stay for approximately one hour. The majority of the children being helped are in the fourth grade and lower. There is usually one-on-one tutoring involving multiplication tables and daily reading, as well as direct assistance with teachers in their own classroom lessons. Chase himself acts as a teacher's aide in a class of 18 students.

Most of the students attending Lewis Cassidy come from broken homes where there may have been unemployment, divorces or drug and alcohol abuse. The school utilizes its limited funds through the use of a computer system and other amenities, but its greatest contributor by far is the tutoring program. The teachers at the school greatly appreciate and enjoy the help they receive from the students each week. For Chase and the others, it means gaining an "appreciation for how hard it is for the teachers to teach."

Satire views Villanova events in a comical light

By MICAHEL KNAB and
PETER SHAUGER
Staff Reporters

Yeah, yeah, we know. You all read the Villanovan every week. The last thing this paper needs is one of those cheesy "Year in Review" articles.

But what if the year didn't happen quite the way that it did? What if some hack put a virus into the computer of fate? What if Providence (not the Big East School) downed a few too many at happy hour? Maybe it would look something like this. REMEMBER (and this is for libel reasons): NONE OF THIS REALLY HAPPENED, BUT IT COULD HAVE ... MAYBE.

SEPTEMBER

Villanova places first in the Pansy school category in the latest survey by U.S. News and World Report, barely edging out Northeastern Tennessee Junior College, Dayton School of Typewriter Maintenance and Syracuse. The news instantly becomes a staple of the tours that Blue Key gives to naive high school students, right up there with the story about the one-of-a-kind redwood on campus.

Villanova Dean of Students, the Rev. John Stack, O.S.A., is declared the winner in Villanova's first annual Nintendo Challenge, sponsored by the Student Programming Council (SPC). When asked about the allegedly weak competition, Stack expressed surprise that few students turned out for the event. "There's really no need to be inside studying this early in the semester," Stack said.

Students proceed to denounce the administration and the SPC for fostering an anti-intellectual climate. The following week the Villanovan publishes a front-page photograph of Stack standing next to a huge inflatable Dr. Mario in the Quad. Stack was the one not wearing a stethoscope.

OCTOBER

The Interfraternity and Panhellenic councils unanimously pass a new Risk Management Policy after being without one since the previous spring. Greek leaders had claimed that the previous policy was "unworkable" and demanded change. Unlike the old policy, the new policy mentions nothing about alcohol consumption, sexual harassment or hazing, but does restrict "reckless playing in traffic" and "mutilating small furry animals with a hacksaw on Tuesdays."

After being grilled mercilessly by hostile Radnor Township residents, Villanova political science professor and Board of Commissioners candidate Robert Langran accuses incumbent James J. Marks of producing a "high-tech lynching." During the hearings, broadcast live on Villanova's new FM radio station WXVU, Langran is accused by township residents of supporting the interests of Villanova students. After the election Langran says, "I would have rather been shot by an assassin's bullet than have to endure this process again." Students say they had trouble following the hearings since WXVU was only on the air every other day.

NOVEMBER

The College Republicans raise objections to the use of new stationery for the Villanova Sesquicentennial, saying that the depiction of the two Villanova Chapel steeples on University letterhead is a blatant attempt to legitimize homosexuality.

Dorley directs Villanovans to valuable experiences

By SCOTT M. SCHEIDT
Staff Reporter

Dr. Albert J. Dorley Jr., director of the Villanova internship program, has been a key individual to many Villanovans by playing maestro to a concert of invaluable on-the-job experiences enjoyed year-round by many juniors and seniors in the College of Arts and Sciences.

The internship experience offers a host of opportunities usually unavailable to those who do not take advantage of the program. According to Dorley, "The internship is an opportunity [for students] to put their major to good use." It is an experience in which students can develop self-confidence and "learn that they are competitive and have something to offer."

Dorley agreed that presently students in certain areas of interest are often expected to have had an internship experience prior to the application process for jobs after graduation. This is especially true for a student attending a basic liberal arts school who is aspiring to an occupation that is often performed by those who had enrolled in a collegiate program specifically designed to prepare students for a particular line of work. The internship program is a prime opportunity for students who find themselves in this position. Through an internship, a student can acquire that particular skill or experience necessary to remain competitive in the job market, one that might have been impossible to obtain in the classroom.

"The internship is a period of time in which students can also enhance their career goals," said Dorley. Through on-the-job experience, students can better understand the industry of interest to them and, if needed, redirect their efforts to goals more suitable for them, he said.

Another big advantage to those who have internships is "making contacts with other professionals and networking," said Dorley. Often through these relationships students find jobs or are connected with those who might be able to provide one.

When asked about the range of internship possibilities available to Villanovans, Dorley said, "It's really limitless." There are, of course, the traditional internships in lawyers' offices, radio stations, public relations departments and advertising, and then there are also those who have found, well ... different kinds of internships, like the Villanovan interning at the Norristown Zoo this year.

Students are allowed to obtain as many as 15 credits for their internship experience. For example, some Villanova students have spent the semester down in Washington, D.C., interning at such prestigious places as the State Department, the Pentagon and the Treasury Department, and some have even acted as assistants to congressmen.

The only major change in the internship program since it began in 1976 has been the raising of the required cumulative GPA of juniors and seniors in the College of Arts and Sciences from a 2.5 to a 3.0.

All those who are eligible are encouraged to participate. Remember, upon successful completion of this semester, those in the class of 1994 are eligible for placement in 1992 summer and fall internships.

Villanova interns receive education and experience

By AMY BUCCI
Staff Reporter

If you are thinking about a career that requires "hands-on" experience then an internship could be the perfect opportunity for you to get a foot in the door.

Villanova's extension internship program, requires a 3.0 GPA and an essay describing what your learning goals are. Most people in the program highly recommend it to juniors and seniors who have electives, since internships are worth either three, six, or nine credits.

Karen Vonderschmalz works Tuesdays and Thursdays at KYW-TV3 in Philadelphia for Evening Magazine. Her official title is production assistant and the station manages to keep her busy with various interesting and important jobs. She researches information for a lot of the stories, selects background music and is responsible for finding film footage.

In one case, a famous model was appearing on the show and Vonderschmalz was sent to find old film footage of that model. Sometimes when taping occurs she even helps out in the control room. Channel 3 has a policy of hiring back old interns, and many of her co-workers are willing to write her favorable recommendations. Vonderschmalz emphasized that this internship has helped her narrow her career choices, help her in her job search and has given her an "extra edge."

Meghan Klipfil probably has one of the more unusual internships. She's working at the New Jersey Aquarium as a laboratory technician. Her responsibilities include testing water quality and dissecting some of the dead animals. Through these dissections, she and other lab workers try to determine the cause of death and alter water content to avoid further losses.

One of the biggest problems Klipfil runs into is in the ocean tank, which contains many types of fish. In this tank it is harder to treat infections since an antidote that cures one type of fish could have adverse effects on another.

The new addition of seals to the Aquarium also proves to be more work for Klipfil. Their bacterial levels have to be regulated daily because of stricter laws for mammals. Klipfil said that "lab experience [at the Aquarium] is much better than just chemistry lab at school."

The Aquarium has helped her resume and made excellent lab equipment available to her. The most important thing she is learning is a sense of responsibility and perfection. Klipfil has learned that small mistakes can be harmful, and she has to get things right the first time, she said.

Humorous look at year's events

Due to an overwhelming student response, Campus Ministry Office announces its plans to use the Connelly Center Villanova Room as the permanent site of Sunday student Masses. The 105-year-old St. Thomas of Villanova Church, currently undergoing renovation, would be turned into a spectacular hall for catered dinners, large indoor campus events and blood drives. According to a Campus Ministry spokesperson, the Villanova Church Room, as it would be called, "provides a suitable place for worship without the distractions of antiquated decorations like statues and stained glass windows." A protest to put an outline of the Villanova Church Room on the new Sesquicentennial stationery was unsuccessful.

DECEMBER

Athletic Department Head Ted Aceto announces that the Villanova men's basketball team would no longer be able to play its home games at duPont Pavilion, since many players don't project the image of typical Villanova students. An unnamed source quotes Aceto as saying, "Having someone on the team who's 7-feet tall and has an accent and a bad haircut just doesn't comply with what we're all about here." Head Coach Rollie Massimino said that he will stand by his team, saying that playing on duPont is merely a "perk" that could easily be made up for in the team's $3 million budget and that he will not cave in to such a blatant attempt to manipulate his team by someone without proper jurisdiction.

The Villanova Department of Public Safety sponsors an end-of-the-semester semi-formal dinner with a "Winter Wonderland" theme. Part of the extensive decorations include authentic-looking piles of fake snowballs. At one point in the evening, a frustrated student attempts to throw one such snowball at the hired pianist, who had been playing the "Hawaii Five-O" theme song repeatedly for over an hour. The student receives a $100 fine.

JANUARY

New sorority rush procedures are proposed by Villanova's newest sorority, Epsilon Mu Gamma (a.k.a. Eau My Gawd) following complaints from many of the rushees that the 30-minute meetings promote atmosphere based on superficial judgements. With the new procedures, superficiality would be completely eliminated, and the extra 15 minutes added to each meeting would include five minutes each of jumping up and down, crying and hugging, in that order.

Faced with severe budget cutbacks, the Center for Peace and Justice Education is unable to fund its annual trip to Washington, D.C. to rally in opposition to the 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision legalizing abortion. Instead the group travels to West Conshohocken, the nearest hotbed of political confrontation, only to be immediately arrested for walking past a liquor store during the march.

The arresting officers cite a township code forbidding underage students from "being in the atmosphere of alcohol." At their court hearing, many students protest the charge, but West Conshohocken Judge John T. Sachaczenski convicts them all and imposes $140 fines, asking the defendants if they ever felt that life is like a jelly doughnut. Puzzled, the defendants ask what he means. He replies, "Doesn't matter. Guilty as charged."

FEBRUARY

Days after a stalker spies on a female student showering in Katherine Hall, hundreds of male students on campus claim responsibility. In a related story, girls not peeped at while in the shower form a support group whose purpose is to console girls not chosen by the stalker. Apparently many of them feel inferior and suffer bouts of deep depression. The new group ultimately forms yet another sorority, Sigma Iota Tau (a.k.a. Shower In a Towel).

In a joint effort between the departments of Public Safety and engineering, the University decides to build a solar-powered security van for use in the coming year. The van, complete with a state-of-the-art anti-mud device, is test driven by Norman Wallace, assistant director of Residence Hall Security. The van does not get stuck in any mud, despite repeated attempts, though it does crash into Stanford Hall unexpectedly during its final lap around South Campus.

MARCH

Basketball star Chris Walker performs in a series of on-campus concerts leading up to his major appearance with Rob Base April 10. His "Shoot the Rock" tour includes performances at Dougherty atop the "breads and spreads" bar to celebrate Dining Nutrition Month, a guest solo appearance at the March 22, 10 p.m. Mass and a performance in the Connelly Center Cinema as the opening act for the Student Government presidential debate.

At an awards ceremony sponsored by the Intercollegiate Forum, a number of campus groups present awards saluting the best and worst of Villanova for the 1991-92 academic year.

Most of all, Chase said, the program is "fun, and for the children it means getting better at math as well as getting to know us."

At the beginning, "Villanova was as far away as China" for the children, but now "they have been exposed to Villanova students as well as the military side of college life," said Chase. The ROTC members wear their uniforms when visiting the school and act as role models for the children.

Chase said the children are "always receptive and eager to impress us ... shaking our hands and asking to wear our hats."

Ultimately, the program hopes to give the youngsters a better understanding of the world awaiting them and encourage them to become involved in the military field some day. The children are exposed to a whole new world, a world that may be full of more promise than the harsh reality of life at home.

Chase sees the program as a great start — but it is just the beginning. Future plans include having approximately 20 students attend the ROTC Spring Review at 'Nova, which includes a command inspection and rifle drill. There have already been some ROTC members performing rifle drills at the elementary school.

Chase has also been involved with the "Adopt a School Committee" which is working to continue the tutoring program in future years at Villanova. There are a number of seniors currently involved as tutors who will be graduating this spring, but sophomore John Compton, who heads the committee, is optimistic of continued support within the ROTC unit for the upcoming year.

circulated. He did encourage open discussion on the issues.

The College Republicans were involved in drafting the letter, said Mark Thomas, chairman of the College Republicans. he based the claims in the letter and advertisement on other college's multicultural requirements that teach about topics of homosexuality and abortion rights, as well as set political agendas.

Frank Morgan, co-chairman of the College Republican's Committee for a Liberal Education, said the letter's ambiguous signing resulted from their lack of an organization title. He said the group of people involved wanted to send an "apolitical and nonpartisan" message with the letter.

Both Morgan and Thomas agreed that the diversity component has not been discussed adequately on campus. Thomas noted that there was only one copy of the core report available in the library for a student body in excess of 6,000.

Barbara E. Wall, O.P., director for the Center for Peace and Justice Education, expressed outrage that the College Republicans would use a "smoke screen of faith and Christianity" to disguise "hatred, bigotry and prejuice," with regard to the advertisement and letter.

Kristin Haaf, co-chairwoman for the College Republican's Committee for a Liberal Education, alleged that there was a pro-choice agenda being taught in her Women's Studies class. Haaf said she camed to school for a "free exchange of ideas" not a political agenda, and that the claims in the letter and advertisement were accurate.

"The multicultural agenda, yes is political ... however your [College Republicans'] agenda is also political. The political nature of the multicultural agenda is the question of whether or not we are going to open and expand the format of the academy as it exists now," said Maghan Keita, history professor. "My culture is taught simply as being a slave ... that is fundamentally where they [American history texts] begin. They don't talk about the great contributions that slaves made to this country."

Universities must decide whether they want to present subjects of inquiry or of advocacy. The "trendy sense of multiculturalism" is a prevalent pitfall of many universities, said Sobran.

"The whole world is not like Villanova. By opening yourself up to other cultures and other ways of thinking ... you will learn how to deal with others in the world. What is wrong with that?" said Sherry Bowen, professor of communication arts.

Correction

An article in the Nov. 22 edition of the Villanovan titled "Multiculturalism questioned" incorrectly quoted Kristin Haaf, cochairwoman for the College Republican's Committee for a Liberal Education, as saying that there was a pro-choice agenda being taught in her Women's Studies class. Actually, Haaf said that there was a political agenda being taught in the class.

Other responsibilities include photography, interviewing executives and sometimes sitting in on business meetings. She stresses the fact that she is learning not only how a newspaper is run, but also how a large corporation succeeds. As Giardina said, "I strongly recommend people take advantage of the internship program at Villanova because it offers hands-on, real-world experience that they would never be able to get in a classroom.

Internships can help students in any major find out if what they choose will be right for them. It is an enjoyable learning experience that will give college students an edge because it offers experience. All three interns admitted that they would have regretted it if they had not learned these "real-world" experiences while still in college.

those who came to lecture knew the information and ceased to continue coming," said Jeaneen Reily, coordinator of peace and justice education.

Reily believed education was "the key." Yet studies, such as those done by communication arts professors Dr. Cheryl Perlmutter Bowen and Dr. Paula Michal-Johnson, "have shown that it is not well understood whether the increased awareness of AIDS fostered by the media and educational campaigns had changed the way people relate in their intimate relationships."

According to their studies, students primarily use denial when dealing with AIDS. They tend to deny that their actions may have dire consequences and therefore do not take responsibility for their sexual behaviors. Some students report being more concerned with pregnancy than AIDS.

Through Bowen and Michal-Johnson's studies it was concluded that not much change in behavior occurred.

"Some students reported being more selective," said Bowen. "The educational campaigns have had some significant effects as to raise the level of concern and fear rather than changing behavior."

Bowen and Michal-Johnson state in their studies that most individuals do not have interpersonal skills to successfully negotiate safer sexual intimacy.

Campus rape issue discussed

The implication is that it is the victim's fault that she was attacked. A recent law has made it irrelevant to ask the victim about his or her past history during a rape suit, said Walker.

According to the FBI, one in three women and one in 10 men will be raped sometime in their life.

One of the most important factors that Walker must address when helping victims of rape is self-blame. "they feel they misjudged a situation and it's their fault ... especially with acquaintance rape when the victim knows the person, who is similar to herself, goes to the same university and is trustworthy," she said.

Walker found that students who seek rape counseling at the University usually were attacked during high school or over the summer. She said it takes one or two years for people to be able to talk about their rape incident.

"The victims do not have to come [for counseling]. Often they prefer to put it aside and feel they should handle it on their own ... They suffer alone or with friends," she said.

The Department of Public Safety encourages victims of rape to seek counseling.

Victims have several choices in dealing with the situation, Horton said. They can prosecute the attacker because rape is a felony, go through the student judicial system, or do nothing, he added.

Tracey Hentz, the new female investigator for the University, has called attention to the rising problem of campus rape. Hentz investigates sexual assaults on campus and conducts crime prevention seminars to educate students in the area of rape. She is also working with Mara Marowski, a member of the Date Rape Task Force, who is organizing a student-run support group for victims of rape, attempted rape and other sexual assault.

In many sexual assault cases drugs and alcohol are involved and affect both people's awareness and judgment. "People have to be responsible and not drink too much. Overindulging in alcohol reduces the ability to understand that there is a problem," said Horton.

Public Safety and the counseling center have published acquaintance rape prevention tips as part of their personal safety plan. The tips focus on direct communication between men and women and responsible men and women and responsible behavior on dates and at parties.

The plan advises people to avoid dark, secluded places on a first date and to be suspicious of anyone pressuring them to do something they do not want. People are advised to be assertive, to say "no" when they mean "no" and "yes" and whey mean "yes."

"Know and demand your rights as an individual," reads the safety plan. "Regardless of a person's attire, position in the community, social status,or other factors, anyone can be a rapist."

Hentz's crime prevention seminars will take place in both the male and female residence halls. "Guys need to be educated that in our society there is pressure on guys to 'score.' When that mentality sets in, it becomes depersonalizing," Walker said.

In a University of Pennsylvania pamphlet on acquaintance rape, women are advised to keep in mind that nonverbal actions can be misinterpreted. "Men may perceive provocative dress and flirtatious behavior as an invitation for sexual advances, although the dress and behavior are not wrong," states the pamphlet.

If someone is victimized, security officials advise the person to go to a safe place, call the police and family, and go to a hospital emergency room for medical care. Prosecuting the assailants norms that this behavior is not acceptable and protecting other potential victims, according to acquaintance rape information.

Rollie Massimino resigns as head coach of the Villanova men's basketball team to take over at the University of Nevada-Las Vegas (UNLV). Even though he will probably have a more athletic team, he said that he will still keep his stifling slow-down defenses as part of his game plan. His first official action as head coach will be to lobby to have the team mascot changed to become the UNLV Walkin' Rebels.

Balloon Day turns out to be less festive than usual due to the absence of balloons that usually adorn the walk outside of Connelly Center. The balloon arches apparently had been approved unwittingly by a careless worker in Student Activities, but when the display of balloons is brought to the attention of dean of Students, Stack, University President the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., and vice president for Student Life Richard Neville, they insist that the balloons be removed since they too closely resemble an inflated birth control device, contrary to Villanova's Mission Statement. Villanovans for Life, while supporting the administration's decision to prohibit the display of the balloons, expresses regret that the administration's actions resulted in the termination of hundreds of innocent balloon lives.

And that, friends, was the year that never was. If we neglected to belittle you, we apologize. Maybe next year.

"We don't try to recruit members in the strange sense of the word; we believe that we are making disciples. We introduce people to the Bible through personal interaction," Fridley said. "All making a disciple means is loving someone," he said.

"I know that I will be accused of narrow mindedness but Jesus taught people that the way to God was a narrow road and the gate is small, and it is a broad road that leads to destruction and the gate is wide," Fridley said.

Fridley said that their faith is based on the Bible and nothing else, with no interpretation. For instance, the group is not a democracy and women are not allowed to be evangelists, he said. The group has midweek and Sunday services as well as regular Bible study sessions.

The amount of time and money members give to the Church is completely up to what they have "decided in their hearts," he said. The Church is financed completely by its members, he said.

"We are not concerned with their practice of faith but the drastic change of behavior," Mostardi said. He mentioned one student whose roommate's behavior changed radically. "She withdrew from her sorority, her friends and her activities," he said.

Right now it is the friends and roommates of church inductees that are having difficulty dealing with the effect of their friends' new lifestyle, students have said.

One student, whose friend has become involved in the group, said that all of her friend's former beliefs are gone. "There's nothing anyone can do for her," she said. The student said that when they discuss the group the girl becomes defensive and patronizing. "She tries to convince us that what we think is wrong," she said.

Fridley likened this change of behavior to the story of Legion. He said that just as Jesus drove the demons out of Legion and into 3,000 pigs, the Church drives the demons out of its members. Of course people were shocked and frightened by the change in Legion, he said.

Joe Sweeney, a sophomore physics major, after attending meetings and parties sponsored by the Church of Christ, became concerned about the nature of the group and went to the administration.

He said that his first impression of the group was that they were very pleasant and warm. "There was no indication of any sort of religious affiliation," he said.

After the party, one of the group's leaders continued to call him and ask him to go to church. Sweeney finally went to the baptism of his friend who was completely immersed in a bathtub as her induction into the church.

Throughout his affiliation with the group, he said that he asked questions that seemed to disturb the leaders. "Freedom of thought was strongly disapproved of. They stressed a word-for-word reading of the Bible. No interpretation or traditions are considered," Sweeney said.

"Joe is not for this Church. He has always had deep, evil suspicions of the group," Fridley said. He said that he kept Sweeney away from other members in the group because they were "fragile in their spirituality."

Fridley denied that the group uses such tactics and has never drugged the food at their functions. He also stressed that members are free to choose how much time they spend on Bible study.

'Yankees' brings game to stage

By COLEEN KENIREY
Assistant Entertainment Editor

Adhering to the old axiom for success, "save the best for last," the Villanova Theatre is currently presenting "Damn Yankees," the final production of the Season of Just Desserts. The play, scored by Richard Adler and Jerry Ross and based on the novel The Year the Yankees Lost the Pennant by Douglas Wallops, was originally staged on Broadway in 1955. It is the story of an old baseball fan, Joe Boyd, who sells his soul to the devil for the opportunity to lead the Washington Senators to the pennant, as slugger Joe Hardy.

The Villanova production, directed by Terry Guerin, faced two challenges posed by the nature of the play itself: to recreate a show designed for the vast scope of Broadway and to achieve a quality performance simultaneously in two very difficult genres, musical and comedy. The musical numbers translate extremely well to Vasey's small stage and one exceptional example is Beth Dannenfelser as the sultry temptress Lola performing "Whatever Lola Wants." Although the dancing is somewhat weak, the cast's fantastic vocal abilities, sharp comedic delivery and eye-catching costumes and sets outshine this single flaw.

Mark Erson displays his professional-level acting talent as Joe Hardy and utilizes his strong voice well in "A Man Doesn't Know." One of the definite highlights of the play is David Warner's hysterical portrayal of Applegate, the red-suited embodiment of Beelzebub himself. One of Warner's particularly excellent scenes occurs in his amusing performance of "The Good Old Days" in which he rises from a smoking tub clothed in a red robe and devil's head slippers.

The cast is comprised of a number of Villanova graduate and undergraduate students. Sophomore Suzanne Rumignani and graduate student Robin Weiss provide endless laughs as two of Shoeless Joe's older fans. The rest of the ensemble does an equally fabulous job in numbers such as "The Game" and the visually appealing "Two Lost Souls." The remaining performances of "Damn Yankees" are April 8-12 at 8 p.m., with a Sunday matinee at 2 p.m.

V.U. Jazz Festival excites enthusiasts from area

By JOSEPH R. MC CABE
Staff Reporter

Last weekend, Villanova held its third annual jazz festival. High school and college jazz bands from New York to Washington competed throughout Friday and Saturday, April 3 and 4. Friday's winning high school band opened for the Denis DiBlasio Quartet, while Saturday's college winner opened for the Woody Herman orchestra that evening.

The Thundering Herd, as the orchestra is known, have been an integral part of American jazz for more than 50 years. Under their former leader, Woody Herman's band made a name for themselves as they kept big band music alive while exploring other directions. Regarded highly by critics, they have won several Grammy awarads for their melodies.

Saturday night's performance showed off the latest Herd. Although their average age is only 28, the band thrilled the audience under their current musical director Frank Tiberi. Jazz is a form of music that is best appreciated live. Each member of the orchestra proved that as they displayed their skills on Coltrane's "Giant Steps," "Fire and Ice," and other favorites.

Jazz is a form of music that is best appreciated live.

Tiberi looked like an inspired painter as he waved his clarinet through the air, forming a composition in a manner both abstract and beautiful. Every band member received a solo, but whether they were brass, woodwind, percussion or strings, they were entirely professional. One of the evening's highlights was a raucous celebration of brass called "The War of the Saxophones." Some of the mellower compositions included "Woody Herman's Star," a tender tribute to their late band leader.

The band concluded with an unusual rendition of Copeland's "Fanfare for the Common Man," which combined big band with fusion. Don Heckman wrote in the New York Times, "You've got to think that the old Woodchopper would be proud of the current Herman Herd." Judging by their applause, Saturday night's crowd would definitely agree.

Guitar virtuoso Les Paul reflects on the past

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Senior Reporter

If your a guitarist the term "Les Paul" spells out legend. However, if you're not, to you it might just be a guitar. But, in fact it is both. Les Paul is the creator of the most famous guitar in the world, the Gibson Les Paul. Modern guitar heroes such as Slash (Guns N'Roses), Joe Perry (Aerosmith) and Jimmy Page (Led Zeppelin) all play with nothing but the Les Paul model as each carry on Paul's mastering technique. Les Paul emulates everything a guitarist should be: smooth, accurate and always right on time, much like the guitar itself.

Paul is still performing with vigor and spice at Manhattan's Fat Tuesday's every Monday night with his trio, where several celebrity popular musicians such as Richie Sambora (Bon Jovi), Jason Newsted (Metallica) and David Bowie come for a few touchup lessons.

Recently a box set, Les Paul — the Legend & the Legacy, was released celebrating Paul's incredible history that simply lives on inspiring guitarists young and old to perform with the elegance and grace that he shares with the music community and the rest of the world.

VILLANOVAN: Since you're most famous for your guitar building, tell me a bit about how the "Les Paul" was derived and the story behind "The Log."

LES PAUL: "The Log came from a lot of pondering and thinking since 1927-28. I knew that in order to play outdoors I had to make my voice louder and my harmonica louder, that was easy. I took my mother's telephone and radio. I used the mouth piece for a microphone and the radio to project it, with some batteries. I played this Beekman's Bar-B-Que stand and in fact it's still there, I was down there last week in Wakishaw, Wisconsin. But ... they couldn't hear the guitar loud enough! So I took the pick-up and put a phonograph needle right in the top of the guitar where the bridge is ... that made it feedback too much. I then tried filling it with rags and plaster of paris but neither worked out so good. Then I wanted to find out what was happening, so I experimented. I put the ear piece from the phone under the strings and amplified it. With this discovery I started testing out materials. I took a piece of string and strung it on a piece of wood then I took the same string and put it on a railroad track. When I plucked the string on the steel track it was 100 times better than the wood but who the hell is going to carry that heavy metal around their neck! (Laughs.) So I had to find the densest piece of metal there was in order to duplicate that sound. Maple was too heavy, so we tried it with a 4x4 log and threw wings on it so I wouldn't look ridiculous in a night club. It worked. The next step was to sell it to a record company. They looked at that 4x4 and labeled me as the village idiot! They called it, 'the broomstick with the pick-ups' and that hung with me for ten years."

V: Did you originally go to Fender or Gibson with your idea?

LES PAUL: "Fender didn't fully exist yet, but the makers of Fender were looking at it in my backyard. They pondered over it by trying it with a bass line and a guitar line. Fender wanted in on it. I said I wanted to go with Gibson, the big company. They went for it but were afraid it was going to be a dog. They said, what should we call it? I said a Les Paul. It took from 1928-1951 to get that damn thing out."

V: How would you compare the Fender to the Gibson?

LES PAUL: "It's a different sound entirely ... to me it's like ice cream and fat meat! You could take your own choices. The Fender is a fine guitar but with my guitar, I wanted to make mine a beautiful instrument. It sounds rich and warm, partly why it is so popular. It's the ultimate ... the Fender is a plank of wood for sure with three or four screws into it." (Laughs.)

Bryan Adams wakes Philadelphia's youth

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Senior Reporter

Wrapped in a mere pair of baggy jeans, plain white t-shirt and a lumberjack flannel and black boots, Bryan Adams woke up Philadelphia during his April 4 show at the Spectrum.

Adams, through his 12-year-old career, has been constantly tagged as a Bruce Springsteen-John Mellencamp clone with cute looks and blonde locks. Although he does not possess the from-the-streets poetic flavor of Springsteen or the social consciousness of Mellencamp, Adams has created his own niche in the world of rock.

Emotion is Adams' key and only stage prop. He sings with such sheer emotional strength that it's hard not to take him seriously. Opening the show with the new track, "House Arrest," was a harbinger of a long night of honest heart felt rock that was almost irresistable.

Star-struck females came to see Adams in droves. They screamed, they give him presents and mostly of all, and most dramatically, they weep incessantly to ballads, "Straight From the Heart," "Heaven," "Everything I Do (I Do For You)" and "All I Want is You." The question that plagues everyone's mind is, "what's so special about Bryan Adams?"

The secret to Adams' success as an artist runs along the similar reasons to why his singles, such as "Summer of '69" and "This Time," are popular. Both are presented in a low-key down home comfortable fashion that has made Adams who he is today.

On the stage Adams' has no gimmicks, a bare background and enough energy for two frontmen. His two-hour plus greatest-hits set was heavily sprinkled with nine new songs, each off of Adams' latest disc, Waking Up the Neighbors. He is fairly humble. Girls hand him flowers, Adams takes them to show his recognition then simply puts the flowers in his backpocket and carries on. It was this easy-going quality that had him in the hearts of every Philadelphian present.

Adams played it straight the whole night through, performing favorites such as "Cuts Like a Knife," "Heat of the Night" and "One Night Love Affair." But, perhaps one of the finer points was his acoustic version of "When the Night Comes," the hit he wrote for Joe Cocker (also recorded by Cocker).

His strong musical zest keeps him from falling to the wayside. His three cord riff-ola technique is not revoluntionary nor is it something that can be reproduced. However, try replacing Adams' effort and you'll realize it can't be matched ... even if he's shy and humble.

SET LIST: "House Arrest," "Kids Wanna Rock," "Hey Honey-I'm Packin' You In!," "Can't Stop This Things We Started," "This Time," "It's Only Love," "Cuts Like a Knife," "Touch the Hand," "Thought I'd Died and Gone to Heaven," "When The Night Comes," "Heat of the Night," "Heaven," "Everything I Do (I Do For You)," "Run to You," "Somebody," "One Night Love Affair," "All I Want Is You," "Do I Have to Say the Words?" and "There Will Never Be Another Tonight,"

Cafe Innuendo geared to theatre crowd

By THOM ARNO
Staff Reporter

"Cafe Innuendo," a Villanova Student Theatre production, had its final performance of the year on April 5. Sadly, this was not a show I enjoyed; better yet, I felt like I was not a part of it.

Jerri Smith opened the show with an oral rendition of an Alice Walker short story that hinted toward comparisons of man's libido to a lion's primitive characteristics. Then, Dennis Phares, Dan Greeis and Caroline Phares took the stage. Armed with a keyboard, guitar and their respective voices, they entertained the crowd with covers of two Joe Jackson songs, a Grateful Dead ditty, and 10,000 Maniacs cover. Phares voice on the Maniacs' "What's the Matter Here," painfully reminded me of Little Orphan Annie meets "Star Search," but the act was saved by keyboardist Dennis Phares' stoned-Harry-Connick interpretation of the "Flintstones" theme.

Anne Marie Murphy and Mike Guerro followed with a one-act production that outlined the stereotypical parameters of a one-night fling. Murphy's character wanted, although only knowing her eventual lover for thiry minutes, the encounter to be full of commitment and love. Guerro's character wanted more simple things. On the whole, this performance was enjoyable, most likely because it is one we can all identify with — or at least wish we could identify with.

The two semi-depressants of the night ensued. "Innuendo" rookie Carol Scott read her poetry and Brian Gillian gave a comedy act. Scott was understandably uncomfortable and her poetry dragged at times, but her aside jokes and comments helped salvage her routine. And you have to give her kudos for having the courage to share such an intimate art form. As for Gillian's set, it was agreed it should have been entitled "Comedy ????." It was like watching Mario Joyner, without the actual comedian following.

Jerri Smith then returned to perform a self-created piece with the help of Adrian Ready. The work focused around the premise of "how you can be your best friend and worst enemy at the same time." Even in its rough stages, it was obvious that Smith has a creative talent festering within her.

Poet Tony Giampetro read his work to close the evening. Here, the prose was abstract, court and entertaining, something I was expecting from the entire show.

In the past, apparently, the performers were more diverse and not from one particular sect of the incredibly varied campus that is Villanova University. This show seemed to be comprised of theatre-types who had worked together before, and were celebrating the culmination of a successful year.

In all, "Cafe Innuendo" was not bad, it was that I just did not get this latest installment of the continuing saga. I applaud the performers for bringing artistic talent to the campus, and I look forward to next year's shows and hope to see fledgling Bohemians take the stage and peddle their wares.

scenery at the Five Points and the Cutler Park where you performed.

LES PAUL: "The Five Points was a center of Wakishaw. My father was quite the carouser back in his day. He was a live wire. He played craps win or lose. One day he'd come home with a trombone, a ring, a bus ... that was the Five Points. Then there was Cutler Park, which is now the Les Paul park, that place held band concerts. I would play there quite often ... I love that place."

V: You worked with Bing Crosby early on with songs like, "It's Been a Long, Long Time." How did you hook up with him and what role did you play with him?

LES PAUL: "I was with Fred Rurigan doing a radio show in New York from 1937-1941. My goal then was to play with Bing. When my five years was up with Fred, I told Fred I was leaving. He said, 'Who got ya,' I said, 'Crosby.' He said, 'I knew I'd lose you. How did he get you?' I said, 'I never met the man! I just gonna nail that job with him.' I ended up packing my car and heading out for him. I finally got to play for him and he hired me on the spot."

V: You influenced so many guitarists of today, who influenced you?

LES PAUL: "Eddie Lang, Bing Crosby's guitarist from Philadelphia. He worked with everybody. He was THE guitar player. He was very astute. I followed in his footsteps and in fact replaced him when I went to work for Crosby myself. I had to first learn everything he knew then go on from there. The best way to become a real guitar player is to learn from the master, namely your idol. Then through your practice you create your own style cause even if you copy someone, you'll never emulate them completely. You create your own tone and personality with those six strings. All depends on how you pick it!"

V: How much of a role does improvisation play in performing?

LES PAUL: "All of it! You should know your instrument so well that you should be able to go to it at anytime. It's all in cooperation with moods and feelings that recreate your expression time and time again with every lick."

V: Today volume is the big thing. How loud, fast and aggressive can one play?

LES PAUL: "I love a low volume, even turned off. A normal listening volume. When I play you can hear a pin drop. Some guys come see me play and they get riled up so I turn that mother up!"

V: What guiatarists of today catch your eyes and ears?

LES PAUL: "I'd say George Benson, I'd say Al DiMinola, Eric Johnson, Paco."

V: Where would you say rock pioneers such as Edward Van Halen and Jimmy Page fit in?

LES PAUL: "Oh, I am sorry I didn't mention them cause I meant to. Eddie is fantastic, he's a real kick. Beck, Clapton, there are so many. But they don't spread themselves out enough. They are so talented yet they stick in one area. Someone like Al DiMinola is into technique and finesse. Van Halen has to get busy or he isn't in it. I think things are coming around again that not only mom and dad like. My god the kid comes from from Madison Square Garden and he can't hum anything! His ears hum. I do appreciate what they are all trying to do. Some of it's good, some of it's bad."

V: What about the current competition for speed? Everybody is trying to outplay each other through quickness. What is your perspective on this?

LES PAUL: "My outlook is in the opposite direction. I go out there and get'em with real music. I got guys with long hair and rings in his noses that come in the bus loads. They are speed freaks. So I get a bunch of real ultra fast scales and blow'em away. Then I say, 'There you are fellas?' (Laughs.) A speed run for the sake of speed is unnecessary but sometimes it's OK."

V: What is your impression of some of today's guitar heroes?

LES PAUL: "Richie Sambora's (Bon Jovi) a sweet guy. He comes down and sits in. I really enjoy his playing. Then you got someone like Slash (Guns N'Roses) and I'm lucky if I can see him through all that hair. I enjoy him too, he's doing fine and people love him, that's what counts."

V: Could you explain the Les Paulverizer and its comparison to today's guitar toys?

LES PAUL: "It was doing a radio show with my wife Mary Ford. I used it for variety so the audience won't be bored. I'd make Mary's voice into an orchestra or a glee club and with my guitar. The audience loved it. I was almost a myth. I could switch things around with sounds. I was the tinker, Mary was the sensible one. I put this box on my guitar and it worked. It does everything. President Eisenhower was the first to hear it. It was before its time."

V: How would you describe your relationship with your wife Mary Ford? You were business partners as well as a couple, how did that work out?

LES PAUL: "I never thought I'd find anyone as talented or as beautiful as Mary. We had a fine marriage and career together. She wanted out and I wanted in all the time. I need to work. I think work is the greatest privilege in the world. I play only once a week now due to my arthritis. But, I look forward to Monday nights."

V: You have been tagged as a living legend. You seem to be very down to earth, how do you carry that title?

LES PAUL: "To be honest, I don't pay attention to that at all. As far as I'm concerned, he's someone else. When I see myself on old recordings, I think it's someone else. It's like the time Mary called me a genius. I scolded her for it. I hear it all the time. I read it and go right by. I never met a genius and I don't know what one is. I always thought of myself as a guy trying to play the guitar and make people happy."

Dialogue rules in 'Jump'

By AARON NICODEMUS
Entertainment Editor

Nic's Picks

There once was an outspoken sports prognosticator, named Jimmy "The Greek," who made the outrageous claim that blacks were biologically better athletes than whites. Something to do with bigger thighs or genes or something. There are a larger proportion of blacks in basketball and football, two of the more athletically challenging sports. So maybe Jimmy, in his own infinite wisdom, had a point. White men, it appears, cannot jump.

"White Men Can't Jump" opens on the fast-paced courts of L.A.'s Venice Beach, with its basketball courts teeming with the life of the city: pickup games. Among the frantic showboat dunks and trash-talk insults filling the air is one Sid Deane (Wesley Snipes), the biggest fish in a little pond. His magnetic personality only enhances his electric and flashy playing style. Sid never loses a game on the court, especially when there is money involved.

It is in the middle of a "money game" that a plain looking white kid, Billy Hoyle (Woody Harrelson) steps onto the court as Billy then challenges Sid to a free throw contest, for $62. With his wide jaw and goofy smile, Billy manages to hide the fact that this "chump" is a player. The hick takes the slick for all he is worth.

It turns out that Billy has been hustling basketball to survive for quite some time, so he and Sid form a con-team. Their con hinges on the fact that they appear to be strangers, and that their all-black opponents will assume that Billy, being white, will be the worst player in their zip code. Their scam nets them some decent pocket change, until Sid decides to con Billy in a set-up game. Their friendship goes through many similar twists and turns, with neither con man ever knowing where he stands.

Possibly the best reason to see "Jump" is the constant banter exchanged on and off the court between Billy and Sid. They debate over whether white people can "hear" Jimmy Hendrix or whether black players care more about looking good than winning. While the dialogue moves with lightening speed, there is never any real depth to the characters or to their friendship. One crack follows another, but neither seems willing to let their guard down long enough to understand the other.

"White Men Can't Jump" could have gotten itself bogged down in racial issues, criticizing society's ills or examining its weaknesses. Happily, it concentrates on humor and keeps the mood light. At the same time, in a film with so much potential, only the obviously comic elements are presented with style. From dunking to behind-the-back passes, the viewer gets a great look at the game of basketball, but the film misses out by ignoring drama all together. Several individual scenes, like a stint on "Jeopardy" and some interesting dialogue between men and women make "White Men Can't Jum" worth a view.

FAST FORWARD: Set for release in the summer, "Lethal Weapon 3" brings Danny Glover and Mel Gibson back together as two opposite cops fighting crime in L.A. Could the sequel's sequel better the first two? It is unlikely, but "Lethal Weapon 2" surprised many doubters. "3" may well be the box office hit of the summer.

REWIND: "Deceived" takes center stage as the only worthwhile video debut this week, and that is not saying much. Goldie Hawn stars as a contented Manhattan housewife who discovers that her perfect husband is not whom he appears. Even in a plausible thriller, Hawn seems out of place. She can make us laugh without effort, but convincing dramatic acting is not her game. "Deceived," on its tightly wound plot alone, makes for an enjoyable night in.

CLIPS: Villanova's Cultural Film Series features "C'est La Vie," set in a late '50s French beach resort. The film "contrasts the simplicity of childhood with the world of adult complications." It is being shown in the Connelly Center Cinema on Sat. April 11 at 7 p.m., Sun. April 12 at 3:30 and 7 p.m., and Mon. April 13 at 7 p.m.

Def Leppard roars again

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Senior Reporter

ROCK QUARRY

Def Leppard have awoken from their five-year coma. However, it seems that they have been frozen the whole time. Adrenalize, their fifth effort, could very easily be the seond half of 1987's Hysteria.

The Leps seem to have found the secret HMF ("Hit Making Formula") and have applied it to this heavily commerical LP that appears to have molded each song in a hit-single formation.

The opener and first single, "Let's Get Rocked," is basically Bart Simpson singing "Pour Some Sugar On Me" (Hysteria's fourth and biggest single). The song is about an "ordinary average everyday dude" who spouts out wisecracks like, "Let's get the rock outtahere!"

There are the predictable ballads (it would not be a pop-metal album without them) such as "Tonight" and "Have You Ever Needed Someone So Bad." Each contain light-headed lyrics that are not even included in the packaging.

Even rockers are scarce. "Tear It Down," "White Lighting" and "Personal Property" are all that is served while middle-road anthematic tunes such as "Make Love Like a Man," "I Wanna Touch U" and "Heaven Is" make up the base of the Leps rehashed sound.

Despite their blatant commerciality, Leppard is irresistable. Yes, they have become ear candy, but they must be commended on their outstanding production and ability to market themselves. Their synthetic sound will, no doubt, make Adrenalize dive into 1993 while their touring and promotion will push it most likely past Hysteria if not match its overwhelming success. But, it is almost too safe.

"It's not the lyrics that cause problems, but rather the white youths liking a black artist," says rap rocker Ice-T with a sarcastic tongue, "But the real problem is a white girl liking a black guy." Statements like these are what makes Body Count such a bold band. They speak their minds and make sure they are heard on their revolutionary self-titled LP.

"17 blacks were killed on the street last night ... Now sports!" Snips of dialogue like this season the album which mainly consists of hardcore speed metal mixed with a funk back-beat. Ice-T is one of the leaders in the white-black crossover music movement. Rappers Run DMC started the ball rolling when they covered Aerosmith's "Walk This Way," but Ice takes a different route. He pushes the boundaries of the average norm to the extreme, not for profit and fame but for unity and an open-minded attitude.

There are more black youths in jail than in college." Body Count is both violent and vile. Songs like "Evil Dick," "KKK Bitch" and "Bowels of the Devil" are vicious, if looked at upon the surface, but under closer scrutiny they are not there to shock but to teach.

For example, "Momma's Gotta Die Tonight" is not about killing your parent but rather breaking down the barriers of racism. Ice sings, "Momma, she cared for me and put me on this earth ... But now I find that she has left me dumb and blind, poisoned, twisted and destroyed my mind. She taught me things that simply were not true. She taught me hate for race, that's why I hate you! ... I found my mother was an evil woman. She hated Puerto Ricans, Mexicans, Jamaicans, Indians, Orientals, Momma was no good."

"Cop Killer" finds Ice battling prejudiced cops who abuse their authority. "This song is dedicated to all the cops ;who force violence upon people because they don't like their hair length or style of music. I'd like to personally put a bullet through each of those pig's heads."

Ice raises several strong points concerning highly sensitive issues that most artists are afraid to address. Even his hard core sound is immense, but the album does invoke a problem. His violence is so severe that many listeners, that may be either too young or uneducated, just might thrive on the violence of the music's lyrics. Meanwhile what Ice is doing is merely representing actual street drama with strong realism. He closes by demanding, "It's your freedom! Have some ... courage!"

PEBBLES: Motley Crue has found a new lead singer, John Corasi from the Scream. Meanwhile former frontman Vince Neil is working on a film soundtrack that will be released prior to his first solo LP ... Cinderella has found a new drummer: Kevin Valentine from Lou Gramm's (formerly of Foreigner) now defunct group, Shadow King. The band is currently in rehearsals and plans to hit the road again supporting a new release in early '93 ... Bon Jovi is soon to return as they are currently in Canada at Little Mountain Studios with producer Bob Rock, recording the new LP which features the ballad, "Bed of Roses." Look for a fall release ... Michael Jackson recently wrapped up filming the video for his third single, "In The Closet." The video will premiere his new look which was consulted by the new material girl herself, Madonna, who will in fact appear in the video in her bleached-blonde look. The video will air April 23 on Fox ... Weird Al Yankovich will release, "Smells Like Nirvana," a parody of Nirvana's "Smells Like Teen Spirit," as his first single. The video premieres this Monday at 5 p.m. on MTV.

Caldwell captivates in traditional style

By COLEEN KENIREY
Assistant Entertainment Editor

With a romantic and old-fashioned jazz sound similar to Harry Connick Jr., Bobby Caldwell first became known for his 1979 pop hit, "What You Won't Do For Love." He has been enlisted as a songwriter by Amy Grant, Chicago, Al Jarreau, Natalie Cole, Neil Diamond and Peter Cetera, among others. His current achievement is Stuck On You which features a smooth jazz tune, sharing its name with the CD's title, in the tradition of '40s crooner Frank Sinatra. Another excellent selection is "Don't Tread On Me," a '50s style song currently gaining popularity.

Through this sound, which evokes various musical periods of the past, Caldwell's golden vocals tell emotionally moving tales. He draws his audience in and makes them feel the passion in his lyrics, captivating them by his strong stage presence. Caldwell will work his magic at the 23 East Cabaret April 10.

Another talent coming to the area is Steve Forbert, a guitarist who got his start in 1976 playing his Gibson acoustic in New York clubs such as CBGB's. Before forming his first band in 1986, he released several potent solo albums: Alive On Arrival, Jackrabbit Smith, Little Stevie Orbit and Steve Forbert giving him extensive recording and touring experience. After forming a backup ensemble, the Rough Squirrels, he continued to make honest music and write down-to-earth lyrics.

Eventually Forbert's stellar live act caught the attention of bassist Garry Tallent of the E Street Band, who subsequently performed on Forbert's 1988 release, Streets of This Town. He opened for Edie Brickell and New Bohemians in 1991 and has just developed a new group of songs on The American In Me. Forbert's style combined tender vocals with stripped-down guitar focused melodies. This experienced guitar master will bring his talent to the Chestnut Cabaret stage April 11.

FLASH: Glenn Jones is a gospel choir-trained R&B vocalist who first toured when he was only 14 years old with a singing group called the Modulations. Through this experience Jones also learned to be proficient on the guitar and in music and lyric writing. Jones continued to refine and perfect his voice by performing with gospel greats Reverend Cleveland, Shirley Caesar, and the Mighty Clouds of Joy.

After Jones released his first album, Finesse, he starred in the off-Broadway musical, "Sing, Mahalia, Sing" with Jennifer Holliday. Adding another great accomplishment to his list of credits, Jones recorded Burt Bacharach and Carole Bayer Sager's song "Finder of Lost Loves" with Dionne Warwick. He then achieved his biggest hits to date, "We've Only Just Begun" and "Stay" which both landed in the R&B Top 10. His newest album, Here I Go Again, reflects his extensive experience and the diversity of his musical abilities. The multi-talented Jones will perform at the Chestnut Cabaret April 16.

Junkies mix live material

By JOHN KOLMER
Senior Reporter

As the lights came up, the crowd could see the stool and table decorated with glasses and a vase of flowers set on center stage. The Cowboy Junkies came out on Sunday to the claps and cries from fans that filled the Tower Theater to hear the beautiful, haunting vocals of singer Margo Timmons, and the mellow tones of the group's music.

One interesting aspect of this band is that three of the four main members are related: Margo sings, guitarist Michael Timmons also writes the songs, Peter Timmons is the drummer and an old friend of the family, Alan Anton plays bass.

The Junkies began the show with a beautiful and nearly energetic rendition of the opening track of their fourth and latest album, Black Eyed Man, a song called "Southern Rain". The first reaction of a long-time Cowboy Junkies fan is that Margo's vocals are much more upbeat and sprightly on this album and tour than in the past. As in earlier Junkies music, Margo's singing is characteristically slow and elegant. Previous records have never really had anything even remotely resembling a quick cadence. This new effort is, therefore, a slight departure from the Junkies' signature style. The rest of the concert swung between these two elements: the new and the old.

The concert was a fair mix of material from their various recordings, although the band did not play anything from the first album Whites Off Earth Now. Great songs from earlier albums like "Misguided Angel" and "Sun Comes Up, It's Tuesday Morning" were received with enthusiasm by the Tower crowd, as were the numerous tunes performed from Black Eyed Man.

One of the highlights of the concert was "Townes' Blues/ Cowboy Junkies Lament:" "Townes' Blues" was written by Michael, about life on the road with a friend of the Junkies, Townes Van Zandt, a craps-lover and musician, while "Cowboy Junkies Lament" was written by Van Zandt in dedication to the Junkies and their music. Both of these songs were preceded by anecdotes of the last Junkies tour by Margo, which added some humor to the lyrics.

Another highlight was the final song of the show called "Murder, Tonight in the Trailer Park," an incredibly lively sounding tune with a dismal storyline. There is a power in Margo's vocal delivery, as well as the rest of the band, that makes the song a shining point of the performance.

For an encore, Margo and Michael came out, sat down and played "The Last Spike," a song that Margo said was about "losing dreams." Afterward, the entire band reappeared for a very upbeat and loud rendition of "Sweet Jane," an old Velvet Underground tune that first brought the Junkies into the spotlight.

There is no over-dramatic showmanship at a Junkies concert, just people gathered to play and hear fantastic music and take in the ambiance of the scene. Michael Timmons, for instance, sits in a chair that someone would expect to find in a grandmother's kitchen, never standing, strumming with his head hung over the guitar and bobbing to the music. Likewise, the audience at the Tower, as at other Junkies performances, just sits as if awestricken, clapping excitedly but respectfully at each song's end.

In addition to the regular Junkies line-up, three other musicians joined the band on-stage: Jeff Bird on harmonica and mandolin, pianist Spencer Evans and Ken Myhr on lead guitar. These three gentlemen along with numerous others appear on virtually every Cowboy Junkies album, realling filling out the Junkies' typically sparse sound.

Co-headlining with Cowboy Junkies was John Prine, a country/rock singer from the '70s who has just released a comeback album called The Missing Years. Prine's performance was marked with humorous lyrics and upbeat twangy-country guitar sounds. A seemingly older crowd flocked to the Tower to see Prine in concert and cheered loudly in each in each silent space between songs. With tunes like "It's a Big Old Goofy World" and " I Guess I Wish You All the Best," Prine definitely gave his fans a reason to "hoot."

Prine also reappeared during the Junkies' set to sing his duet with Margo off of Black Eyed Man called "If You Were the Woman and I Was the Man," of which Margo stated, "That's my favorite part of every show."

'Psychotic' Tesla tears up the rock scene

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Senior Reporter

Tesla bassist Brian Wheat spoke to David J. Criblez in an exclusive interview for the Villanovan.

Few bands in today's market are brave enough to face the competition completely naked, stripped to the bare bones. Most have a crutch that they lean on for false support such as big stage props because their live show is not dynamic enough, weird hair-dos and make-up used to get attention and fill their videos with voluptuous women. Tesla goes against the grain of all of these bands. There are no frills, just thrills rock-n-roll has come to be more appreciated as the band is on their first headlining tour supporting their fourth and latest LP, Psychotic Supper. Entering their fifth year anniversary as recording artists, Tesla is a rare animal in today's music scene. Not only is their sound fierce but their live attack has left rock-n-roll scars on fans across the globe.

VILLANOVAN: Tesla is very much a no image-no nonsense type of band. Did this cause a problem when trying to get signed to a record company because you didn't have a gimmick?

BRIAN WHEAT: "I've seen it happen with a lot of other bands but fortunately it didn't happen to ours. We were left alone, which to us was exactly what we wanted. I think the reason we were left alone so much to pursue the roads we wanted to take was due to our goals and envisions. We had a sound from the start and we had solid music. If anyone were to screw with that, two things would happen, the music's passion would get lost and we'd be fuming."

VILLANOVAN: How do you see some of your peers who tend to use a lot of flash to make their music go over?

BRIAN WHEAT: "Its really to each his own ... whatever anyone wants to do. You can't put some one down because they dress in a different style then you or they wear make-up and you don't. We don't need bodyguards 'cause we are in it for the music. But there are so many facets to this business it really does not matter ... it's like one big circus and we're all under the same tent."

VILLANOVAN: Tesla's career has been on a steady climb with each album rather than have a breakthrough smash of a first album and then the second one is not great and you spend the rest of your career trying to beat it. How do you perceive this?

BRIAN WHEAT: "Just like you said, man. Our albums are all so different to us, so it's nice to see the public accept our varied styles. But, even if they didn't we'd be doing the same thing anyway (laughs)."

Telsa bassist Brian Wheat (second from right) and the band will appear at the Spectrum May 1.

VILLANOVAN: Do you think Tesla will last longer as a band because of your slow but steady rise upward?

BRIAN WHEAT: "Yeah ... I really can't speak for other bands, but it seems to work for us. As long as our music progresses and we as people and we as a band enjoy it, we will continue, without a doubt."

VILLANOVAN: With the band's name and album titles you have created a running theme throughout your work by tying things in with scientist, Nikola Tesla, the father of radio. Could you explain the band's connection with him?

BRIAN WHEAT: "We are not electronic freaks! (jokes) When we named the band after him it was basically because we could relate to his trip. He was an inventor and so are we. Our music is our invention. People stole from him and put him down, this was similar our situation early on. The albums titles are as follows: Mechanical Resonance — It's Tesla's theory that he could split the Earth, the Great Radio Controversy — dealt with the controversy of who invented the radio Marcone or Tesla. Psychotic Supper — came from Tesla's eccentric eating habits and his germ phobia that made him clean every piece of silverware, himself, several times before eating. It's kinda cool."

VILLANOVAN: Why do you identify with Nikola Tesla?

BRIAN WHEAT: "Simply because he was the underdog. I always root for the underdog no matter what. When we first started out we felt very much like he did, sheer underdogs."

VILLANOVAN: The new album, Psychotic Supper, is much heavier than your past efforts. How do you account for this?

BRIAN WHEAT: "Well, our last album, (Five Man Acoustical Jam) was acoustic, so anything after it is gonna sound real heavy. But we were going for that extra edge, that bite that makes it more interesting. We are essential extremists, when we are mellow we are completely melodic but then when we're rockin', we have that edge, rougher dangerous side."

VILLANOVAN: Overall, how would you categorize Tesla, in what musical frame does the band fit?

BRIAN WHEAT: "I'd say we're simply a rock-n-roll band, if anything. We can and do play many different facets of rock-n-roll. That's the real beauty of this band is the versatility. I can't see us drastically changing for every album simply for the sake of change. But, I can tell you we will try new things out, we always have been that way."

VILLANOVAN: The lyrical content of several of the new songs are based on controversial issues such as bad government, slavery and materialsim. Could you explain some of the tracks?

BRIAN WHEAT: "Sure. 'Government Personnel' is a prelude to a song entitled, 'Freedom Slaves.' Here issues such as individual freedom and self-human rights are played out and refer back to the Indians getting their land stolen and Vietnam vets getting bad treatment and lied to. 'Change the Weather' is based on the future and that in order to correct these wrong doings of the past we must work on our youth and clean out the system before it's too late. 'Edison's Medicine' refers back to Tesla and how he got screwed over by people like Edison."

VILLANOVAN: Your last album, Five Man Acoustical Jam was extremely successful. How did that originally surface?

BRIAN WHEAT: "It was a total and complete fluke. We were winding down the Great Radio Controversy tour and as a change of pace we decided to do a few shows acoustic. We had no intentions of putting an album out. The record company, after hearing some recordings, wanted to make a live album out of it. It basically fell together by itself. But now because of the album's great response we do a mini acoustic set within the middle of the new show."

VILLANOVAN: The song "Signs," from Five Man Acoustical Jam, was a big hit, in fact your biggest to date. Did it upset you that it was a cover song and not one of your own after it became big?

BRIAN WHEAT: "Oh, no ... not at all. If we had felt that way we wouldn't have put it out to begin with. I enjoy doing cover songs here and there. We do some live as well as for B-sides to singles."

VILLANOVAN: It's been said that during the writing process, you guys mold each song for the stage, making sure that each of them has that live quality. Do you see this as Tesla's secret ingredient?

BRIAN WHEAT: "Well, it's just that it helps give your song writing a bit of a push, a bit of a kick to it. It adds to the energy of the song. Our policy is: if we can't play it live ... we don't want it."

Metallica finds 'Justice' in Philadelphia

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Senior Reporter

"You can't kill the family," announced bassist Jason Newsted to a crowd of his 'friends.' Metallica is a bit more then just volume, long hair and the color black. They are probably the tightest and most powerful unit on the face of the earth. To Metallica, they are no such things as fans. They refer to them as friends of the 'family,' the core family that has stuck with them through the years. This outlook is what make their live shows so intense because they feed off the audience as much as the audience feeds off of them. The relationship creates static that is so overwhelming that your ears will not only ring but set fire as well. The bands' two night stand, April 6 and 7, at the Spectrum left Philadelphia in a fit of rage and anxiety ... and they loved every minute of it.

The metalheaded crowd, who have been starved since Guns N'Roses came in December, roared at the opening chords of "Enter Sandman." After the songs completion, lead singer/rhythm guitarist James Hetfield growled, "Now we've kicked your ass, you ready to kick ours?" Here the band dug back into the archives launching into classic Metallica with, "Creeping Death," "Welcome Home (Sanitarium)" and "Harvester of Sorrow" in order to feed the family.

The custom built arrowhead-shaped stage left the area clear of amplified clutter enabling each member to roam freely about several catwalks and ramps. An alcove, entitled the Snake Pit, held V.I.P. guests within the center of the stage. Meanwhile mikes were placed in every corner, this which gave the family a nice close shot of Hetfield. Even drummer Lars Ulrich moved around the stage with his two revolving drum kits.

Ulrich's drum solo, the shows centerpiece, smoked with sheer fire, proving his extreme musicality that he shares with each member. Hetfield joined Ulrich in a drum duel between the two kingpins showing a lighter comical side of Metallica which Ulrich calls, "pretty cool or pretty stupid."

"Move about! Help yourselves friends," cried Hetfield giving the let's go-green signal for slam dancing to the Metallicites while giving the seat ushers ulcers during scoarchers, "Through the Never," "Whom the Bell Toll" and "Whiplash." The revamped old songs were, if possible, performed with an even harder edge than before.

Meanwhile, guitarist Kirk Hammett showcased his lighting finger scales during encores of "Master of Puppets," "One" and "Damage, Inc." But it was the comradery between the band and its followers that stole the show. Whether its sharing beers with their friends jamming close-up to those who were in the Snake Pit or making sure each person had a good view of the stage, Metallica is probably the only band who truly plays for its people over themselves.

SET LIST 4/7/92: "Enter Sandman," "Creeping Death," "Harvester of Sorrow," "Welcome Home (Sanitarium)," "Sad But True," "Of Wolf and Man," "The Four Horsemen," Bass solo, "Orion," "Through the Never," "The Unforgiven," " ... And Justice medley," Drum solo, Guitar solo, "Nothing Else Matters," "Whom the Bell Toll," "Fade to Black," "Whiplash."

ENCORE #1: "Master of Puppets" and "Seek and Destroy."

ENCORE #2: "One," "Last Caress," "Am I Evil,?" "Damage, Inc.," "Bread Fan."

 ON 4/6/92: "Wherever I May Roam," "Battery" and "Stone Cold Crazy" were performed instead of "The Four Horsemen," "Bread Fan," "Of Wolf and Man" and "Damage, Inc."

B.B. King captured on CD

By MAURA K. RURAK
Assistant Entertainment Editor

Although it has been available for years on LP, B.B. King: Live at the Regal was recently re-released on compact disc. The 10 tracks included on the album are often considered the best of King's many live performances because of the variation and smooth transition between songs. King also shares his feelings with the audience and creates the club atmosphere that is often missing in large arena shows.

The album starts out by announcing "the King of the Blues, B.B. King" and keeps pumping from that moment on. The rhythms are as compelling as the truthful lyrics spun into amusing tales. "Sweet Little Angel," described as a "real, real oldie," thrives on King's voice and the twinkling of the ivories that are so much a part of the Blues tradition. The background brass section is as vital as the audience clapping in the background.

As always many of the songs deal with the loss of a loved one. "Let's think about a guy losing a girl ... yeah, that happens," says King going into "It's My Own Fault." The comic element of the tales far outweigh the sad bluesy tone implied by the titles such as "Every Day I Have The Blues," "You Upset Me Baby" and "Worry, Worry."

[illegible] have proven to be rather timeless.

"How Blue Can You Get" King asks the audience to listen to the reminiscent lyrics, "You're evil when I'm with you, and you're jealous when we're apart." The lyrics sound similar to today's rock ballads, "I let you live in my penthouse, you said it was just a shack." Ironically, the lyrics have proven to be rather timeless.

The blues could almost be considered a "rock" version of jazz. The songs are fast paced and the throbbing sounds are perfect for a small club's dance floor. It's almost impossible to listen without clapping your hands or joining in with the fun.

"This unique Regal session is the definitive statement of B.B. King's phenomenal rapport with a crowd, of the miraculous vibrations that can exist between audience and performer," states the front cover of the CD. Even through his conversation with the crowd, it is obvious that King loves what he is doing. The album, first released in 1971, is labeled as "a classic revisited" and it certainly is just that. Perhaps the most complete compilation of King's works, B.B. King: Live at the Regal will complete your blues collection.

150TH ANNIVERSARY

OFFICE OF UNIVERSITY DEVELOPMENT

April 1992

Dear Classmate:

Our graduation from Villanova marks the start of a new commitment for the Class of 1992. This commitment is one of sharing in the responsibility for the continued success of the University, its future students, and its mission.

To begin this commitment, our class has established the Class of 1992 Senior Class Giving Program. It provides an avenue for you to contribute your $100 breakage fee to Villanova as a donation to the University's Senior Class Scholarship Fund used to provide partial tuition scholarships to deserving university students.

Our goal is to have every member of the class participate in this worthy project, so please complete and sign the attached authorization form. Members of the Senior Week Committee will collect your form during Senior Week events, or you can drop it off at the Student Activities Office, located on the second floor of Dougherty Hall where extra forms are also available.

An announcement will be made at graduation indicating the class gift. The Class of 1990 donated $15,793 and the Class of 1991 raised $17,458. To be sure the Class of 1992 announces a larger total, please make your commitment today.

Your contribution will not only assist fellow Villanova students now and in the future, but it will enable us, the Class of 1992, to show our pride and commitment to Villanova.

Sincerely,

Temple transfer Jonathan Haynes says he will stay

By ED WASIELEWSKI
Assistant Sports Editor

He talks the talk, but can he walk the walk?

Everyone will have to wait until next season to catch their first glimpse of Jonathan Haynes, Villanova's point guard of the future. To capture Haynes at his finest, watch him in the open court blow by his defender and then slam dunk the basketball.

The future's already here at Villanova, and he's staying.

With the departure of Rollie Massimino, the basketball program is currently undergoing a period of transition. There is much speculation concerning the new basketball coach, but more important is the status of the recruits and Haynes, whom Massimino personally recruited from Temple.

A flashy 6-foot-4 product of Germantown Friends School, Haynes was a highly-touted senior recruit, averaging 33.6 points, nine assists and seven rebounds per game. A native of Philadelphia, Haynes was named to many all-America teams following his senior campaign, including McDonald's and Street and Smith's. He also was selected the 1990 Gatorade Pennsylvania player of the year and the Philadelphia Daily News and Philadelphia Inquirer player of the year.

As a youngster, Haynes dreamed of playing for the Georgetown Hoyas. In fact, when 'Nova upset Georgetown in the 1985 national championship game, Haynes remembers how he reacted.

"I hated Villanova at the time," said Haynes. "Everyone was outside in the streets banging on pots, making noise, and I sat in front of the TV and cried."

With Haynes intent upon going to Georgetown, Massimino never recruited him hard. And at the last moment, Haynes changed his mind, electing to stay close to home and attend Temple University.

After one short-lived, unsatisfying season, though, Haynes began to look elsewhere. For the first time in nearly 20 years, Massimino and 'Nova signed a Philadelphia player by making Haynes the first transfer ever to sign with the program during Massimino's era.

Yet, with Massimino's exodus to UNLV, people questioned whether Haynes would stay or leave.

Well, he is definitely staying. And he is definitely ready for next season. Right now.

Walking around campus, Haynes' demeanor is reserved, soft-spoken. And yet, after waiting patiently on the sidelines, the restlessness of not playing competitively for two years shows in every move he makes. Just ask Haynes about how the team looks next year and, leaning back, he gives a sheepish smile and starts to laugh.

It is not a cocky, arrogant laugh. And it is not a booming, roaring laugh. No, instead, Haynes' laughter is more silent, oozing with confidence and enthusiasm.

His quiet confidence is reflected on the basketball court, where Haynes has a penchant for dunking.

Haynes' confidence comes not only from his past achievements on the hardwood, but from the strong support system within the basketball program. After arriving in the fall, Haynes attributes much of his transition to Villanova senior co-captain Chris Walker. Walker taught him invaluable lessons, both on and off the basketball court, said Haynes.

As a new member of the basketball family, Haynes also quickly grew close to Massimino. Reputed as the legendary "Daddy Mass," Haynes found that Villanova's family-oriented basketball program was fact, not fiction.

"I could come into Coach's office and talk to him about anything," said Haynes. "He was more than just a basketball coach, he was a friend and confidant."

That is why the sarcastic, jeering cheers at the press conference hurt the basketball team and Haynes. Each member had his own unique relationship with Massimino, and the team was also Massimino's family.

Haynes said that the cheers from the students were a "real embarassment." For Haynes, the whole situation seemed ironic. At one moment, the fans were jeering Massimino, the next embracing the basketball players.

With time to reflect on the entire situation, Haynes felt that Massimino's acceptance of the UNLV job was the best option. The pressure of the media and the fans on Massimino and his family had been too much for Massimino, said Haynes.

And of all the players and recruits, Massimino's departure hit Haynes the hardest. Once again, his playing career was in limbo. Haynes had come to Villanova to play three years under Massimino, and now Massimino was gone. Haynes had never played one game for him.

"As a team, we're going to try to let this quietly die down," said Haynes. "We're all really looking forward to next year."

Haynes will leave the selection of the new coach to Athletic Director Dr. Ted Aceto and the athletic program.

"I have confidence in [Dr.] Ted Aceto and the athletic program," said Haynes. "I'm sure they'll find us a quality coach."

Excited to finally play collegiate ball, Haynes is eyeing Nov. 1, the first official day basketball practices commence. It could be the longest or the shortest 8 months till then.

"At this point, I feel I'm in prime physical condition," said Haynes. "I'm ready to play right now."

WXVU's Ryan Fannon with the call:

" . . . Haynes brings the ball upcourt, he has Lance on his right and Calvin Byrd to his left . . . there are two defenders between Haynes and the basket . . . he puts the ball between his legs, looks right . . . and wraps a no-look pass behind his back . . . Byrd dunks . . . oh, what a pass from Haynes . . . "

Kelly leads track in Miami

By LARRY LANZA
Staff Reporter

Senior Finn Kelly achieved a personal best half-mile time to lead Villanova to a 1-2-3 sweep in the 800-meters and highlight the men's track team's performance at the April 4 Miami Invitational at the University of Miami.

Kelly ran a 1:48.17 to capture first in the 800-meter by 1.5 seconds over teammate and runner-up Brad Sumner. In addition to marking a personal record, the time now provisionally qualifies Kelly for the NCAA Championships.

Sumner and freshman Louie Quintana completed 'Nova's sweep of the event's top three places by running respective IC4A-qualifying times of 1:49.67 and 1:52.28. Also running the 800-meters for 'Nova were freshmen Ken Nason (eighth, 1:52) and Chuck Silvester (13th, 1:54).

Four Wildcats ran in the 1500-meters, including sophomore Mike Going's second-place finish. Going's time of 3:47.44 left him less than half a second behind winner and former Villanovan J.J. Clark.

Villanova's strong showings in the two middle-distance races stand as a good sign for the Cats in light of the upcoming Penn Relays, where 'Nova will look to its milers and half-milers for the 4x800-meters, 4x1500-meters and distance medley relays.

In the weight events senior Greg Mirecki placed second and fourth respectively in the discus and hammer throw, both won by the St. John's Redmen. In the discus Mirecki recorded a personal best of 150-4, 14 feet behind winner Vince Insigno. Mirecki set another personal best in the hammer throw with a 160-foot effort, 33 feet behind St. John's Roman Linschied.

"We had a good meet," said Head Coach Marty Stern. "Our times are improving each week and we are looking forward to the meet this weekend in Arkansas, and also to the Penn Relays (April 23-25)."

Blue-White Weekend

By RYAN FANNON
Staff Reporter

Coming off the most successful season in school history, the Villanova football program is looking forward to another outstanding campaign next season starting with the annual Blue-White game Saturday at 1:30 p.m. With 17 out of 22 starters returning as well as key returners on special special teams, the sky is the limit for the Cats in 1992.

The main question to be answered is who will replace first team All-Yankee Conference performers Willie Oshodin at defensive tackle and Kevin Long at strong safety, both preparing for possible pro football careers. It appears defensive tackle Mike Hoffman and Justin Reeves at strong safety have the inside track going into spring practice, while sophomore defensive tackle Mark Baker and strong safety Matt Smith, a transfer from Stanford, will challenge as well.

The offense will surely miss all-purpose tailback Pat Kennedy, a first team All-Conference selection, who was the heart and soul of last year's team. Kennedy is another Wildcat with pro football aspirations. Two experienced tailbacks, Vernon Smith and Kevin Mosely, seem worthy candidates to replace him. Also, remember the name Eric Hunt, a redshirt freshman tailback with great potential.

Two outstanding offensive linemen, Mike Possenti and John Marichak will surely be missed. Yet improved guard Jose Ramirez and tackle Sean Downes appear ready for the challenge, while redshirt freshman Ante Benzija and Richard Ras will contribute as well.

While some key positions have to be filled, Villanova returns six first team All-Conference performers as well as four second team selections. Tight end Scott Donald, Bill Lacey, left guard Randy Crane, and Tim Tarpey at center make up an almost unstoppable left side of the offensive line. In terms of leadership, quarterback Tom Columbo is second to none. As a junior, Columbo threw for 2600 yards and 21 touchdowns.

Defensively, linebacker Curtis Eller and free safety Barry Alvis, two first team Yankee Conference slections who are tremendous hitters.

Three second team performers from last year, outside linebacker Andy Cobaugh, defensive tackle Chris Grychowski, and cornerback Orin Solomon make up a well-balanced defense.

Villanova signed nine recruits to scholarships, including a top quarterback prospect, Zachary Nishimura from California.

UNLV looks to improve image

By ED WASIELEWSKI
Assistant Sports Editor

Bright lights. Big City. The Desert. Showtime. NCAA investigations. Probation. Jerry Tarkanian. UNLV basketball.

In 1990, the University of Navada-Las Vegas enjoyed the ultimate moment of glory. Crowned NCAA champions, the Runnin Rebels trounced Duke 103-73 in the championship game and seniors Larry Johnson and Stacey Augmon announced their intent on returning for their final year, bypassing the NBA Draft. Now, two years later, basketball in the desert has taken on a new meaning.

The bright lights still shine. The stars still head West. But UNLV basketball isn't The Show anymore. Instead, President Robert Maxson and Tarkanian stole the spotlight from the team and became the main attraction.

From top to bottom, UNLV sunk faster than the Titantic. And like the Titantic, it's going to take more than miracles to resurrect UNLV. Not just the handling of the basketball program, but the University's badly tarnished image. Despite the distractions the Runnin' Rebels had a terrific season, bolting to a 28-2 record before NCAA sanctions prevented the team from competing in the NCAA Tournament.

However, the troubles that plague UNLV have nothing to do with the team's performance on the basketball court. These problems stem from within the program.

Over the past few years, Tarkanian and his UNLV program have been hounded by the NCAA, adamant about UNLV serving its probation for infractions committed well over a decade ago. As a result, Maxson and Tarkanian have publicly bickered, most recently concerning Tarkanian's resignation. With the situation growing progressively worse, Maxson wanted increase input over the basketball team while Tarkanian wanted to run the team his way. The battle for control was ultimately won by Maxson, who forced Tarkanian out.

By the end of this season, The Show had turned into a three-ring circus act. With UNLV on probation and Tarkanian's resignation intact, it was definitely the right time to make a change.

Of all the available coaches, UNLV selected Rollie Massimino.

One of the instumental persons in bringing Massimino to Vegas was former Villanova assistant football coach Jim Weaver, the UNLV athletic director. Friends for nearly 20 years, Weaver had been in contact with Massimino throughout the winter, but serious discussions never took place until after the Cats' NIT loss to Virginia.

Within three to four days after resuming talks, according to Weaver, the two sides were working out a detailed agreement.

There were several significant attributes Weaver noted that made the 57-year-old Massimino the No. 1 candidate for the vacant coaching position.

"Firstly, in his great 19-year career at Villanova, he excelled at winning basketball games," said Weaver. "Secondly, he has an excellent record as far as academics are concerned."

No on can argue with this. During his years at 'Nova, Massimino emphasized the importance of academics, adhering to term "scholar-athlete." During his era, Massimino graduated 100 percent of his four-year players. This is a far cry from Tarkanian's track record.

Also, Massimino's clean record with the NCAA was a major factor in UNLV's decision.

"He has an impeccable record," said Weaver. "He also is a tremendous individual with a strong sense of identity and security who could take over for someone like Jerry Tarkanian."

In fact, Massimino exemplifies everything UNLV needs if it hopes to turn around its bruised program. Where Tarkanian preferred to battle thhe NCAA, Massimino simply adherred to its bylaws. Where Tarkanian gave his players free reign on campus, Massimino taught discipline. Where Tarkanian never had any team rules, Massimino made sure his players attended classes

With the departure of Massimino, the University loses the man who elevated 'Nova to national prominence. In turn, UNLV gains a coach whose presence gives the program a certain credibility lacking with Tarkanian.

In the final press conference as head coach at 'Nova, Massimino commented on his purpose at the University.

"If winning and losing were the only reason I'm here, then I wouldn't be here," said Massimino.

With the pressure of the Big Five breakup and the disappointing 14-15 season on his shoulders, Massimino needed an exit. Massimino needed to go back to doing the things which made him such an energetic and beloved figure in Philadelphia. He needed to concentrate on teaching, on and off the court. Massimino couldn't do that anymore at 'Nova.

For Massimino, UNLV represents a fresh start. It also gives the University something which it has been missing during Tarkanian's tenure.

There will always be successful basketball teams at UNLV, and it really doesn't matter who is the coach. On the other hand, UNLV has never had a successful basketball program, from its coach down to its players.

For Vegas fans, this was a necessary move. With Massimino at the helm, he provides UNLV with new focus. Now the program has a dual purpose at the University not only to develop young ball players into stars, but to mold these athletes into excellent young men.

Rollie Massimino is a Rebel with a cause.

Tennis streak snapped at six

By JUSTIN KESTNER
Assistant Sports Editor

While everyone was caught up in the spectacle known as March Madness, the tennis team quietly put together a six-match winning streak. The Cats run ended April 5 with a tough 6-3 home loss to Georgetown, dropping their overall record to 8-4.

The Cats did not get off to a good start against the Hoyas. Mark Pizzi at No. 1 and Tom Boutrous at No. 2 both lost their singles matches in straight sets. Boutrous has now lost three of his last four matches after winning his first eight.

Steve Forrest gave 'Nova a lift by posting a 7-5, 1-6, 6-1 victory at No. 3 singles, earning praise from Head Coach Dr. Robert Langran. Forrest's only loss on the year came in his first match of the season March 14.

"Steve Forrest is playing as well as anyone at No. 3 singles, Langran said. "They're all playing well, though."

Bryan Cavalier dropped an intense 6-7, 6-4, 6-4 decision at No. 4 singles. Andy Sullivan lost in straight sets at No. 5 singles, leaving the Cats in a 4-1 hole. Dan Daros prevailed at No. 6 singles to keep the Cats' hopes alive heading into the doubles competition. Mike Flaherty lost in an extra match in straight sets.

The No. 1 doubles duo of Forrest and Daros came out on the short end of a 6-4, 6-1 score. Pizzi and Boutrous lost their match at No. 2 doubles by a 6-2, 6-4 margin. Only Sullivan and Kevin Reider at No. 3 were victorious for the Cats at doubles.

"I thought the guys played well, especially considering it was their fourth match in a row and they were just coming off a two-day trip," Langran stated. "I thought all-in-all, they played well."

Prior to the Georgetown match, the team played its best collective tennis of the season in compiling a six-match winning streak. In the stretch, the Cats registered several convincing victories, including a dominant 9-0 thrashing of Fordham April 3. This accomplishment is even more impressive in light of their rugged schedule which includes five or six matches per week.

Against Queen's College April 4, 'Nova began the match by losing a pair of three set thrillers. Pizzi faltered 4-6, 6-2. But the Cats rebounded to claim the remaining seven matches en route to the win.

'Nova avenged last year's 6-3 loss to Trenton State College by recording a win by the same score April 2. Pizzi won 6-3, 6-1 at No. 1 singles while Boutrous lost 6-3, 6-4 at No. 2. Forrest, Cavalier, and Sullivan all triumphed in straight sets to give 'Nova an impressive 4-1 lead. Daros then lost a tough 7-6, 1-6, 6-2 contest at No. 6 singles.

Forrest and Daros lost 6-7, 7-5, 6-3 in a tiring No. 1 doubles match. But Pizzi and Boutrous at No. 2 and Sullivan and Reider at No. 3 won their respective matches to hand 'Nova the victory.

Against Millersville March 31, the Cats got off quickly and defeated their hosts 7-2. Pizzi and Boutrous recorded straight-set wins at No. 1 and No. 2 singles, respectively. Cavalier played No. 3 singles in place of Forrest and responded by posting an impressive 6-2, 6-0 win. Sullivan rolled to a three-set victory at No. 4 singles, giving the Cats a 4-1 edge. Rob O'Driscoll lost in straight sets at No. 5 singles while Reider cruised to a 6-1, 6-3 win.

In doubles play, the No. 1 combination of Pizzi and Boutrous dropped their first set 4-6 before coming back to win their last two 6-3, 6-0. Sullivan and Reider formed the No. 2 doubles team but lost their match in straight sets. Cavalier and O'Driscoll closed out the match with a 6-2, 6-2 win at No. 3 doubles.

The Cats play today at St. John's at 3 p.m. The Redmen, who won the Big East title last fall, defeated 'Nova 5-1 last season. Their next home match will be this Sunday at 1 p.m. against Fairfield.

Softball rolls to 8-3

By ED WASIELEWSKI
Assistant Sports Editor

Good pitching will beat good hitting anytime. Just ask Head Coach Maria DiBernardi and the softball team.

After nearly two weeks of cancellations due to inclement weather, the softball team has finally gotten the opportunity to showcase its talents. With a 8-3 overall record, the Cats enter the most important portion of their schedule with upcoming conference games against Seton Hall and St. John's.

"Out team is centered around Amy Meisinger," said DiBernardi. "She's an overpowering pitcher with a lot of determination. She really hasn't pitched a bad game yet."

Behind Meisinger's pitching, the Cats have won five of their last seven, including a doubleheader sweep over Textile, 11-0 and 8-0. In eight appearances, Meisinger owns a spotless 6-0 record with a 1.02 ERA.

In their conference opener at Providence College, April 4, the Cats used a three-run sixth inning to upend the Lady Friars, 3-0.

In the second game of the twinbill, Martin took the mound. It was a different story, however, as Providence reached Martin for six runs over six innings. The loss evened the Cats' conference record at 1-1.

'Nova next traveled to Chestnut Hill April 5 for a doubleheader against the Boston College Eagles. In two competitive games, the Cats once again gained the split. Meisinger earned the 3-2 win in the first game as the team scored two runs in the top of the seventh to break a 1-1 deadlock.

In the second game, the Cats received another strong pitching effort as Martin and Meisinger combined for six innings, giving up no earned runs on six hits. Nonetheless, two timely errors hurt 'Nova, enabling Boston College to score three runs in the bottom of the second. BC held on for the 3-2 victory.

With Seton Hall and St. John's coming up next week, 'Nova's tourney hopes ride on these key doubleheaders.

"We're probably going to have to sweep one of those two teams to assure us a spot in the tournament," said DiBernardi.

The Cats will travel to St. John's University this Sunday before returning home for an April 14 encounter with Seton Hall starting at 3 p.m.

Crew to a sweeping start

By CAROLYN POPPE
Special to the Villanovan

The Villanova crew team began its second racing season of the year Saturday, April 4, finishing strongly at a regatta on the Schuylkill River.

Competing against selected colleges in 2000-meter races, many of 'Nova's men and women rowed against top teams such as Lafayette, Holy Cross, St. Joseph's, Fordham, Manhattan and Sarah Lawrence College.

Placing first in their events were all four men's varsity lightweight and open fours and one of the women's varsity fours.

The women's varsity lightweight-eight gave Drexel a fight in a close race, placing second by less than a boat length. The men's varsity lightweight "eight" finished a forceful third with the top Villanova time, 6:40.8.

Also outstanding was the work of the novices who faced their first spring race. All of their boats rowed powerfully in each event, the women's novice eight finishing just seconds behind Drexel, and the men's novice heavyweight eight and women's novice "four" each placing third.

This weekend the team will head off to Camden to race at the La Salle Invitational Regatta.

hold 15,000-plus fans and Penn State's entry into the Big 10, do not look for Parkhill to leave Happy Valley unless he receives a hefty contact offer.

Whoever is selected by Athletic Director Dr. Ted Aceto to replace Massimino will face two key challenges. Restless fans anxious to see the Cats again become regular participants in the NCAAs and challenge for a national championship must be satisfied. More importantly, players and recruits alike must be convinced that they are still wanted and can take the Cats to the next level.

Gariba primed for Olympics

By LARRY LANZA
Staff Reporter

This summer Villanova junior Salaam Gariba, a sprinter on the Wildcat track team, will be in Barcelona, Spain to compete in the Olympic Games.

For Gariba, it will be the second time running for his country of Ghana in the Olympics, but in the four years since Seoul, Gariba feels he has experienced a great deal of growth as both an athlete and a person.

"This year I'm very focused," says Gariba, who will compete in the 100-meters and 4x100-meter events. "I'm looking forward to running my best ever. Physically, I'm fresher than I've ever been. So far I've had a good season, and now I'm relaxed, strong and confident."

While Gariba will carry better physical form due to maturity into Barcelona than he did into Seoul, he feels that the true difference in Spain will be his improved mental preparation.

"My last time in the Olympics was very tough," says Gariba. "Since it was a new experience for me, I wasn't thinking about just running. I was busy trying to meet the other people, go shopping, watch other races — all of which were distractions.

"This time there will be less distractions. I am going to be focused on my performance on the track."

Much of the credit for Gariba's improved focus may be placed on the maturity he has gained through his travel and competition since 1988.

Five months after his first Olympics, in which he ran the third leg of a Ghana relay that made it to the semifinals of the 4x100-meters, Gariba arrived at Villanova on a track scholarship in January of 1989. Since then Gariba has been taking on the nation's best college sprinters each indoor and outdoor season, all the while maintaining his status as the Big East Conference's dominant 55-meter, 100-meter and 200-meter competitor and one of the best in the NCAA.

"A big change for me at Villanova has been indoor competition," says Gariba. "Before college, I had never competed indoors."

This season Gariba enjoyed his best indoor season yet, as he defended his 55-meter and 200-meter Big East titles, set new personal best and Villanova records in each event, won the Millrose Games college 55-meters and finished as the runner-up in the IC4A (Intercollegiate Association of Amateur Athletes of America) 55-meter championship.

"In the NCAAs," says Gariba, "I was injured, but now I'm fully recovered, back to training, and feeling stronger each day."

Much of Gariba's valuable experience over the past three seasons has come in Europe, where he has run each year on the international summer track circuit.

"When school ends, I return home to Ghana for a week," said Gariba. "Then I travel to Europe to train, compete and travel with my German coach. That is where my real difficult training occurs. Here at school, you have your work and other things to think about, but over there, you are like a prisoner in jail, and there are no distractions.

"The traveling which I do in Europe has been very helpful to my growth. It has taught me to respect people for who they are, deal with people of different characters and cultures, and adjust to different lifestyles. Now I'm better at interacting with others and speaking with different people."

The obvious focus of Gariba's training this summer will be the Olympic Games, starting July 31 and lasting until August 9. Preparing for the Olympics will mean preparing to run against the world's best — world record holder Carl Lewis, Leroy Burrell and Andre Cason of the U.S.; Lynford Christie of Great Britain; and possibly Ben Johnson of Canada, who is attempting a comeback.

When Gariba thinks about the Olympics, though, he thinks about keeping his concentration on himself.

"I'm not out to challenge anyone," said Gariba. "I'm just out to do my best. My main aim is to do well, and that is what I'm determined to do.

"When I meet Burrell or Lewis, I just regard them as normal, because they have to work hard to win just like everyone else. As far as favorites go, there are always new surprises in track and field, so the ultimate judge will just have to be the track."

This past August in Tokyo, Gariba went up against the likes of Lewis and Burrell in the biggest of all non-Olympic events, the World Championships. In one of his best meets ever, Gariba made it through the first two qualifying rounds and into the semifinals (top 16).

"My personal goal in Barcelona will be to run my best ever, to try to break 10 seconds in the 100-meters," says Gariba. "As for my national 4x100-meter relay, we will try to beat our best time of 38.35 seconds. Our chances look good since we have two excellent new members, one of whom, Emmanuel Tuffour, made it to the semifinals of the World Championships in the 200-meters."

As always, Gariba will be bringing with him to the Olympics the strong spiritual relationship which he shares with his parents.

"I believe that my parents are always close to me through their prayers. I believe in God and in the support my parents give me through their prayers."

It is that support which Gariba will fall back upon right from the first round of qualifying heats in Barcelona. So for Gariba, matters should be as usual. Given past results, that seems to be just the desired scenario.

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

AMY MEISINGER

This week the Villanovan recognizes softball player Amy Meisinger. The junior has fastened a 6-0 record and a sparkling 1.02 ERA. Meisenger led the Cats to victories over Boston College and Providence and a doubleheader sweep of Textile. The ace hurler is one of the main reasons for the Cats' success to this point. With a 2-2 conference mark and an overall record of 8-3, 'Nova is looking to gain a bid to the round-robin Big East Tournament.

Lax hits road after big win over West Chester

By ALEX SCOFIELD
Staff Reporter

On Balloon Day, jubilant Villanovans were screaming in triumph and tossing lacrosse sticks in the air. This scene, however, was nowhere near the Oreo. It took place down at Villanova Stadium, where the 4-2 'Nova laxwomen had just buried league rival West Chester, putting together a two-game winning streak after a frustrating loss to Drexel.

With 0:27 remaining in the game, sophomore Elena Rawson capped a two-minute Villanova stall with an insurance goal that put the Wildcats ahead 11-8. This gave 'Nova its most significant win of the season, and perhaps the most important win in its four-year history as a Division I team.

"If I could have hand-picked any win I wanted this season, this would have been it," said Head Coach Moira Lewis after the game.

West Chester had taken a quick 3-1 lead early in the game before third man Heidi Connor netted a Wildcat goal 14:23 into the first half. This began a streak of four Cat scores within 5:30. Although Villanova never relinquished the lead, it was never able to pull away from the Rams. Until the final goal, the Cats never held a lead any larger than two points.

Unlike the West Chester nailbiter, 'Nova's home game against Georgetown April 4 was never in doubt. With five minutes remaining in the first half, the Cats had run up a 9-0 score on the defenseless Hoyas. Although G'town played well at the end of each half, it could do no better than a 16-7 loss.

Attack-winger Ciara Perrotti netted a season-high six goals in the Georgetown rout. The Hoya defense was completely bewildered by Perrotti, who found multiple ways of scoring. She scored on a solo drive, while being checked, and on a surprise goal 0:20 into the game.

"[Perrotti] really hustles on ground balls," said Lewis. "She picks up the balls at midfield and sets up the offense."

Also contributing to the G'town win were first-home Anne Heilman (two goals, five assists) and third-home Leigh Ann Leone (five goals, two assists). At the other end of the field, goalie Stacey Rozzi (now 4-1) earned her third win of the season.

Villanova's two wins were particularly sweet after losing its first road game of the season at Drexel. Down 5-1 at one point, the Wildcats came just short of a major comeback, losing 7-6 to the Dragons.

"We came out very slow," said Lewis. "I think Drexel just beat us to the ground balls, and they were a little bit faster than we were."

Villanova now plays four of their next five games on the road. The key to success on the trip? "Playing Villanova-style ball, lots of pressure on the ball, and lots of hustle," according to Lewis.

The 'Cats play at home against William & Mary April 12 at 1 p.m.

edge of basketball and his genuine love of his players. But he disappointed me in my three years as a fan. Not because of the average record. But because of his disassociation from Villanova. He represented the school, but cared only about his program.

I came to Villanova one of Massimino's greatest admirers. I saw the Georgetown game. I witnessed The Championship. And from a distance, I became a believer like the rest of the Main Line.

He left without telling a recruit, Kerry Kittles, who feels abandoned and betrayed. He left without informing close friend Jerry Tarkanian, the former UNLV coach. Massimino stresses loyalty. To whom? Himself?

He left without saying goodbye.

He left Villanova for the glamor and glitz of Las Vegas.

The money.

The glory.

The attention.

The respect he lost at Villanova.

At his press conference, Massimino looked happy, content. He joked about his old school ("This crowd [at the press conference] is bigger than for some of the games where I come from"). He did not mention Villanova once.

'I learned it by watching you'

It became obvious over the past few seasons that a change was needed, for both Massimino and the program. While talent prospered, success did not. Massimino looked worn, weary and withdrawn. He was hurt by the Big Five scandal, the media's rips on his selfishness.

This story reminds me of the drug abuse commercial where the father yells at his son for using cocaine. The father asks, "How'd you find out about this stuff?" The son replies, "I learned it by watching you."

Yes, Rollie. You.

You forgot about your recruit and friend.

You never cared about the students. Well, let me rephrase that. You only cared when they booed. How easy it is to stress family when you are the father. Try being the orphan. Try being a recruit or student.

Do not misinterpret. The actions of the students lacked class the night of the press conference. But seven years of frustration bursts out in mysterious ways. How soon many forget the glory years.

Rollie, you did not mention Villanova's name once when you announced your acceptance of the UNLV job to its fans. How soon you forgot.

You left without saying goodbye, Rollie. Shame on you.

place tim eof 9:24.52. Lynch's time represented her personal best in that event. Taking fourth place for Villanova was junior Chris Gentile, who finished in 9:53.00.

Lynch and junior Irene Ruopoli led a Villanova 2-3 finish in the 800-meter event. Once again, Lynch ran her personal best time of 2:08.85 in the event, finishing second. Ruopoli contributed her season-best time in the 800 meters, finishing in third placein 2:09.12. Lynch was the first collegiate runner to finish the 3000 meter and the 800-meter events.

Villanova junior Cheri Goddard finished second in the 1500 meters, but she barely missed winning the event. She was edged by Bonnie Ramsdell by just .01 seconds, 4:17.99 to 4:18.00. Goddard also ran within eight-tenths of a second of her personal best time. Teammate Kate Fonshell also just missed running her personal best, placing third with a time of 4:23.67.

"The women continue to run well week in and week out," said Stern. "We are looking forward to the upcoming meet in Arkansas, and the Penn Relays in two more weeks."

Top 10 in 'Nova Sports

As the Villanovan hits the stands one last time, we take one last look at the sporting events that shaped one of the most memorable years in Villanova sports history. The track teams continued their excellence. The football program established itself as one of the best in the country at its level. The swimming teams continued their march to become a national power. These are just some of the teams that made Villanova proud.

But the year of 1991-92 was not without controversy. Rollie Massimino stepped down as head basketball coach. The Big Five was broken up due to Villanova's decision to recruit and play teams nationally. Lloyd Mumford was dismissed from the men's basketball team over the summer.

Here in order are the top 10 sport stories of the Villanova athletic program for 1991-92.

1. Massimino Goes West

In a shocking story, Massimino, who seven years ago took 'Nova to a national title, decided to leave the University for the head coaching position at UNLV.

Massimino, who served 19 years and compiled 357 wins at 'Nova, packed his bags for Nevada April 1. After suffering through a disappointing 14-15 year that ended with a first-round NIT loss in his last year at 'Nova, Massimino made the move to UNLV, a school troubled by NCAA violations and perceptions of the athletes as, to put it mildly, uninterested in academics.

Considered by many to be a risky and surprising move, Massimino leaves behind a solid program at 'Nova that entered postseason play 16 times under his tutelage while upholding academic integrity. He takes over a program backed by a fan base who care about winning percentage just as much as, if not more than, graduation rate.

Massimino follows the controversial Jerry Tarkanian, who had both constant fights with the NCAA and the highest winning percentage in college basketball history.

2. Women's Cross Country Dominates for the Third Straight Year

In a sports world overflowing with parity, Head Coach Marty Stern and his women's cross country team captured their third straight national title in convincing fashion and staked claim to a dynasty. The Cats outscored its nearest opponent, Arkansas, by a whopping 83 points and placed three of the top 12 runners in the country, including Nos. 1 and 2.

No school in NCAA history had repeated or captured three total titles before Stern's squad.

Sonia O'Sullivan repeated as individual champion while sophomore Carole Zajac and junior Nnenna Lynch, the next two great Villanovans, took second and 12th, respectively.

The future looks just as bright for 'Nova. The Cats return Zajac, Lynch, junior Cheri Goddard and freshman Becky Spies among others. According to many track experts, they are the odds-on favorite to win next year for their fourth consecutive championship.

3. Big Five Breaks Up; Now Only Two Games Annually

The men's basketball schedule changed drastically with administration's decision to cut the Big Five's round-robin format in order to play a more national slate. The decision created controversy and dissension among the schools since it appeared to be a sell-out and breach of friendship.

Massimino was the center of the controversy. Both the media and other Big Five coaches labeled him, not administration, as the cause of the decision.

The Cats faced LaSalle and Temple at the Spectrum this year as part of the new format. 'Nova lost to LaSalle in early December and defeated Temple in February.

4. Football Goes 10-1; Colombo Stars

Junior quarterback Tom Colombo and a ferocious defense led Head Coach Andy Talley's Wildcat football squad to its best season in history. The Cats, considered a year away in preseason due to key losses and a senior class of six players, finished 10-2, captured the Yankee Confernce crown and beat high-profile power New Hampshire before losing to Youngstown State in the first round of the Division I-AA Playoff. 'Nova staked a claim as one of Division I-AA's best programs. The Cats finished the season ranked No. 7 in the polls.

Talley was named the American Football Coaches Association District Coach of the Year for his efforts.

The Cats were led by Colombo, a 5-foot-7 dynamo who overcame doubts about his height to capture second team all-Yankee honors. Nicknamed "The Sawed-Off Shotgun," he passed for 2,679 yards and 21 touchdowns. He ranks No. 2 on the school's all time passing yardage leaders and holds the single season mark for most yards.

Besides Colombo heroics, other Cats, particularly on the defensive side of the ball, excelled. Thirteen members of the squad received all-conference recognition, including first-team all-America Curtis Eller and All-ECAC (Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference) selections defensive back Kevin Long and linemen Willie Oshodin and Randy Crane.

Next season, the Cats expect to challenge for the national championship with 17 starters returning, nine from a defense that ranked second in the nation last year.

5. Women Swimmers Capture Big East; Flood Wins NCAA Championship

The women's swimming team, which finished second in the Big East the previous three years, defeated 11-year champion Pittsburgh to win the 1992 Big East crown. The Cats outplaced second-place Miami by 42 points and third-place Pitt by 100 points.

Lisa Flood, Meghan McCaffery and Mary Dowling led the effort with individual wins. Flood, named Outstanding Woman Performer at the meet for the second consecutive year, won the 100-yard breaststroke, 200-yard breaststroke and 200-yard individual medley.

Dowling took first in the 1650-yard freestyle while McCaffery sprinted to a win in the 50-yard freestyle.

The Cats graduate only two members from the squad and are viable contenders to repeat as champion.

Flood won the 200-yard breastroke at the NCAA championships held in Austin Texas March 20-22. She earned the Villanovan Female Athlete of the Year for her efforts.

7. Men's Track Reestablishes Itself; Ranked in Top 25 Throughout Season

8. Men's Soccer Has Best Season Ever

9. Men's Basketball Finishes Disappointing 14-15; Shunned by NCAA Tournament

10. Women's Tennis Goes 16-3; Head Coach Bob Langran Notches 600th Win

Athletes of the Year

Tom Colombo

In a year in which the soccer team won the Big East Championship, the football team claimed a share of first place in the Yankee Conference andhad its best season ever, and the track team returned to national prominence, there were many outstanding individual performances.

Despite so many excellent showings in each sport making the selection difficult, the Villanovan would like to recognize quarterback Tom Colombo as its 1991-92 Athlete of the Year.

Colombo, one of the smallest Division I quarterbacks in the country at 5-foot-7, was the driving force behind an explosive offense that averaged almost 35 points per game. The junior threw for 2,679 yards last season, placing him second on 'Nova's single season passing list. The highlight of the year for Colombo occurred in the 38-28 loss at Delaware when he was 35 of 61 for 389 yards and four touchdowns.

Colombo, who entered 'Nova as a walk-on, now has 3,807 passing yards in his career, placing him second on the school's all-time list.

Colombo edged out teammate Curtis Eller, who led the team in tackles for the third straight year. The junior linebacker was selected to the 1991 Kodak/AFCA Division I-AA all-American first team and was named the Yankee Conference's Defensive Player of the Year.

Lisa Flood

1991-92 was a year of outstanding accomplishments in women's athletics. The volleyball team enjoyed its finest season ever, the swim team captured its first Big East title, the track team ran away with its third consecutive NCAA Championship and the tennis team finished 16-3.

Several spring teams are also off to fast starts, in particular the softball and lacrosse teams.

But, now it's time for the Villanovan to announce its choice for Female Athlete of the Year. Drum roll, please.

The Villanovan's Female Athlete of the Year is swimmer Lisa Flood, who captured 'Nova's first-ever national championship in the 200-yard breaststroke. Flood edged out a trio of track stars — Nnenna Lynch, Carole Zajac, and Sonia O'Sullivan — who led their team to an unprecedented third consecutive national championship.

Flood, a sophomore, dominated her competition throughout the season, establishing new personal and school records in the progress.

A native of Ontario, Canada, Flood rolled to the national title during the NCAA Division I Swimming and Diving Championships in Austin, Texas, March 20-22. Coming in with only the fourth-best qualifying time, Flood pulled off an unexpected upset, defeating heavily-favored Dorsey Tierney of Texas.

In addition to Lisa Flood, there were other women athletes whose talents helped their respective teams. The Villanovan would like to recognize some of these athletes for outstanding seasons.

In the fall, the following players led their teams to respective finishes: Tina Conti, soccer; Missy Paolantonio, field hockey; Vicky Dispenza, volleyball; and Krista Chamberlain, tennis.

In the Winter, basketball star Nikki Benedix and swimmers Tara Ryan, Meaghan McCaffery and Mary Dowling each played a significant role in their teams' success during the season.

In the spring, strong-armed pitcher Amy Meisinger and lacrosse player Leigh Ann Leone receive recognition for posting outstanding statistics

Lacrosse splits two, now 5-4

The men's lacrosse team capped off another week of action in a bitter-sweet way. After handily defeating Drexel 16-7, they fell to the St. John's Redmen 13-7, dropping the Cats' record on the season to 5-4.

In the first game, 'Nova exploded for six unanswered goals in the beginning of the first quarter, en route to its victory.

"Just like the West Chester game it was a game in which we were able to certainly dominate and jump out early," Coach Randy Marks said. "We got off to a fast start, played really well, shot the ball realy well against what we considered a pretty good Drexel goalie."

The offense was led by the quick stick of Rick Bontatibus, who had three goals and four assists, Sol Mahoney, who had four goals, Jason Foote with one goal and three assists, and Tom Anderson with three goals. Other contributors were Kevin Hollingsworth with two goals, Brian Goger with a goal and an assist, Scott Chisholm with a goal and two assists, Joe Greco with one goal and Doug Derocher with an assist.

Also worth mentioning is defender Pete DeTolla. According to Marks, DeTolla had an outstanding game, constantly knocking the ball away from the Drexel attackmen. DeTolla also rang up an assist, a feat not often accomplished by a defender.

Late in the second half Drexel made a run to keep it interesting, scoring four unanswered goals. However, the Villanova lead was too steep to climb at that late stage in the game and the Dragons suffered the loss.

Next, the team traveled to New York to meet St. John's. The Johnnies met their guests with five unanswered goals to start off the game.

"We had a lot of good offensive opportunities," Marks said. "Their goalie came up big or we just missed the cage. Also, it's not an excuse, but they play on a sand turf. You just can't get a good bounce, so you really have to adjust your game. It's a definite, huge advantage for them playing at home."

Last year 'Nova played almost the same Redmen team at Villanova Stadium and defeated them 17-7. St. John's played a few nationally-ranked teams and because of its home surface the games were a lot closer than they should have been.

'Nova did manage to get back a few of the goals that they had spotted its opponent, but St. John's scored four goals to overcome the Cats' one in the third quarter, pretty much icing the victory.

The next game for the Wildcats is versus the Georgetown Hoyas. "I think our kids will be ready to play Georgetown," said Marks. "They have never beaten a Villanova team in the history of the program since 1961."

The remainder of the season is arguably the team's toughest part of the year. After G'town this weekend and Lafayette next week, the Cats head South to face nationally-ranked North Carolina and Duke and then host Rutgers.

As major league baseball completes its first full week, the Villanova baseball team is in full swing, having reached the halfway mark of the season with a record of 13-11 (4-2 in the Big East). But with a young team, the Cats are hoping for bigger and better things in the second half.

"As a team, we started poorly with the Florida trip," said centerfielder Dan Mariniello, speaking of the 1-5 spring break trip. "But we're a young team that's starting to hit and we've come a long way.

"The coaches have encouraged us all year. With such a young team, we might have gotten down and not recovered, but the positive thinking has prevented that," said Mariniello. "The captains [shortstop Mike DeAnzeris and DH Brian Blake] have also been really helpful in keeping the team up."

The squad's youth was evident last weekend against Boston College. The Cats opened the three-game series with a doubleheader sweep of B.C., taking the first game 7-1 and the nightcap 9-1. But showing the signs of a club laden in youth, the Cats were rocked 8-1 the following day.

"We played pretty well in the doubleheader," said first-year assistant coach Ted Aceto Jr. "But on Sunday, we were just flat."

In the first game, Larry Kingsbury picked up his fifth victory of the year, allowing just four hits and was backed by three hits by catcher Mike Evangelista. 'Nova picked up right where it left off in the second game, ripping 11 hits to support hard-luck pitcher Brad Baker (3-2, 2.84 ERA).

Before falling at Delaware 14-1 April 7, the Cats exploded with an eight-run eighth inning to win at LaSalle 14-7.

"Everyone is contributing," said Aceto, "especially Kingsbury and Baker. We got beat by a good hitting Delaware club but will look to bounce back this weekend against Providence."

Mariniello, hitting .394 and playing a flawless center field, has been the main story for this year s Cats. The sophomore walk-on has become a permanent fixture in center and on the basepaths for 'Nova. All this for a kid who bucked the odds and made the team a year ago.

"I'm still really excited," said Mariniello. "I came to Villanova not really hoping to play baseball, but I made the team and [Head Coach] Bennett has given me a lot of opportunities.

"The last three weeks of last year, I started in left field and I was really nervous. But this year, I'm much more comfortable. Hopefully, I can continue to do well," said Mariniello.

Mariniello and the Cats are looking forward to moving up in the Big East this weekend when Providence comes to McGeehan Field for games both Saturday and Sunday at noon.

Notes: The Cats continue play in the Liberty Bell Classic April 14 at 3 p.m. with a semifinal contest against West Chester at Veterans Stadium. If they win, 'Nova will play in the championship the next night ... Outfielder Ryan McGinty, the team's leading hitter at .394 before suffering a shoulder injury two weeks ago, could miss the rest of the year according to Aceto.

Now three of the four recruits still have uncertainties.

Only Eric Eberz, a 6-foot-7 forward from St. Joseph Institute in Buffalo, has stated that he will honor his letter of intent and attend 'Nova come fall.

The three other recruits, Roscoe Harris, Kerry Kittles and Lawrence Thomas, continue to remain in limbo. Last week's the Villanovan reported that the recruits had concerns about the vacated coaching position. This problem still remains. However, another problem has surfaced. The Villanova athletic department has made no effort to contact the recruits or their coaches since Massimino's departure, according to the three recruits and their coaches.

Roscoe Harris, from Marist High School in New Jersey, has signed a letter of intent with Villanova. Harris' coach Mike Leonardo said, "If they [Villanova] hire a man that doesn't know Roscoe, it would be unacceptable for our standards." Leonardo expressed disappointment and questioned whether Harris was in Villanova's future due to the absence of contact from the athletic department. The two sides talked last week but, according to Leonardo, he initiated the conversation.

Harris has seriously considered breaking his letter and transferring elsewhere. When a player breaks his letter, he automaticly loses a year of eligibility. However, Leonardo believes that if Harris chooses this option and Villanova complies by releasing him from his commitment, the 6-foot-4 guard will successfully petition the NCAA to retain his eligibility for the fall. Leonardo added that if Villanova does not comply and Harris loses eligibility, Harris would probably attend prep school.

Kittles, another 'Nova signee from New Orleans, said that he has not been contacted by the athletic department. The 6-foot-5 swingman said he also plans to keep all options open.

Lawrence Thomas, from Elizabeth High School in New Jersey, has more options than Harris and Kittles in that he has no technical ties to the University. Because he only verbally committed, Thomas has the freedom to enroll elsewhere without penalty. In fact, Thomas has scheduled a recruiting visit to UNLV and continues to entertain other offers. Ben Candelino, coach of the 6-foot-1 point guard, said that they have not ruled out Villanova, but he and Thomas have not heard from the athletic department.

Candelino said, "We're not looking for an excuse to leave Villanova." Since no contact has been made, Candelino questions where Thomas currently fits into the Villanova program.

Contrary to what the recruits and their coaches said, the athletic department claims to have contacted them on numerous occasions.

The possibility that one or more of the recruits will leave, exists not only because of Massimino's departure, but the athletic department's lack of communication with the players. Several questions remain for the recruits, including who will be the new coach and the department's desire for them to be a part of the program.

More than a week after Rollie Massimino left Villanova to become head coach of the University of Nevada-Las Vegas, rumor continue to swirl about who his successor will be. The list of candidates is long and extensive with no one name being head-and-shoulders above the rest.

One of the leading candidates was Xavier coach Pete Gillen until he decided to stay at Xavier. A former assistant to Massimino at Villanova, Gillen has made Xavier a perennial contender for the Midwestern Collegiate Conference (MCC) crown annually. Under Gillen's direction, the Musketeers made the NCAA Tournament from 1986 through 1991, advancing to the Sweet 16 in 1990.

Manhattan Head Coach Steve Lappas is another one of Massimino's former assistants whose name continues to surface. He guided the Jaspers to their first-ever 20-win season and came within a few seconds of defeating La Salle in the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference Championship (MACC) game. Lappas is perhaps the top non-"big name" coach on the list.

Penn State Head Coach Bruce Parkhill represents another possible replacement. He has led the Nittany Lions to four consecutive 20-win seasons in his seven years at PSU. But with the construction of an on-campus arena that will

How people change.

How soon some forget.

In 1985, after capturing an improbable national championship and the hearts of the people along the Main Line, Rollie Massimino became a basketball icon and, more importantly, a friend. The guy next door. A good guy who did it for the school, the students. He helped Villanova prove that college athletics could be mixed with academics and win.

The Villanova Way

He stressed loyalty and family. The Villanova Way.

Unfortunately, Massimino forgot his roots.

It was stated in last week's the Villanovan that Massimino deserves our respect. Indeed he does. He gave us 19 years of solid, sometimes spectacular service as head basketball coach. But the fact remains: seven years ago the students were his greatest fans. Now, they cheered his departure.

Why? How can such a transformation occur? How can a man who once enthralled students with his sideline antics and pride become stale and intolerable just years later?

Well, he alienated many people in those short, but seemingly endless seven years. He alienated the Big Five, the media. He alienated the students.

The [illegible] championship [illegible] in Villanova [illegible] ball history", forgot about The Villanova Way, loyalty and family.

The recognition and fame he received from the title evaporated unceremoniously in a short, but seemingly endless 20-minute press conference.

With his Windsor Shirts and Rolaids endorsements, Massimino became an entity in himself. And gradually, he took the basketball team away from the students and the University and made it his own. He forgot his roots.

He forgot the students, the people who supported him so vigorously throughout his years.

The examples of his selfish love of his program are endless. The Big Five (No one can tell me Rollie Massimino, the biggest name in Philadelphia coaching, could not have kept it intact if he truly wanted). His rocky relationship with the media due to his thin-skinned sensitivity. Lloyd Mumford. The clash with LaSalle Head Coach Speedy Morris. And the students.

How soon some forget.

In 1985, after capturing an improbable national championship and the hearts of the people along the Main Line, Rollie Massimino became a basketball icon and, more importantly, a friend. The guy next door. A good guy who did it for the school, the students. He helped Villanova prove that college athletics could be mixed with academics and win.

The Villanova Way

He stressed loyalty and family. The Villanova Way.

Unfortunately, Massimino forgot his roots.

It was stated in last week's the Villanovan that Massimino deserves our respect. Indeed he does. He gave us 19 years of solid, sometimes spectacular service as head basketball coach. But the fact remains: seven years ago the students were his greatest fans. Now, they cheered his departure.

Why? How can such a transformation occur? How can a man who once enthralled students with his sideline antics and pride become stale and intolerable just years later?

Well, he alienated many people in those short, but seemingly endless seven years. He alienated the Big Five, the media. He alienated the students.

The man who claimed the championship as the "greatest moment in Villanova basketball history" forgot about The Villanova Way, loyalty and family.

The recognition and fame he received from the title evaporated unceremoniously in a short, but seemingly endless 20-minute press conference.

With his Windsor Shirts and Rolaids endorsements, Massimino became an entity in himself. And gradually, he took the basketball team away from the students and the University and made it his own. He forgot his roots.

He forgot the students, the people who supported him so vigorously throughout his years.

The examples of his selfish love of his program are endless. The Big Five (No one can tell me Rollie Massimino, the biggest name in Philadelphia coaching, could not have kept it intact if he truly wanted). His rocky relationship with the media due to his thin-skinned sensitivity. Lloyd Mumford. The clash with LaSalle Head Coach Speedy Morris. And the students.

No, Rollie Massimino should not be crucified. But he isn't a martyr either.

The reason for his departure cannot be blamed on others. He caused his own problems and ultimate downfall. A few seasons of mediocrity were not the reason. His selfish, dictatorial reign over the program was. The basketball team became Rollie Massimino's, not Villanova's.

I respect Massimino's knowl-

The Villanova community spent the summer preparing for its 150th anniversary celebration, said Christine Lysionek, managing director of the Sesquicentennial. The year-long commemoration will commence with opening ceremonies Sept. 18 to 22.

Information kits were mailed out over the summer to parents and alumni to promote the Sesquicentennial, said Lysionek. The kits included a program for the Opening weekend, a calendar of events for the year and small bits of Villanova history.

Building and street banners will be hung around campus and along Lancaster Avenue, said Lysionek. The Historical Projects Committee will also be plaqueing the oldest buildings on campus, she said.

"This is going to be the first landmark anniversary that we will be celebrating during peacetime. It will be the largest most elaborate celebration that this University has ever had," Lysionek said.

The Sesquincentennial will feature a series of lectures throughout the year including a speech by former U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese III on "America at the Crossroads: The '92 Election." Other speakers throughout the year include Capt. Paul Watson, founding director of the Greenpeace Foundation; Professor Kenneth Boulding, from the University of Colorada; Roland Teske, S.J., from Marquette University; Dr. Alan Blinder, from Princeton University; Pierre Sauvage and Richard Keeling, from the University of Virginia.

Culture will be featured throughout the year in a series of cultural films, musical performances, theatrical performances and poetry readings. Many student organizations including the Student Musical Theatre, the Villanova Singers, Glee Club and Gospel Ensemble will take part in the festivities.

Four Villanovans compete in 1992 Olympic games

By KATE SZUMANSKI
Assistant News Editor

Four Villanova athletes competed in the 1992 Summer Olympic Games in Barcelona, Spain.

Chip Jenkins, a 1986 Villanova graduate, captured a gold medal as a member of the United States' 1600-meter relay team.

Running the third leg, Jenkins recorded a 44.3-second split, fastest on the relay, as the United States advanced to the finals with a time of 2:59.14. In those finals, Jenkins watched as the United States set a world record in easily winning the relay, according to a Sports Information press release.

The last Olympic medal won by a Villanovan came in 1968, when three were won. That year Larry Jones won a gold as part of the 1600-meter relay team, a silver in the 400-meter, and Erv Hall won a silver in the 110m High Hurdles.

With the gold, Jenkins joins his father, Charles Sr., in the elite group of Olympic gold medalists.

Jenkins Sr., the former Villanova track coach, won two gold medals in 1956 in the Melbourne Olympics when he won the 400m and ran the third leg on the victorious 1600m relay. They became the first father and son tandem to ever win Olympic gold medals in the same event, according to Sports Information.

Sonia O'Sullivan, a 1991 Villanova graduate, ran for her native Ireland in the 3,000 meters, finishing out of medal contention in fourth place.

O'Sullivan led the race into the homestretch, but was passed by three runners as she finished in 8:47.41.

Marcus O'Sullivan, a 1984 Villanova graduate and Irish runner also, missed making the finals of the 1,500 meters by one spot. His semifinal time of 3:37.16 was the fastest non-qualifying time ever in any meet, according to Sports Information.

Current University junior Lisa Flood was a member of the Canadian swimming team, competing in the 100-meter breaststroke. Flood finished in 1:10.95, qualifying her for the consolation finals where she placed sixth with a time of 1:11.15, according to Sports Information.

Local bar raided

Undercover police surveillance led to 50 citations for underage drinking at John Barleycorn's Pub on Lancaster Avenue in Bryn Mawr Sept. 3, according to a report in the News of Delaware County.

An undercover officer observing the bar between 8:30 and 10:30 p.m. determined that underage people had been admitted, and additional officers arrived shortly after to check the identification of all patrons, said Sgt. John Walsh, a spokesman for the Haverford Township Police, in the article.

Although some people were transported to the police station, most of the citations were issued at the bar, and several people received an additional charge because they carried false identification, said Walsh. He added that the Liquor Control Board would be responsible for any penalties or fines upon the bar and its owner.

"It's business as usual for us," said Debbie LaCava, manager of Barleycorn's. "We expect some kind of fine, but we don't anticipate being shut down."

Rumors that the bar would be fined upwards of $40,000 were unsubstantiated, said LaCava. "People are making a bigger deal out of this than it is. We've discussed things with the police,

Voter concerns include economy, health care

By LARISA EPATKO

This November, voters will decide which presidential candidate they are most confident in to lead the country, either President George Bush or Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton.

Issues that concern many people in this year's elections are the economy, employment, foreign policy and health care reform. But the candidates are not committing themselves to specifics when discussing these issues, according to Dr. William Waegel, chair of the sociology department.

Any dissatisfaction that the voters feel will hurt the incumbent and help the other candidate, Waegel added.

Unemployment is at 8 percent and there are no immediate indications that the rate will decrease, said Waegel. "High rates will persist and possibly increase as summer jobs disappear," he added.

The United States has a $330 billion budget deficit, and the national debt has tripled in the last 12 years. But people are more concerned with the immediate problem of job security, said Dr. Kenneth Taylor, chair of the economics department.

The Free Trade Agreement, a Bush proposal that would create a regional trading bloc, has not been supported or disputed by Clinton. Taylor said many Amer-

Fire evacuation ignites controversy

A mop ignited a fire in a broom closet in St. Mary's Hall Sept. 8, according to a Public Safety account of the incident.

A student reported seeing smoke escaping from underneath a closet door by the cafeteria and notified a Public Safety officer at 12:58 a.m.

The officer extinguished the fire located in the left-hand corner of the closet. The cause of the fire is still unknown.

Two Public Safety officers were treated at Bryn Mawr Hospital for smoke inhalation. They are in fair condition, according to the Public Safety report.

St. Mary's Head Resident Advisor Philip Nicolosi said the Bryn Mawr Fire Department arrived on the scene promptly.

The entire building was alerted of the fire by the fire alarm and was evacuated. Some students, however, remained inside the building, said sophomore Chris Stark, a St. Mary's resident.

Most Students Receive Aid

WASHINGTON — Nearly 60 percent of full-time undergraduates receives some student financial aid from federal, state or other sources, the U.S. Department of Education reported.

More students in private institutions received financial aid than in public schools, and in private, for-profit institutions, nearly nine out of 10 students received some form of aid, said the 1992 report.

"We report on the condition of education as a way of alerting the American public about the progress that has been made, and the progress that still needs to be made in the future," said Diane Ravitch, assistant secretary for educational research and improvement. The 1992 edition contains 60 measures of preschool, elementary, secondary and postsecondary education.

Among the findings related to college students:

- Federal support for education rose 19 percent from 1983 to 1991 to an estimated $54.6 billion.

- The number and percent of bachelor's degrees earned in the natural sciences, computer sciences and engineering dropped during the last half of the 1980s.

- Between 1980 and 1990, costs for tuition, room and board rose more rapidly at private colleges than at public institutions — 49 percent vs. 26 percent. Although the rate of increase for college costs continues to outpace inflation, in 1990 tuition, room and board at public institutions as a proportion of family income was lower than in the mid-1960s.

College Seeks Native Americans

HANOVER, N.H. — Dartmouth College is launching a three-year pilot program this fall to increase the number of Native American students who earn college degrees.

The "Full Circle Program" is open to all Native American students at Dartmouth, and will address academic issues facing the students. It is funded by a $155,000 grant from the General Mills Foundation in Minneapolis.

While Native Americans comprise 1 percent of the U.S. population, they accounted for only .04 percent of the students earning bachelor's degrees in 1991, says a report by the National Advisory Council on Indian Education.

Homeless Program Expands

PHILADELPHIA — A program launched by the University of Pennsylvania last year to train college students to work with homeless people was expanded to Atlanta and San Francisco this summer.

Empty the Shelters provides students from across the nation with skills and insight necessary to combat homelessness in their communities. The program was expanded to Emory University in Atlanta and Stanford University in northern California.

"In the wake of the tragedy in Los Angeles, we want to show America that college students, working with community leaders and residents, can act constructively to solve the problems plaguing our cities," said Philip Wider, a Penn alumnus who now directs the Philadelphia project.

Wildcard promotes access to campus services

By JEN BORDA
Staff Reporter

The Wildcard, a debit account system, building access card and meal plan indicator, has been implemented this year. The card is accessed through students' photo ID cards.

The Wildcard is available to all Villanova students, faculty and staff and can be acquired through the Wildcard office located in Dougherty Hall.

To open a Wildcard account students must fill out a form and return it with an initial deposit of at least $100, according to a pamphlet on the Wildcard. Once an account has been opened, deposits of at least $50 can be made at any time in the Wildcard office. The office is open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily in Dougherty Hall.

The Wildcard can be used at locations all over campus, including the University Shop, all three campus dining halls, food concessions such as Cafe Bartley and the Belle Air Terrace and the Ticket Office and Game Room in Connelly Center, according to the pamphlet.

At any of these locations, the card holder presents the Wildcard to the cashier and the amount of the purchase will automatically be deducted from the account. Each time the Wildcard is used, the balance is displayed for easy budget maintenance. Also, statements of transactions will be issued upon request from the Wildcard office.

Funds deposited into the account automatically roll over from semester to semester. If the card holder desires a refund because of a withdrawal from school or termination of employment, a written request must be submitted to the Wildcard office, otherwise no cash withdrawals will be permitted.

If a purchase made using the Wildcard is returned a credit will be made to the account. Card users will not be able to receive cash refunds.

If the Wildcard is lost, the account can be frozen by notifying either the Wildcard office, any locations which accept the Wildcard or Public Safety, said an employee of the Wildcard office. If the card is later recovered the card holder can take it to the Wildcard office and have the account reactivated.

If the card is lost, stolen or damaged, there is a replacement charge of $10 the first time and the charge increases by $10 for each following replacement.

In addition to supplying students and faculty with purchasing power without the hassle of cash or checks, the Wildcard is also used for students with meal plans and provides controlled access to campus residence halls. Students with meal plans present their card at the entrance of their designated campus dining halls for regular meals just as in past years, but now they can also stop in any dining hall on campus during meal hours and purchase food with their Wildcard.

The new card also eliminates the need for building keys because soon every building on campus will be equipped with a card sensor which automatically unlocks doors. Students living on campus will have unlimited entry to their own dorm building and anyone carrying a card will have access to any building during regular visiting hours.

"I am really glad I have the Wildcard. I found I've spent less time in lines this year, especially at the bookstore, since all I have to do is flash my card," said one student.

The success of the Wildcard is evident all over campus, but especially to those students working in the Wildcard office.

"I think the Wildcard has been extremely successful because of its overwhelming simplicity and convenience. It has received a great deal of acceptance and cooperation from the students and faculty," said Michael Driscoll, an employee in the office.

SGA president outlines goals

By KERRY LATTANZIO
Staff Reporter

The current Student Government administration led by President Ken Batchelor and Vice President Kathy Breen promises to combine the continuation of venerable projects with a novel approach to carrying out new ideas.

Both Batchelor and Breen said that a key concern will be communicating with the student body. The complete restructuring of the cabinet system is one way in which they intend to do so, said Batchelor.

An Executive Board has been created, which will seat five students. Under that board various committees will serve to work on more specific projects, Batchelor said. For more direct input from students, Batchelor would like to have a booth during the day where students can relate their suggestions and concerns, he said.

Batchelor and Breen also plan to work on the intracollegiate forum.

"There are so many different activities on campus to get involved in, and we'd like to help them all work together on related projects," Batchelor said.

Through the intracollegiate forum, various organizations which may have common interests would be encouraged to work together on joint projects to produce better results. For example, Student Government would work with the Villanova Environmental Group (VEG) to improve on the recycling efforts being made by the University. There would be a cabinet member delegated to work specifically on each such project.

Midnight Madness is another example of cooperation among different groups, he said. Or-

Research Award honors outstanding faculty scholars

By LARISA EPATKO
News Editor

Two Villanova professors received the 1992 Outstanding Faculty Research Award, which the University presents yearly to "productive faculty scholars," according to University sources.

Dr. Matthew J. Liberatore, chair of the department of management, and Dr. Walter W. Zajac Jr., professor of chemistry, were honored with the award at the University's twelfth annual luncheon held May 6.

Liberatore and Zajac were recognized for their achievements in the fields of management science and organic chemistry, respectively.

Before coming to Villanova in 1983, Liberatore held positions with FMC Corporation and RCA Corporation. He published over 50 articles in science and research journals and edited a book entitled Selection and Evaluation of Advanced Manufacturing Technologies.

Zajac has been a member of the University's faculty since 1959. His publications have appeared in journals, covering a wide range of topical areas involved in organic chemistry.

Research that Zajac conducted contributed to the understanding of reactivity and properties of organic compounds in the field of nitrochemistry.

Liberatore's research focused on improving decision-making in research and technology-based organizations. His findings lead to published studies on business strategy, methods for project selection and use of graphics in information systems.

Zajac is a member of both the organic and carbohydrate divisions of the American Chemical Society. He served as chair of the carbohydrate division in 1990 and worked for nine years as chair of the University's Chemistry Graduate Committee.

Both professors brought national and international attention to their departments and to Villanova, according to the University press release.

Dr. Daniel J. Ziegler, dean of the graduate school of Liberal Arts and Sciences and chair of the Award Selection Committee, presented the recipients to the college deans, who then granted the award.

Attending the luncheon were the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., University president, spouses and families of the recipients, previous awardees, academic deans, department chairs and colleagues who have attracted external grant monies over the past year, according to the press release.

Navy ROTC commemorates 50th anniversary on campus

University Press Release

Villanova's ROTC unit will celebrate the 50th anniversary of Naval presence on campus this year. During World War II on July 1, 1943, 600 recruits reported to the commander of the campus V-12 Unit, established by the secretary of the Navy.

The college training program spared Villanova drastic declines in enrollment during the war. It opened doors to a college education for many who otherwise would never have had the opportunity. It also ensured that part of this generation of young Americans were not denied a college education because of the war.

Back then, students lived in dormitories and attended regular and special classes amid the cadence of drill instructors.

Robert Casey remembers this well. As a 1944 Villanova mechanical engineering graduate, he was one of the first to graduate from the V-12 program.

Casey, who presently is employed as a mechanical engineering industrial professor for the College of Engineering, vividly recalls July 1, 1943: "We were issued uniforms at the Field House, some of us received only portions of uniforms because they ran out. As a result, many of us walked around for days half civilian, half military."

Marine drill instructors whipped the students into shape, he added. "Physical training was rugged. We climbed rope ladders to jump into the Fieldhouse pool from the rafters. We also had to swim with our hands and feet tied, kicking hard to stay afloat and reach our goal. Other times we had to swim 50 yards under water wearing heavy sweat suits, taking a quick breather at the 25-yard mark."

Because of the program's success, the present Navy ROTC unit was established after the war and

Arts center opens

By ELIZABETH BARSZCZEWSKI
Assistant News Editor

The dedication ceremony for the newly constructed St. Augustine Center for the Liberal Arts is scheduled for Sept. 22 at 4 p.m. on the lawn in front of the center, said Stephen Bell, director of University Public Relations. Planning to start construction of new residence halls has now begun.

In attendance at the dedication will be the Rev. Edmund Dobbin, O.S.A., University president, as well as Archbishop Rembert G. Weakland, O.S.B., of Milwaukee.

Weakland will be presenting the keynote address at the ceremony, Bell said. An academic convocation will follow the dedication ceremony, said Bell.

Construction on the St. Augustine Center for the Liberal Arts was completed in late July, Bell said. According to all reports, construction on the new liberal arts center went smoothly and was completed on time, he added.

"All comments from the liberal arts faculty concerning the new building have been very positive," Bell said.

Bell cites three main reasons for their reaction. It is a new building and offers all the amenities and modern conveniences associated with a new building, Bell said. The new liberal arts center is also popular with the faculty because they are housed in one centralized location, said Bell. The faculty also likes the design of the building, he added.

The Center offers each faculty member an office, or "faculty study," said Bell. Each study has a window which provides a view of the campus or one of the inner courtyards, he said. Located between the departments are common conference areas and Orientation brought together many new friends; both upperclassmen and freshmen.

Freshmen welcomed at orientation

University Press Release

The incoming freshman class experienced an early introduction to academic life during the orientation program, Aug. 29 to Sept. 1.

Before coming to campus, the 1,500 new students received two literary works: St. Augustine's Confessions and Flannery O'Connor's short story, "Everything That Rises Must Converge."

The seminar program, organized by political science Professor Colleen Sheehan, consisted of 76 volunteers, including the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., University president, faculty, deans and campus administrators, who each led a seminar with 21 students.

"It's an opportunity for students to get an idea of what a college seminar is like," said Kathleen Byrnes, assistant to the dean of Students, who directs the Villanova orientation program. "We focused on Augustine for the University's sesquicentennial year because he is the patron saint of Villanova and the namesake of the Augustinian Order, which has governed Villanova for 150 years. We chose a reading from Book Two of Augustine's Confessions and selected the modern short story because both have similar themes — guilt for past experiences and coming to terms with some of the evil present in the world," she added.

The four-day orientation program also featured a welcoming address and Mass, a reception for new African-American students, academic information sessions, a slide show on the Philadelphia area and a public safety forum, among other activities. New to this year's agenda were two mandatory sessions: "Dangerous Liaisons" about date rape and "Playing It Safe at Villanova," concerning AIDS.

Upperclassmen helped to plan and execute orientation, assisted by a student chairperson, an administrative coordinator, a 12-member steering committee, 19 administrative assistants and 76 orientation counselors.

Arts and Sciences launches new core curriculum

University Press Release

The University has revised its core curriculum requirements for the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences, emphasizing an interdisciplinary approach to learning.

The changes include innovative courses that will take the 3,000 arts and sciences undergraduates on an academic odyssey by examining topics or themes from the perspective of several disciplines.

One of the changes is a new, year-long Core Humanities Seminar for freshmen. The seminars, limited to an enrollment of 15, will be taught by 50 professors who typically have specialized in one area. For example, a history or religious studies professor might teach a course in classic Western literature. Using required texts and extra readings, the professors will determine which themes to stress in their courses. They will be mentors for the freshmen, guiding them through intensive reading, writing, speaking and thinking.

Writing will be emphasized in four writing-intensive and four writing-enriched courses that each student must take. The freshman seminar is writing-intensive, meaning students must compose a minimum of 30 pages. In writing-enriched courses, the minimum is 10 pages.

"There was concern initially about having faculty teach subjects outside their field," said Dr. John Doody, a professor of philosophy and director of the core program. So Villanova conducted 18 faculty development workshops in which professors shared expertise and suggestions. More sessions are scheduled this fall. The faculty agreed that in a sense they were all interdisciplinary: professors teaching history or literature talked about issues in politics, economics, religion in their classes.

For the first time, a fine arts course will be required. Students may choose offerings in music, theatre, art or art history, and film. A course called College Ethics, formerly Intro to Philosophy II, fulfills the ethics requirement and has been expanded to include faculty from other departments.

Students will also fulfill a diverstiy requirement consisting of two courses: one in U.S. culture and the other in international culture. To make science more appealing and accessible, committees are reviewing the core to find a more integrated, practical approach to the two-semester requirement in the natural sciences.

Options under consideration are a year-long course that will integrate all the natural sciences or the creation of a series of theme courses focusing on specific topics such as genetics, energy, ecology or evolution. But changes to the science requirements will not affect students immediately, faculty have said.

"Villanova has one of the largest core curriculums — 65 credits out of 122," Doody said. "This core has been under review since 1988. There will be more changes and adjustments, but we want a core that reflects our philosophy today for a liberal arts education."

seminar rooms which can be used by neighboring departments, Bell added.

Planning is already underway concerning the construction of five new residence halls on west campus, Bell said. No additional land was purchased by the University in order to build the residence halls which will be constructed on 60 acres of land which is adjacent to St. Mary's Hall, said Bell.

Most of the living space within the dorms will be allocated for upperclassmen and will be designed to offer students a more "apartment-like" living arrangement while still remaining on campus, he said.

Originally, there had been plans to build almost twice as many residence halls which would have housed approximately 1,200 students, Bell said. Due to the newly adopted policy of downsizing, the administration decided to build fewer residence halls, said Bell.

and they know we're doing everything possible [to control underage entrance]."

"We carded every person that came inside. The problem was that when the police arrived, those who had shown I.D. suddenly didn't have I.D.," said LaCava, who added that the bar now owns a video camera to record people showing their identification.

"Most of the people cited were Villanova students there to see the band Last Call," said a junior who was taken to the police station before receiving his citation. "The police closed all the doors and had everybody file out and show identification. I shoved mine down my shirt and said I used someone else's."

"The whole process took about an hour," said a senior who avoided arrest by showing his false identification to the police. "I had two beers downstairs before a bouncer told me I had to go."

"There was some guy who jumped on stage, put on the disc jockey's head phones and got away with it," said a sophomore who was cited. "That guy's a legend."

Citations average $150 for first-time offenders, and loss of driving privileges for 90 days.

Surveys: Jobs are out there and students are optimistic

By College Press Service

The good news is that there are jobs out there for recent college graduates. The bad news is that the economic downturn has enabled employers to hold the line on initial salary offers, the College Placement Council found in its annual salary survey.

Another survey shows students are optimistic that they will find employment in a short time and expect that the beginning salaries will range from $20,000 to $30,000.

The council's July 1992 salary survey also found that some employers were not able to place graduates in positions that they had been offered. The survey "shows that though the recession did not provide for an abundance of employment opportunities, not all graduates' employment prospects were affected by it," the Bethlehem, Pa.-based council said.

Broken down by major, the council's survey showed the ups and downs graduates can experience in beginning wages:

- Nursing: Graduates received starting salary offers 10 percent or more than last year, up to $32,597. Allied health graduates' jumped 7.2 percent to an average of $31,568.
- Chemical engineers: The average starting salary increased 4.6 percent to $39,216. Electrical engineers had initial salary offers averaging $34,033, and mechanical engineers received offers of $34,546.
- Civil engineers: The average initial offer fell slightly to $29,600. Offers from state and local governments for civil engineers rose.
- Liberal arts: Most disciplines lost ground, the survey found.
- Accounting: Starting salaries for recent graduates rose 2.7 percent to an average offer of $27,351.
- MBA graduates: Those with non-technical undergraduate degrees gained 2.4 percent for an average offer of $36,096. Those with technical undergraduate degrees had an average offer of $40,195, up 4.2 percent.

The survey was made of offers extended to students graduating between Sept. 1, 1991 and Aug. 31, 1992.

Meanwhile, a survey done by Philadelphia-based Right Associates found that despite the ongoing recession, college students expect a relatively short job search, starting salaries between $20,000 and $30,000 and a promotion within one to two years.

Right Associates surveyed 325 students nationwide during career seminars for the annual survey, measuring career preferences and goals, job search and career expectations and attitudes about future career advancement.

Sixty-five percent of the students surveyed expect beginning salaries this year to top out at $30,000, and 5 percent expect to receive more than $35,000. There is some concern that these high expectations may be out of line with the reality of the current job market.

A majority — 91 percent — of students are still optimistic about their future career plans despite the sluggish economy, and 75 percent expect to have the same or better standard of living as their parents, the majority of whom hold professional positions.

ganized by the basketball program, the Student Programming Council (SPC) and Student Government, the event is scheduled to kick off the NCAA season. The official beginning of the basketball season is Nov. 1. Midnight Madness will begin at 11 p.m. on Oct. 31.

Among the activities planned are "all kinds of give-aways," said Batchelor. The evening is to be capped off by an intra-squad game between the Wildcats, starting at midnight.

"I think Midnight Madness will be a great thing at Villanova. It will start on the 150th anniversary and will become a tradition to carry on year after year," Batchelor said.

Batchelor and Breen also are looking into several other projects for the upcoming year. They hope to have a bank machine installed outside of the Connelly Center, for the use of students at any hour.

Also, they would like to arrange for a shuttle bus to transport students up and down the Main Line.

Batchelor said he is very interested in improving the telecommunications systems on campus. This would include providing telephone service to all dorm rooms, and allowing for class registration to be done completely by computer.

Both Batchelor and Breen have had prior experience in Student Government, and view that as an advantage in their pursuits this year. "We're lucky because we were both in Student Government last year. Instead of starting from scratch, we have something to work with," Breen said.

They also expect that experience to help in their dealings with the University's administration.

"They're very willing to meet with us and talk to us about the different issues," Batchelor said. "We feel welcome to approach them, and they come to us, too. We have a good working relationship."

"I hope our administration is remembered for being very active in a lot of student concerns, and being approachable for students to communicate their concerns," Batchelor said.

Campus HIV rate on the rise

By College Press Service

University students show a higher incidence of HIV infection than military recruits, said a speaker at the second annual Summer HIV Prevention Institute for Colleges and Universities.

Studies show that one in 500 university students is HIV positive," said Carolyn Parker, executive director for Texas AIDS Network.

A recent survey issued at the International Conference on AIDS said nearly half of U.S. Army soldiers admit to hazardous sexual practices, such as failing to use condoms, the Daily Texan reported.

Although many universities in Texas have AIDS awareness information available through student health services, AIDS needs to be discussed in all areas of campus life, Parker said.

"The AIDS issue needs to be addressed in other areas, like history and English, because it's a phenomenon that can no longer be ignored in their writing and teaching," she said.

The number of deaths from AIDS already exceeds that of the Korean and Vietnam Wars combined, she added.

The AIDS institute was held in late July.

continues to ready students for military life after they receive their college degrees.

Villanova's ROTC unit will salute this half-century milestone at its red, white and blue Fall Review Oct. 13 at 3 p.m. on Mendel Field, according to Capt. Sandy Stoddard, who commands the campus unit.

Because of a recent Naval staff consolidation, Stoddard has commanded the Navy ROTC units at both Villanova and the University of Pennsylvania since January 1991. He spends equal time during the week at both campuses. Today, there are approximately 170 students enrolled in Villanova's Navy ROTC program.

Over the years, several Villanova alumni, many of them Navy ROTC graduates, have ranked high in recent American military history. Gen. P.X. Kelly ('50), a retired four-star general, was commandant of the U.S. Marine Corps. During Operation Desert Storm, Gen. George Crist ('52) guided America through the Persian Gulf War on national TV. The retired four-star general formerly served as the head of U.S. Central Command, responsible for joint military operations in the Persian Gulf.

More recently, Major Andy Allen, a NASA astronaut and a 1977 mechanical engineering and ROTC graduate, piloted the Space Shuttle Atlantis. During his eight-day mission this summer, the alumnus took a Navy ROTC flag, a plaque from the College of Engineering and a Villanova pennant into space in observance of the university's 150th anniversary beginning Sept. 18. The astronaut will take part in the Opening Weekend pageant set for Sept. 19 from 11 a.m. to noon on South Campus.

icans fear it will send jobs from U.S. companies to Mexican workers.

During Bush's acceptance speech at the Republican National Convention, he promised to reduce spending and lower taxes but has not proposed any ideas for economic stimulation, said Taylor.

Clinton has said he will tax only the wealthy. But if elected, he would probably propose a broad-based tax bill, according to Taylor.

"Clinton supports Bush in favor of strong defense ... and is in favor of using force when necessary" to back up his moderate image, said Dr. Lowell Gustafson of the political science department.

Bush has been reluctant to intervene militarily in the civil unrest of the former Yugoslavia, because he believes the century-old rivalries will not be solved by using U.S. troops, said Gustafson.

Neither candidate proposes massive cuts in defense spending even in the absence of threats from other world powers, Gustafson added.

One of the ways Bush proposes to reduce the deficit is to increase Medicare premiums by almost $2,000 per recipient over the next five years, according to the Sept.6 Philadelphia Inquirer.

Clinton promises universal health insurance and expanded health-care benefits. But he does not address the possibility that set annual limits on health care could decrease some medical services.

Dr. M. Louise Fitzpatrick, dean of the College of Nursing, said the nursing community has a proposed agenda for health care reform.

The agenda includes a restructured health care system, which would enhance access to health services, foster decision-making in selecting health care services and facilitate use of the most cost-effective options.

A "standard package of essential health care services available to all citizens and residents of the United States" also is defined in the agenda.

The nurses' agenda for health care reform includes steps to reduce health care costs, provisions for long-term care and insurance reforms to assure improved access to coverage.

St. Mary's fire

"I feel it was arrogant on the part of those students who did not evacuate the building because fire alarms are not something to be taken lightly. You just never know."

Another St. Mary's resident said, "I didn't hear the alarm when it first sounded, but I did hear it five minutes before it shut off. I thought it was a prank and didn't leave my room. I also did not hear anyone knock on my door to alert me of the fire."

"The evacuation went rather well considering the sound of the alarm was new to the freshmen residents. Some upperclassmen did not evacuate, but the resident staff re-entered the building to find remaining students. Every single room was keyed," Nicolosi said.

Sophomore Andrew Eveleth said, "After last year's numerous false fire alarms, to have this year's first fire alarm be a real fire is both ironic and surprising."

Sophomore Brynn-Marie Farrell said, "Despite the number of false alarms, fire alarms should be taken seriously at all times. Hopefully, all University residents will now realize how important it is to evacuate buildings properly during fire alarms. Fortunately, this fire wasn't serious."

"It was scary to see the actual smoke and know that this time it wasn't a drill or joke," said junior Nancy Shelley.

Freshman Fran Bogle said, "It is a scary and surprising thought that someday a destructive fire could cause serious damage."

"It is a good lesson to be learned and we are lucky it was only a small fire this time," said freshman Jim McCarthy.

"Treat each fire alarm as notice of a real fire, until positively proven otherwise by the proper authorities," according to Public Safety's fire alarm procedure.

Villanova's history will be celebrated in many exhibits that will be on display throughout the year in the Connelly Center.

Free Sesquicentennial posters and programs detailing the opening ceremonies and other events scheduled throughout the year are available to the public at the Connelly Center information desk.

Changes transform University life

Just a few months ago, the campus seemed a bit weary. On an early summer visit, we found that the Liberal Arts Center stood uncompleted, the field behind Sullivan was overgrown and the Chapel needed further renovations. What a surprise when we returned!

Congratulations Villanova, and Happy Birthday!

Due to the magnitude of the University's planned Sesquicentennial celebration, the campus needed much improvement to impress alumni and guests. More than ever, the campus landscape is stunning. But most importantly, in the process of improving the overall beauty of the campus, the University provided necessary improvements for faculty and students.

The St. Augustine Center for Liberal Arts, its official title, provides desperately needed faculty offices. The center has centralized the once-scattered liberal arts department and gives faculty members personal space.

The University also responded to student needs with the WildCard, dorm access renovations and upgraded athletic facilities behind Connelly.

When we begin the Sesquicentennial celebration next week. we will do so with Villanova Pride. The Sesquicentennial comes at a very important time. Villanova is at a crossroads. Questions remain about the size of our endowment, West Campus, downsizing and our ability to become a more national university. If the drastic improvements over the summer are any indication, both the Sesquicentennial year and our future should be overwhelmingly successful.

Salute with paws, jeer with claws

We introduce you to Paws and Claws, a new addition to the editorial pages, created especially for commentary on campus issues in this year of celebration. Modeled after other slogans like "Cheers" and "Jeers," or "Hearts" and "Darts," our Wildcat version will single out individuals or events either worthy of notice or deserving criticism.

Paws to the New Student Orientation Program, including the new students. You both add a great deal to the University.

Paws to the basketball program, Student Programming Council and Student Government for Midnight Madness. Finally, 'Nova has adopted this college basketball tradition and given students another reason to look forward to Oct. 31.

Paws to Steve Lappas for his enthusiasm during Orientation. Hopefully, he can re-energize the basketball program with equal exuberance.

Claws to those St. Mary students who did not leave the building after a fire started in the building. All fire alarms must be taken seriously.

Claws to the University for the 50 percent increase to $75 for parking stickers.

Remember DSA controversy?

To the Editor:

Regrettably, the "DSA controversy ..." editorial last semester (April 3) raised specious questions which served more to confuse than clarify any useful debate "stirring over the role of Catholic doctrine and academic freedom at the University."

First of all, Catholic doctrine is based on God's laws, not those of the Democrat Socialists of America or anyone else. The history of mankind has often seen His laws disobeyed and trampled on. Hitler's Germany, Soviet Communism and homegrown secular humanism are recent examples. Of these three, secular humanism has come to thrive in many of America's basic institutions including its churches and seminaries in the past 30 years.

Disbelievers, secularists, atheists, skeptics — call them what you will — all chant the same mantra of change. Any change that erases personal guilt and enthrones hubris. After all, God is dead, or so goes the New Age thinking. At Villanova, change has resulted in a steady decline in the core curriculum requirements for religious studies and philosophy. Indeed, changes for the worse.

Secondly, the editorial, in asking, "should the administration allow free expression of opposing viewpoints?" implies that classroom censorship is the norm. My experience at Villanova was that the pros and cons of any issue could be openly and fairly discussed anytime in class. However, to politically attack or subvert Christian doctrine anywhere on campus is to sail under false colors. To claim academic freedom as a license to violate God's laws is a despicable and dishonorable act.

Finally, on page one of the same edition one reads that "DSA posted the flyers to organize student participation in the March for Women's Lives ..." Apparently the Socialists do not consider an opposing viewpoint such as a march to save the innocent lives of unborn daughters and sons to be deserving of "equal attention." Of course, human sacrifice is politically correct nowadays.

The time has come to call a halt to this academic sophistry in attempting to deal with matters of life and death and right and wrong. Also, it is time to recognize political correctness for what it really is, namely, godless secular humanism. But don't take my word for it. Just subject each new proposal for change to the harsh light of public cross-examination.

Christian education should be a reflection of God's Commandments and the straight and narrow path He would have us tread. Other forms of education can offer only the seductiveness of a random walk unencumbered by a Christian's moral compass.

Questions to ponder

1) Why are there identification plates on the trees? Have you stopped to read any of them?

2) How much do you know about the programs sponsored by Campus Ministry? Peace and Justice?

3) When you pass someone you don't know, do you greet them or do you avoid making eye contact with them at all costs?

4) If and when you drink, do you drink to drunkenness more times than not?

5) How is the new Core Curriculum going to affect Villanova?

6) Can you pay disciplinary fines with the Wildcard?

7) What are your feelings concerning the Sesquicentennial celebration?

8) Do the new Call Boxes make you feel safer?

9) Do you study to get a good grade, to educate yourself or both?

10) What do you add to the Villanova community that would be lacking if you were not here?

COMMENTARY

Dobbin addresses community as celebration begins

From the President's desk . . .

I am pleased to extend a warm greeting to the whole University community as we begin this academic year which coincides with the celebration of Villanova's 150th anniversary. The observance of the Sesquicentennial will commence formally with Parent's Weekend on Sept. 19.

The events, ceremonies and publications marking the University's Sesquicentennial have been designed to heighten our sense of Villanova's history and traditions, to celebrate the University's present and to look forward to an even brighter future.

Many of you have commented to me on the palpable sense of forward momentum evident at the University as we enter this special anniversary year. I hasten to assure you that the changes which indicate this momentum are not simply cosmetic changes made to enhance the celebration. Rather, what you see emerging is based upon a careful analysis of what has made Villanova special over these 150 years and an even more careful strategic positioning of the University to build on these strengths for the future.

Perhaps the most conspicuous change evident on campus this year is the new Saint Augustine Center for the Liberal Arts. This building symbolizes eminently Villanova's continuing commitment to the heart of its Augustinian mission; the fostering of a community united in love and committed to the joint pursuit of truth. The Saint Augustine Center has been designed to be inviting and to provide an atmosphere conducive to academic sharing, not only among the faculty whose studies are housed there, but also among the faculty, the administrative staffs and our students. Students will be encouraged by the very architecture of the building to seek our faculty or staff for counsel and advice in addition to using its seminar rooms.

I urge all of you to participate fully in Villanova's sesquicentennial celebration. View the exhibits. Attend the events. Share in the recollection of Villanova's traditions.

Another obvious and even startling change for those visiting or returning to campus is the acceleration of our ongoing project of campus beautification. This is another example of building on strength. Villanova has traditionally been known for its beautiful campus. This summer our campus was designated a national arboretum because of its distinguished assortment of trees. We intend to build upon this tradition of beauty because we are convinced that an ambience of beauty contributes to learning.

Less obvious but no less significant has been the recent establishment of Villanova's first two endowed professorial chairs: the Josephine C. Connelly Chair of Christian Theology held by Rev. Michael J. Scanlon, O.S.A. and the David R. Cook Chair of Philosophy held by John D. Caputo, Ph.D. It is noteworthy that both of these distinguished professors are currently teaching core humanities seminars, an indication of Villanova's intensfying commitment to the quality of its undergraduate education — again, building upon strength.

Other progress of particular interest to our undergraduates has to do with plans for the near future. Preliminary site work has been done on the West Campus to prepare for the construction of five apartment type residence halls. If all goes according to our plans these halls should be operational by Fall 1994. Likewise we are nearing completion of a campus-wide telecommunications plan which, among other things, should provide telephones and computer connectivity to all rooms in residence halls by next year.

I urge all of you to participate fully in Villanova's sesquicentennial celebration. View the exhibits. Attend the many events. Share in the recollection of Villanova's traditions, in the celebration of the community's present vitality and in my own enthusiasm for our future.

Student says, "I really love my cappuccino"

By PETE SHAUGER

Last week my sidekick and I were bebopping through the Connelly Center, still wearing the naive smile of summer on our faces ... not unlike the smiles on the faces of the people in Barleycorns last Thursday, who honestly thought it was under-21-night. As we were skipping and frolicking through the lobby, eager to be back at this beloved institution, we were accosted by one of the many infamous credit card guys. This was not just any credit card guy, though. He was offering me the card above all cards, the ecclesiastic fantastic plastic-in one word, the Villanova Wildcat Visa Card.

> I began to think to myself, where is that darned tuition money going anyway? And then it hit me. I mean it really hit me . . . I walked right into it. That new cappuccino bar in Connelly . . .

Rather than just lying to get him off my back, I gave him the time of day, which was ten o'clock. He had a look on his face that said, "Ah, he's fallen into my trap, the fool," and proceded to give me his sales pitch.

I sensed that he sensed that he was close to persuading me to sign up for the card. Little did he suspect that my sidekick, Chad, Prince of Pessimism and Profundity, was about to kill any chance of me signing anything with the name Villanova on it. The credit card guy tried to tell me that with the Wildcat Visa Card, I could rest assured that all profits would be pumped directly into the University, and not just to a big old, mean and nasty organization who cares very little about me as a person.

Nearly crippled by the credit card guy's moving speech, I looked to Chad as my last hope, to save me from the senseless slaughter. And Chad, in a cool and calculated manner, leaned over to me and said, "What happened to the tuition checks that mom and dad have been sending?"

As I was dragged from the scene I felt as if I'd been pulled from a burning building by fireman Chad, fearing not for himself, but only for the safety and well-being of those in distress. But seriously, I began to think to myself, where is that darned tuition money going anyway? And then it hit me. I mean it really hit me ... I walked right into it. I am speaking of the new cappuccino stand in the Connelly Center that never used to be there. I thought to myself, "Hey, I'll bet this stand cost about a quarter of my tuition. Technically, you could say that I personally (with the help of my parents) paid for this stand. Technically, you could say that I own this stand. Therefore, technically, no one should raise an eyebrow if I suddenly overturned the stand and smashed every last bottle of "crappuccino" syrup — technically speaking of course.

But, since I didn't really have the time for any stretching exercises, and fearing that if I acted on my impulses I might pull a muscle or two, I slowly backed away from the stand merely giving it a warning.

Remembering that I still had approximately three quarters of one year's tuition hidden throughout the campus, I parted from Chad and headed toward the bookstore, known for its striking resemblance to a black hole, where money is sucked through in strange and bizarre dimensions of spending.

When I entered, I immediately mistook the bookstore for that dance club down the street when I saw jukebox situated no more than 15 feet beyond the front doors (you know the club ... the one where they girate.) Horrified from flashbacks of that club, I rushed outside to get some fresh air and time to think. I considered renting a U-Haul to take my new possessions home in ... I considered selling them and flying to Greenland ... I considered going to school at Villanova for a thousand years in order to acquire the new liberal arts building ...

However, being the patient young man that I am, I'm willing to wait for something worthwhile to come along, and when it comes you can be sure that I won't hesitate in taking it. I figure, by the time I graduate, my parents and I will have poured enough money into the University that the Shauger family will rightly own a small fleet of campus security vans, which we would most definitely have painted bright orange and start the country's first organized, combination taxi service and traveling disco cappuccino bar.

Pete Shauger, English major, returning for another exciting year as the infamous "Student says."

California reminds us that dreams can fade quickly

By ELLEN GOODMAN

On a warm summer day, it is easy to pick out the lingering signs of La-la-land, this western outpost of local pride and national parody.

The hotel pool in West L.A. has a telephone at every other lounge chair. The driver stalled beside me on the freeway is applying nail polish and drinking coffee in a car equipped with everything but a shower.

There are rollerblades on Venice Beach and sprouts on the sandwich plate. People on Melrose Avenue are tanned and toned, tucked and lifted. Half the waiters in Beverly Hills have agents. The other half are looking.

But this is a place where mellow has hardened with anxiety and laid back has acquired an edge. Southern California, the place where people came to get away from it all, now has it all. Unemployment at 9.5. An earthquake at 6.1. A riot at $785 million.

Since World War II, Americans from Iowa and New York have packed up and moved to California. If there was one place to find the American dream of a fresh start and an easier life — a dream shaped by balsy weather and by Hollywood — it was in this stretch of land at the edge of the continent.

Now there are more Americans leaving than arriving. Sixty percent of the moving vans are taking Californians away. The people who still see this state as the dream are not looking west from Michigan but north from Mexico or east from Asia.

The belief that Southern California was as immune from economic woes as from ice storms has disappeared. The state has lost some 600,000 jobs in the last 18 months. There are more layoffs to come. Here in L.A. county, one in seven people are on food stamps or welfare or some form of aid.

The state whose unfettered conservatism gave the country tax revolts is now paying its workers in IOUs instead of checks. The place whose unfettered optimism gave the country its homeboy Ronald Reagan, has now turned on his successor.

> In the American mind, California still stands for the 'fresh start.' It was the trendsetter, the great believer in change . . . Now, this land may be holding out a very different sort of message.

The Orange County Register in the heart of conservative Southern California has called on President Bush to withdraw. Meanwhile the president is reduced to making pro-California videos to allay the fears of Japanese tourists.

The car culture too seems to have come to a dead end here. Not just because of the smog, but the human atmosphere. The automobile characterized a city that grew up and out, priding itself on independence and movement, on get up and go.

There was always something about the car that fed on and fed the notion that we were onour own, making our separate way in the world. Now that prize of independence is matched by the bumper-to-bumper burden. There are people who would rather quit the city than commute. And they do.

Even the comic image of the drive-in economy has been matched by the threatening image of a drive-by shooting gallery. The real estate pages advertise "gated parking" and there may be fewer car phones sold here for business than for safety.

Of all the unease, it is the racial eruption from South-Central L.A. that still casts the grimiest layer over the local consciousness. The reputation for live-and-let-live tolerance and the pride in diversity that survived Watts and gang warfare and the growing gap between rich and poor has come up against the video-reality of Rodney King and Reginald Denny, point and counterpoint.

Recently a baseball team from the South-Central community played in Simi Valley — site of the King trial — and the Rebuild L.A. leaders have their civic plans. But the energy to revive the community seems to have lost steam. Many in Los Angeles cannot even agree on whether to call the violent nights of April a "riot" of the lawless or an "uprising" of the oppressed.

Indeed, the most optimistic and committed of community activists have turned sober, if not depressed. In a long-ranging interview, Jane Pisano, dean of the School of Public Administration at the University of Southern California, which sits on the edge of the burned-out district, worried most that "one of the biggest problems of the post-April environment is that people have lost hope."

Now, this land may be holding out a very different sort of message. California is no longer the national escape hatch, a monument to auto-mobility. The dream, like the buck, stops here.

Student recounts experience in war-torn Croatia

By SUSAN BURNS
Staff Reporter

Newspapers are teeming with the latest headlines from war-torn Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina, but most Americans are, as yet, far removed from the situation. One Villanova sophomore, Phil Stulic, experienced the struggles first-hand this summer while visiting relatives in Brodarci in the heart of northern Croatia.

Although Stulic was not born in Croatia, he has gone to his family's village every year since he was five. The turmoil resulting from the declared independence of Croatia did not prevent him from paying his annual visit. However, now the village is part of a newly born nation.

Last February, Croatia, Bosnia-Herzegovina and Macedonia by popular vote declared independence.

"For the past 45 years they [the Serbs] have been trying to slowly kill our spirit. They took away our songs, our flag, our culture," Stulic said of Croatia's secession. "We just got sick of it."

Now, the Serbs are on the move with the third most powerful force in Europe terrifying the new nations with brutality, Stulic said. The Serbs' goal is to mesh the surrounding states into a "greater Serbia" through a tactic called "ethnic cleansing," he added.

Genocide & mutilation have become accepted acts.

Noises of the bombs and shelling are common in Brodarci. Rubble from bombs and gunfire is widespread across the country.

Although the village is protected somewhat by the three rivers that wrap around its circumference, the fighting is actually only miles away, Stulic said.

And tales from the concentration camps spread rapidly back to the ears of Stulic's relatives.

The Serbian terrorists, called Chetniks, once accosted a fellow villager. Tearing him from his car, they imprisoned him in a concentration camp where he was chained in a cell, Stulic said.

While in prison the man was beaten by mere children. Ten year old boys were forced to use their clubs on the man as a part of their militaristic training designed to teach them to hate all Croatians.

Steering Committee recalls Orientation

By GRETCHEN FISHER
Assistant Features Editor

Many changes have taken place in the world in the three years since Villanova seniors got their first glimpse of life at Villanova while being swept along in the whirlwind of chants and cheers that is Orientation. The years went by quickly, according to a few senior members of the Steering Committee. They were filled with memories of classes and papers, exams and professors, but most of all the times spent with close friends that will never be equaled.

Everyone remembers their first day on campus, and the curious feelings of anticipation and worry — excitement for the phase of life about to begin and melancholy over the chapter of life which was now closed. Seniors are experiencing these feelings once again as they prepare to leave Villanova and venture out into the world.

Christina Olson, student chairperson of the Orientation Committee, treasures most of all the people she met in her Orientation group, many of whom are still her close friends. After four years of involvement with Orientation, she is still amazed at the enthusiasm of everyone involved in the program.

She explained that she is feeling some qualms about leaving Villanova. "I hadn't realized how much Villanova meant to me, and how much it means to a lot of people." She expressed appreciation for the administration of the school who, she said, went "above and beyond" the duties of their jobs, devoting not only professional but personal time as well.

"I realize how lucky the freshman are — they have four more years ahead of them at Villanova."

Tiy Smith

Aaron Nicodemus, a senior committee member, remembers feeling very nervous during his Orientation, with "a bunch of bright-colored shirts trying to make me feel better." Although he spent a very "tired four days," he also remembers making a solid group of friends during that time. He explained that Orientation had more entertainment this year, with Carnival Day and performances by the Villanova Dance Ensemble, the Singers and the Jazz Ensemble.

Nicodemus, who is also nervous about moving out into the "real world," explained that, for the seniors, "the year is still young."

Share a first time bungee jump

By KAREN CAMPBELL
Features Editor

What is it that drives people to what some consider stupidity, others bravado, in pursuit of the ultimate adventure? And more importantly, why do I find it necessary to find out about these things firsthand?

Once a friend sent me a list of activities suggested to achieve a "natural high," like running in a 10-kilometer marathon, jumping in puddles and donating all your money to televangelists. (This list was compiled, I assume, by people living their lives "naturally stoned").

Nowhere on that list did it recommend tying a rubber band around one's waist and hurling one's body from a hot-air balloon dangling 250 feet above the ground. Yet recently I found myself perched on a ledge swaying beneath such a hot-air balloon, pondering the correlation between thrill-seeking and imminent death.

The desire for death-defying thrills and chills has prompted the growth of many industries designed to harness the adrenalin rush, such as skydiving, parasailing and hang gliding. However, since its introduction in the United States five years ago, the popularity of bungee jumping has soared above all of these. Perhaps it is the easy accessibility of the sport; bungee cranes can be found on boardwalks and in state parks throughout the country. Maybe it is the relatively low price of a jump, which lacks the costly equipment required for other similar sports.

Whatever the reason, Americans seem to be hooked on adrenalin, which enthusiasts agree is a very powerful and addictive drug, according to a national bungee franchise, Adrenalin Adventures.

The Adrenalin Adventures franchise is a family-owned business which provides balloon and crane bungee jumps throughout the country. Doug Hase is one of the sport's original fanatics. He has accomplished a world record in bungee jumping, a 2,600 ft. jump from the top of a hot-air balloon. After completing this jump, Hase cut his bungee cord and parachuted to the ground.

Hase began jumping from bridges in Colorado five years ago. After being forbidden to jump from several bridges, he acquired a hot-air balloon pilot's license and, with the help of two similarly addicted brothers, Alex and Eric, Adrenalin Adventures was born.

"People ask if jumping is safe," said Alex Hase, who now runs one of the company's branches in New Jersey. "I just tell them that my mother owns the business. It's a great line."

Adrenalin Adventures charges $89 for novice jumpers to test "The Launch," the initial 160-foot jump, from a hot-air balloon. The same jump from a crane is $65. The price might seem a bit steep for the terror or exhilaration (take your pick) associated with the free fall, which lasts about two to three seconds. But a jumper is also paying for the pre-jump anticipation, as well as post-jump euphoria.

Adrenalin Adventures touts itself as providing the country's safest bungee jumping sites. Jumpers wear both waist and shoulder harnesses and the number of bungee cords attached to these are proportional to the jumper's weight.

Intramurals kick off at 'Nova

By PEGGY AGOLINO
Assistant Features Editor

The football team kicked off another year of successful Villanova athletics with a win against West Chester Sept. 4, turning our thoughts to sports as we look forward to being a spectator or participant in this favored Wildcat pastime.

But wait ... did you hear that Villanova has over 100 basketball players? And not one football team, but over 125? The source of these dubious statistics is Debbie Martino, the coordinator of the Intramural Sports Program.

Martino explained that the program has been active at Villanova since the 1930s, and today enjoys much success due to the large percentage of Villanova students involved.

The difference between intramural sports and club sports such as crew and rugby is that the latter play against teams from other schools while the intramural teams compete against other Villanovans.

Did you hear that Villanova has over one hundred basketball players?

The variety of intramural sports offered — men's and women's football, soccer, softball, basketball and volleyball and women's field hockey — cater to the different tastes of Villanova students. Volleyball and softball also offers coed teams.

For most events, the season culminates in a "Night of Champions" at which the athletes celebrate. Members of the football, softball and basketball teams may have the chance to represent Villanova in the City Six tournaments. The City Six is comprised of teams from Villanova, Temple, LaSalle, Penn, Drexel and St. Joseph's.

The winners of the City Six football competition travel to a national tournament held in New Orleans. Last year, the Villanova men's football team placed ninth in the country.

Each school involved in the City Six sponsors a different sport.

Martino said many students who played varsity sports in high school participate in the intramural program. Most teams do not have set practices. Anyone may join, and those who do not have a team organized will be placed on an established team. For more information students may contact Martino in the Athletic Office in duPont.

Outreach

Villanova Committee for the Philadelphia Homeless

Organized and led by student chairpeople with a Campus Minister as coordinator, VCPH has four main programs:

THE STREET COMMITTEE - three times a week students take sandwiches into areas where the homeless live. A separate committee organizes groups of students who make the sandwiches.

THE SOUP KITCHEN COMMITTEE - Thursday and Saturday a group of students serves meals to men, women and children in a Soup Kitchen in Philadelphia.

THE HOMELESS EDUCATION COMMITTEE - publicity, fundraising and the publication of a newsletter twice a year helps to educate the campus community about the issues of homelessness.

HOUSING REHABILITATION - on weekends, groups of students do repair work, painting and odd jobs for the poor and the area shelters. The HABITAT FOR HUMANITY campus chapter is part of the rehab committee and works on a Norristown house on Saturday mornings.

Ministries

Big Brothers/Big Sisters

A program that offers a variety of social and fun events designed to forge friendships between students and their Little Brother/Little Sister. Age range is between 7 and 11 years old.

Mission

Learn first hand the plight of the poor in the third world. If you feel called, come with us during semester breaks to serve with those who have committed their lives to serve the poorest of the poor. In the past students have traveled to Haiti, Appalachia, Maine, Mexico and inner-city Philadelphia.

An Invitation

We welcome you to Villanova University and invite you to enjoy the benefits of the Campus Ministry programs. Our staff of diverse and resourceful Campus Ministers works long hours in loving service for you. We respect and put into action the hope of St. Augustine: "that they may all be one mind and one heart in God."

Social

Hunger Awareness Week

Coordinated by Campus Ministry and run by student chairpeople, the HAW program informs fellow Villanovans of the situation of world hunger and challenges them to respond. Activities such as the Run for Hunger, The Hunger Banquet and letter-writing campaigns to our legislators converge in a week of consciousness-raising.

Balloon Day

This spring counterpart to our fall Hunger Awareness Week has a two fold purpose: to benefit the hungry through a fund raising carnival, and to provide our community with a day where we can celebrate the beauty of nature and the gift of each other.

Liturgical Life

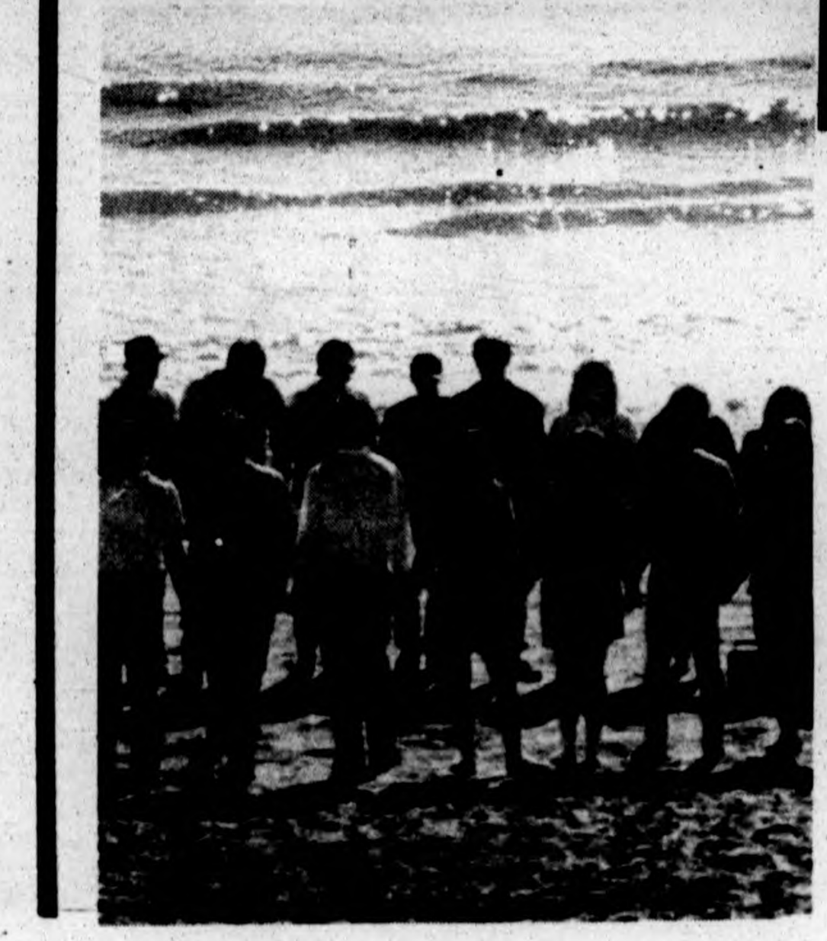
In all of these ministries, training is provided so that students are ready to serve the community with faith and skill.

LECTOR - Proclaim the Word of the Lord to the community.

HOSPITALITY - Welcome members of the community at the celebration.

EUCHARISTIC MINISTERS - Share the Bread and Cup with the community.

PASTORAL MUSICIANS - Come sing or play an instrument and lead the assembly in liturgical song.



Spirituality

Besides the accessibility for sacraments, spiritual direction and counseling, Campus Ministry provides:

- preparations for baptism and confirmation
- Pre-Cana Weekends for engaged couples
- day and weekend retreats
- prayer groups and Scripture study
- a week of renewal
- HEC (a service retreat with, and for, persons with physical disabilities)

Croatia lies in ruins

"This is a brutal war," Stulic said. "The Chetniks (Serbian terrorists) blow up hospitals, hotels and factories, burn houses and butcher people. Genocide and mutilation have become accepted acts."

Other types of camps, to compensate or at least comfort displaced refugees, have been set up in neighboring towns for people who have lost their homes in the fighting.

"There are so many displaced people. It has become for many towns, 'run or be killed,' " Stulic said. "Their [the Serbs'] main goal is to move our people so they can move in their own."

Brodarci is on the edge of the "United Nations protected area," so Stulic's relatives have enough food and supplies for the time being. Stulic feels that a lot more needs to be done to aid the citizens of Croatia.

"The UN is just scratching the surface. Food alone will not help liberate us," he said.

The Croatians are not yet ready to fight, Stulic said. The average salary for a Croatian, $50 a month, is not even enough to provide proper boots for soldiers, he said.

"The Serbians have everything. We have slingshots compared to them," Stulic said.

In Stulic's opinion, the United States should back the anti-Serbian forces with defense weapons and should remember its attitude toward the ideal of freedom within a country.

Yet, he ideally hopes for a peaceful solution. "'There is a possibility that Serbia would get a big foothold in Croatia, but they could never overrun it. They're just chipping away," Stulic said. "We can never give up hope for a peaceful solution."

Travel by train

By JODI VACARO

Don't feel like piling into a car crammed full of drunks and heading off to some unknown destination? But don't have a car to do anything else? Well then, take the train.

The R5 near St. Mary's stops at many towns along the Main Line and also travels into center city Philadelphia. The movie theaters in Wayne, Bryn Mawr, Ardmore and Narberth are just a short walk from the train station.

The three stops in Philadelphia make it an easy jaunt to such popular student attractions as South Street, Chinatown and the Spectrum, not to mention the tons of restaurants and dance clubs Philly offers.

One stop of the R5 is right around the corner from the bus station, with buses leaving all the time for the Reading outlets, the Jersey shore, New York City and Washington, D.C.

The train on South Campus connects with a bus for a relatively cheap and easy ride to the King of Prussia mall and the movie theaters there. This train also stops within a short distance of the Spectrum.

Tiy Smith, who plans on entering medical school after college, said what meant the most to her was the way her Orientation Counselor was there for her even after Orientation ended. She expressed her envy of those who just experienced Orientation. "I realize how lucky the freshmen are — they have four more years ahead of them at Villanova." Preparing to leave Villanova has also made her appreciate it more. "It makes you want to stress to the freshmen to take advantage of all Villanova has to offer, because you will get so much more in return," she said.

Twelve jumpers were scheduled for the afternoon of my jump. Three were practically professionals, having jumped with Adrenalin Adventures twice before. The rest of us watched with false courage and actual dread as the balloon rose, a jumper plummeted and was lowered safely (if shaken and beaming) to the ground.

Finally, I stepped into the balloon's wicker basket, eyeing my harness, the cord and the grinning pilot dubiously. The balloon rose above acres of farmland (very hard-looking farmland), and paused at the end of its tether cord. The pilot looked on with encouragement as I prepared to step onto the basket's narrow ledge. (At this point speech was impossible, hyperventilation is not conducive to chatter). So I summoned a deep breath, drew upon my dwindling store of courage and prepared to look death straight in the eyes ... and whimper.

Looking back, the fall itself was not that terrifying. It is the stepping off into nothingness that scares you. But after that ... pure adrenalin.

There is not abrupt shock upon reaching the extent of the bungee cord's elasticity, just a pause and a series of recoils that give a feeling of weightlessness. Once the flailing and bouncing finally calms, you can clutch the cord for dear life and bask in your post-jump rush, which lasts anywhere from one hour to a week (depending upon how many times you watch the complimentary videotape of your jump provided by Adrenalin Adventures).

According to Alex Hase, who, in addition to being a veteran bungee jumper, is battling a fear of heights, "Your body knows how to bungee jump, you just have to convince it to leave the platform ... You have to let it happen, let instinct take over. After all, when you get out there, it is not like you really have a choice."

For more information about bungee jumping, directions or reservations call Adrenalin Adventures at (908) 707-1770. According to their brochure, "Your body manufactures the most powerful drug known to man. Experience it!!"

Top 10

Welcome to a NEW year at Villanova from the SAME editors at Dougherty 201. In case you didn't notice, a lot of things are DIFFERENT here at Villanova. Here are the Top 10 things that changed at Villanova while you were away for the summer:

10. The price of parking stickers — it went up while the number of parking spots remained the same.

9. Cappucino cart in Connelly moved the cookies into the background.

8. There is new turf on the football field — $1.25 million worth.

7. There are new basketball and tennis courts — administration couldn't be accused of favoring football.

6. There is new landscaping — i.e. the tacky purple Villanova in front of Dougherty.

5. Wild card provides more ways to spend money you didn't earn this summer.

4. The security boxes at the dorms which are locking students, not intruders, outside.

3. The call boxes were made more visible in case someone is trying to reach out and touch you.

2. There is more on-campus housing — just joking.

And the most important thing brought to 'Nova's campus — whether it makes you happy or sad is . . .

1. A new basketball coach — good luck!

Peace and Justice Solutions

1. Iraq has agreed to a nation-wide water sampling because it is less intrusive than on-site inspections.
2. Harry Truman.
3. $200,000 or more in salary and benefits.
4. The first transplant of a baboon liver into a human.
5. Brazil celebrated its independence. The occasion was marked by military parades and peaceful demonstrations calling for the impeachment of President Fernando Collor de Mello.

Villanovan publishes first issue

Special to the Villanovan

With the Sesquicentennial logo appearing around every corner and a University trend to look back over Villanova's formative years, the Villanovan took this opportunity to delve into its own history. The following is an article reprinted from the first Villanovan in 1917, "published quarterly by the students of Villanova College." The style does differ from the stories which appear in the Villanovan today. But the content emphasizes a theme evident in our current sesquicentennial celebration — that alumni support is critical to the success of early 'Nova ventures.

This is the debut of the Villanovan — the news magazine representing the various interests of the student body of our College of Villanova. The Prolog enters, bows and speaks — inviting favorable attention. We cannot address the world at large, but we hope an audience of the alumni and the undergraduates. While our journal is undergraduate in management, we look to the alumni for fostering aid and inspiring example. May the alumni, who cherish such fond recollections of the old Villanova magazine, find in the present venture a not unworthy successor! This object may be achieved, if the alumni will kindly co-operate with the undergraduates to make The Villanovan a permanent educational instrument of our beloved and honored institution. This cooperation on the part of both alumni and undergraduates — so necessary to assure success — consists of two complementary factors — first, literary cooperation; second, financial cooperation. On the side of literature, our purpose is mainly for the training of undergraduates in literary self-expression; hence we look to the alumni rather for interested patronage, for kindly advice, for helpful criticism. On the financial side, the alumni can help in several ways. They can assist in extending the territory of our magazine, they can increase the number of subscribers among themselves and their friends, they can advertise in our columns. As alumni news is a striking feature and an important department, the alumni can always find something of personal interest in regard to themselves and their old college friends, awakening dear recollections of their former good times. It is taken for granted that the undergraduates know their financial duty in the case before their very eyes.

Now, undergraduates and alumni, will you, as loyal sons of Villanova taking pride in Alma Mater's achievements, respond to our earnest appeal? Will you by a little self-denial on the part of each one make possible a great success in the aggregate? Will you kindly assist in this good cause of sound education? We offer grateful acknowledgment to our alumni for their zealous efforts to bring to completion hopes so long cherished by all Villanova men. If the co-operation continues in the future as hitherto, our permanent success is assured. With these three key-words in summary — literary contribution, helpful criticism, financial support — the Prolog bows and exits, as the curtain rises.

'Zoo TV' mesmerizes Spectrum crowd

By MAURA RURAK
Assistant Entertainment Editor

The outside broadcast of Zoo TV was chanelled through the Philadelphia area Sept. 2 and 3 when the Irish band U2 played Veterans Stadium. On one of the most elaborate stages to date, which reportedly cost over a million dollars, including 50 TV sets, four huge rotating screens, a satellite dish and 10 old East German cars, Bono, the Edge, Larry and Adam played continuously for two and a half hours.

It is obvious that U2 has entered the electronic age through their use of video equipment which included piping speeches by Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., into the cult hit, "Pride." Special, precise attention was paid to the details in the presentation of each song. "Mysterious Ways" brought a bellydancer on stage while the word "one" was flashed in every imaginable language on the backdrop of screens during the song of the same name. Many times throughout the show Bono took charge of the video camera and filmed himself and the others on stage. The headlights of the painted cars served as spotlights while the moniters flashed warnings such as "Call Your Mother," "Everything You Know Is A Lie," and "Elvis Is Alive."

An obvious focus of Zoo TV is the upcoming election. Once again, Bono called the White House. George, however, was unable to come to the phone, soliciting Bono to answer, "Oh, I guess we're not as important as we thought we were." The comment drew a chorus of "Boooos" from the crowd. Bono did leave a message for George, telling him to watch more TV. "Desire" off the Rattle and Hum album was turned into a campaign/convention style circus ending with Bono screaming, "I have a vision. I have a vision. Television." Banners saying "Vote, Baby" hung from the stage.

The concert opened with George Bush on one of the large video screens saying, "We will, we will, rock you," an obvious dub. With that, the band sprung into "Zoo Station" and continued to play nearly all the songs off Actung Baby, noticeably skipping "So Cruel" and "Wild Horses." "Bullet the Blue Sky" was as dramatic as a Broadway play where as the staple "Sunday Bloody Sunday" drove fans into a frenzy. An extension from the main stage projected far out into the audience. On this runway acoustic jams were performed including "Angel of Harlem" and B.B. King's "Stand By Me." Larry Mullen, Jr. emerged from the drums to sing a traditional Irish drinking song and the Edge closed the show by serenading the crowd with Elvis' "I Can't Help Falling In Love With You."

Bono was his usual unpredictable self, picking a female fan from the audience to dance with during "Love is Blindness." Constantly reaching out to the crowd in "Trying to Throw Your Arms Around the World," he has been called one of the most sensuous singers in the entertainment world.

The creativity of U2 is endless and knows no bounds. In contrast to the "Joshua Tree" tour which was presented on a stark white stage, Zoo TV combines all the chaos and confusion of the modern world. An aesthetic experience, U2 is both visually and acoustically pleasing. They have taken the typical rock concert onto a higher level that other bands can only hope to emulate. Zoo TV has become the new standard by which all other concerts will be judged.

INXS' Welcome provides tone for the '90s

By CARRIE KORNOKOVICH
Staff Reporter

Welcome to Wherever You Are, the newest album by INXS, is music that makes a statement. From the environmentally safe packaging of the CD to the lyrics of the songs, it seems that this time, the band is concerned with more than just great dance rhythm.

The cover of the album features the young members of the Artane Boy's Band in Ireland, but fans can still catch a glimpse of INXS in the middle of the desert. The combination of the boys, the landscape, and the Eco-Pak recyclable CD holder portrays an image of calmness and awareness of the world. This is an appropriate reflection of the music.

Compared to INXS X and Live Baby Live, the music of Welcome to Wherever You Are still has that popular dance beat, but the words are more mellow and perhaps meaningful. It opens with an Egyptian sounding song called "Questions," which asks some rather philosophical questions about life. "Not Enough Time" and "Heaven Sent," the two songs which made the album popular, both deal with love and desire.

"Beautiful Girl" slows down the pace and "Baby Don't Cry" is the perfect song to sing along with because that phrase is repeated the entire time. Yet that is characteristic of most of the songs on this album — they have only a few verses which are sung several times over. The last two songs, "Strange Desire" and "Men and Women," are not as good as the rest. The words are hard to understand and the music is more downbeat, but they are still worth listening to.

Undoubtedly, INXS has created their best collection yet. It is music for any time, or any activity, whether it be partying or resting. Welcome to Wherever You Are looks good, sounds excellent, and does not harm the ozone. It is everything an album in the '90s should be.

Lollapalooza gains notice with hot sound

By THOM ARNO and MARK McCREARY
Staff Reporters

What began in 1991 as the concert of the few and alienated became the concert of choice this summer. Lollapalooza has become the traveling Woodstock for '90s youth, but the answer to why it is that way is less clearly defined. It is difficult to argue that the '92 line-up (Red Hot Chili Peppers, Ministry, Ice Cube, Soundgarden, Jesus and Mary Chain, Pearl Jam, and Lush) was 'better' than the '91 (Jane's Addiction, Living Colour, Ice-T, Nine-Inch Nails, Siouxsie and the Banshees, The Butthole Surfers, and Rollins Band), or to clearly define what kind of music the festival contained. But what is clear is that the bands that played were considered 'alternative' this time last year, yet are no longer due to their increased popularity. Is it the attitudes which have changed? Or are people looking for new music to turn to — and finding it where they least expected it?

Perry Farrell, of the now defunct Jane's Addiction, is still coordinating the project. He has a different idea for the direction in which Lollapalooza will travel. By gathering bands from other countries, cultures and points-of-view, he leaves the question of its popularity in limbo. Would the attendance continue to swell out of curiosity, or are people going to be content with the new-found music of the past two? The headlining Jane's Addiction and the Red Hot Chili Peppers (even before 'Under the Bridge') have both been established bands. But what if a band like Afghan Whigs, or L7 (an all-female grunge band), or even Basehead (a country-rap group) were to headline? Would people keep their minds open enough to experience these bands, or would they run the Chili Peppers' Blood Sugar Sex Magik even further into the ground?

The idea is not to put down or critique what has happened in the previous events, but to keep the incredible idea of Lollapalooza alive, and not let further shows dissipate because of unheard bands. The music that is readily available now is incredible, and as the New York Times just confirmed, the direction of listeners' tastes is drifting, changing, and daresay, improving. Not that you have to change your previous tastes, but do not be afraid to give unheard of bands a chance; you may surprise yourself with what you find.

'Female' examines fears

By AARON NICODEMUS
Entertainment Editor

The sun. The beach. The vacation. The summer lover. All a memory now as you return to your dorm or apartment or house, to find every student's worst nightmare: the roommate. Whether a best friend or a complete stranger, the dilemma of sharing space with someone else has plagued undergrads for at least 150 years. But unreturned dress shoes or backstabbing comments hardly compare to the nightmare of living with the mirror-image psycho portrayed in "Single White Female."

Bridget Fonda plays Allie, a Manhattan software designer, living in a rent-controlled apartment building. After kicking out her cheating live-in lover, she feels the pangs of loneliness inside her spacious suite. "SWF seeks same ... " begins her ad, and she interviews numerous prospective roommates. The last applicant, Heddie, (Jennifer Jason Leigh) is soft-spoken with a talent for fixing leaky sinks. The two hit it off immediately.

Things begin innocently enough. Heddie looks rather plain and harmless, with an annoying tendency to be overprotective and clingy. But as the mail disappears, their puppy ends up dead, and strange noises emanate from Heddie's room, Allie suspects something is not right. These suspicions are confirmed when Heddie transforms into Allie's double and the bodies begin to accumulate.

"Singel White Female" is a worthwhile thriller, even if the suspense seems contrived with deliberate calculation. Jennifer Jason Leigh's portrayal of a psychotic bent on protecting her best friend is one of the more convincing attempts in recent memory. While certain twists are new and refreshing (never has a six-inch heel been used so effectively), "Single White Female" lacks the deceptiveness and sheer power of the Hitchcock films it attempts to emulate. As a worst case scenario of the roommate from hell, however, makes it a worthy view.

FAST FORWARD: FALL MOVIE PREVIEW — Here are some of this season's anticipated releases: "The Last of the Mohicans" stars Daniel Day-Lewis and Madeleine Stowe caught between sides during the French and Indian War of 1757. The story is filmed in the North Carolina wilderness and created with meticulous historical accuracy. In one scene, 1,000 Native American actors, trained in Mohican war tactics, fight with British forces in pitched battle.

The thriving Seattle club scene is the setting for "Singles," starring Matt Dillon as the lead singer for a band played by members of Pearl Jam. Bridget Fonda, Campbell Scott, and Kyra Sedgwick round out the cast of this comedy which could define an important cross-section in current music.

The TV ads for "Sneakers" leave one in awe of the cast: Robert Redford, Sidney Poitier, Dan Aykroyd, River Phoenix, and Mary McDonnell. What are all these people planning to do in one movie? They form a team of computer hackers hired by the government to obtain some Top Secret information from the government. More confused? Only movie theaters will have the answers next week.

REWIND: The quality of a movie can be accurately assessed by what is called the "video turnaround." That is, how much time from the film's release in theaters to its subsequent release on the video store racks. Two recent examples capture the essence of this theory in perfect clarity: "Fried Green Tomatoes" and "Final Analysis."

First the good news. "Fried Green Tomatoes" (turnaround time: one year) combines Mary Stuart Masterson, Mary-Louise Parker, Jessica Tandy, and Kathy Bates in a story that actually matters. Set in the 1930's Deep South, "Tomatoes" explores thoughtful relationships between the four women while artfully skirting its controversial handling of lesbianism. In the end, sex is not the point, but the emotional ties between friends. "Fried Green Tomatoes" makes for a quality night in.

On the ugly flipside, "Final Analysis" (turnaround time: six months) is a murky pyschoanalytic drama with Richard Gere and Kim Basinger. (In this pretentious piece of drivel, Gere is a shrink who falls in love with the beautiful sister of one of his patients (Basinger). She then proceeds to use him to gain her release from prison after she kills her mobster husband (Eric Roberts). Not one viewer will care, though, because the supposedly dramatic lighthouse scene, filmed in gloomy melodramic style, has the audience laughing at its most serious point. "Final Analysis" deserves its place in the cinematic dustbin.

Gabriel rediscovers touch

By COLEEN KENIREY
Assistant Entertainment Editor

The Cutting Edge

Peter Gabriel's long-awaited successor to his chartbusting record So will be arriving in stores later this month. In recent years, Gabriel has done instrumental work on soundtracks to "The Last Temptation of Christ" and "Birdy" and has also amassed a greatest hits collection, Shaking the Tree. Us will, however, be his first new release since 1986.

Us contains lyrics which address more personal issues, such as the end of Gabriel's marriage and breakup with former girlfriend Rosanna Arquette. Thus the songs will be more introspective and revealing than the singer's previous work. The new album will feature appearances by Sinead O'Connor and Brian Eno. Gabriel's new release also includes lesser-known guest musicians from countries around the world such as Kenya and Senegal.

The video for the first single from Us, "Digging in the Dirt," features unusual visual imagery in the style of the "Sledgehammer" video. Gabriel is shown lying in grass and dirt with snails and slugs crawling across his face. In later frames the singer is buried in sand as animated clay figures sing along. The video has the same choppy quality of strung-together still photography which its award-winning "Sledgehammer" predecessor made famous.

Teaming up once again with producers Teddy Riley, Babyface and L.A., Bobby Brown has just released his follow-up to Don't Be Cruel. Titled Bobby, the new album has not been very well-received by critics, who cite lack of originality as its main weakness. Apparently in an effort to regain the pop status he achieved with his initial solo hits, Brown has maintained his original sound formula on his new songs..

One item of interest on Bobby is his duet with his wife, Whitney Huston, called, "Something In Common." Topping a great initial success has proven difficult for other artists, and it seems Brown has chosen to again rely on the chart climbing sound of "My Prerogative" and "Don't Be Cruel." If the extensive MTV airplay of Brown's video to the first single "Humpin' Around" is any indication, slick promotion and packaging may be enough to repeat his commercial success.

Bon Jovi will return to record stores from a four-year hiatus with Keep the Faith in late October. The band has been recording the album since late April and the first release will be "Bed of Roses." New songs were written in various cities such as Atlanta, Ga., and Nashville, Tenn., to give them a diverse musical flavor. Following Richard Marx's lead, Jon Bon Jovi has traded in his bushy mane for a shorter, flat and slicked back haircut. Although the lead singer's appearance will be altered, the band promises to adhere to the sound which originally made them rock icons among teenage mall dwellers.

The Black Crowes have been attempting to add variety and spontaneity to their recent shows by not following a set list. In one show the Crowes focused mostly on covers of old favorites, while their opening show in Detroit offered performances of hits from their smash debut album as well as "Remedy," the first release from The Southern Harmony and Musical Companion.

Crowes' singer Chris Robinson again reared his controversial head in the newspapers by putting his foot on a security guard who was preventing fans from dancing in the aisles at a Washington, D.C., show. The guard is reportedly pressing charges against Robinson for the incident.

FRESH CUTS: During their temporary separation, the members of N.W.A. are preparing solo projects for release. M.C. Ren has completed Life Sentence, Eazy-E will be promoting Temporary Insanity and Dr. Dre is developing material for a yet-untitled album ... On Sept. 22 Sinead O'Connor's new effort will be available. Called Am I Not Your Girl, it is a collection of the artist's childhood favorites including such unlikely tunes as "Don't Cry for Me Argentina."

Madison Square Garden has been reserved for an October concert honoring Bob Dylan for 30 years of recording at Columbia. The show would be broadcast on cable television and musicians including Tom Petty and George Harrison would be playing tribute to the great songwriter.

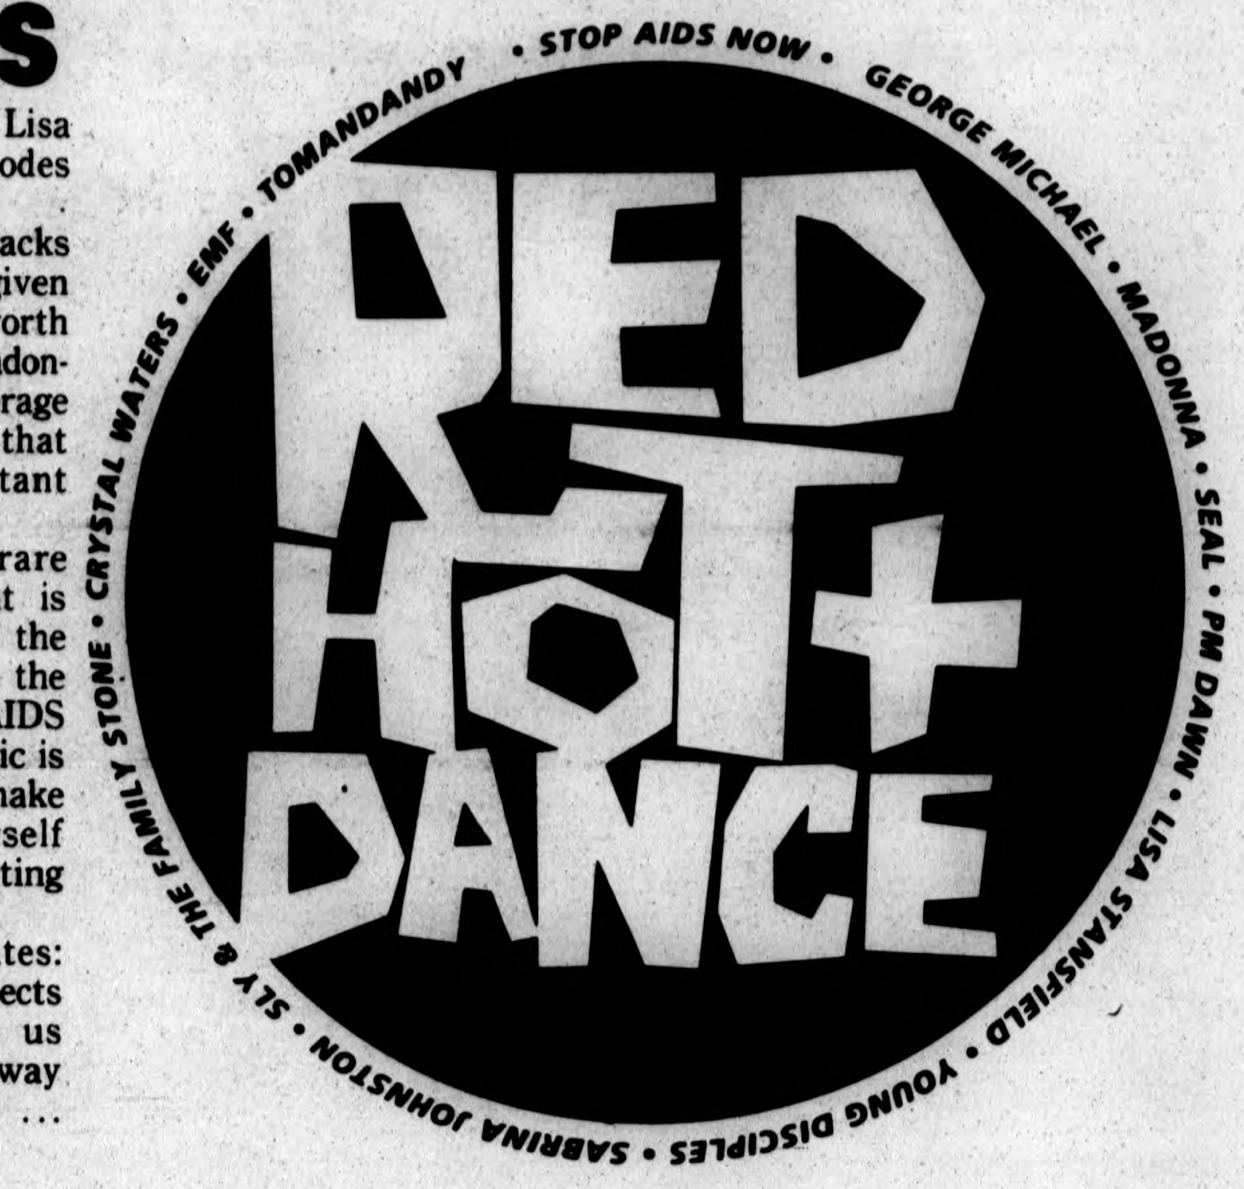
Dance raises awareness

By MAURA RURAK
Assistant Entertainment Editor



RED HOT + DANCE
• STOP AIDS NOW •
GEORGE MICHAEL • MADONNA • SEAL • PM DAWN • LISA STANSFIELD • YOUNG DISCIPLES • SABRINA JOHNSTON • SLY & THE FAMILY STONE • CRYSTAL WATERS • EMF • TOMANDANDY

"Misunderstanding and prejudice surrounds AIDS. This can be lethal. It prevents us from dealing with the issue and stops us from taking responsibility for our own lives. Everyone must find their own way to get access to vital information about safer sex in order to protect themselves," according to the album label.

Red Hot + Dance is devoted to raising awareness and funds for the prevention of AIDS. It is the second major project by Red Hot + Blue, the AIDS organization that last year brought to the clubs dance hits by artists who are concerned about the raging HIV virus. This second album is no different.

Red Hot + Dance revolves around the sounds of George Michael, who donated three new songs to the project. "Too Funky" hit the radiowaves throughout the summer as a huge pop hit in America and overseas. Relying on the grooving beat, overlays of "Do you want me to seduce you? Is that what you're trying to tell me?" made the song an instant hit. As the third song on the album, "Happy," has the potential to be the next club mix for George.

The usual AIDS activists make their appearance on the album as well. Seal donates a much longer "If I Was Trev" mix of "Crazy," while EMF tampers with "Unbelievable." PM Dawn groove with "Set Adrift on Memory Bliss" and Crystal Waters plays with her hit "Gypsy Woman." "Peace" by Sabrina Johnston is a unique blend of rap and reggae and Lisa Stanfield's "Change" explodes with life.

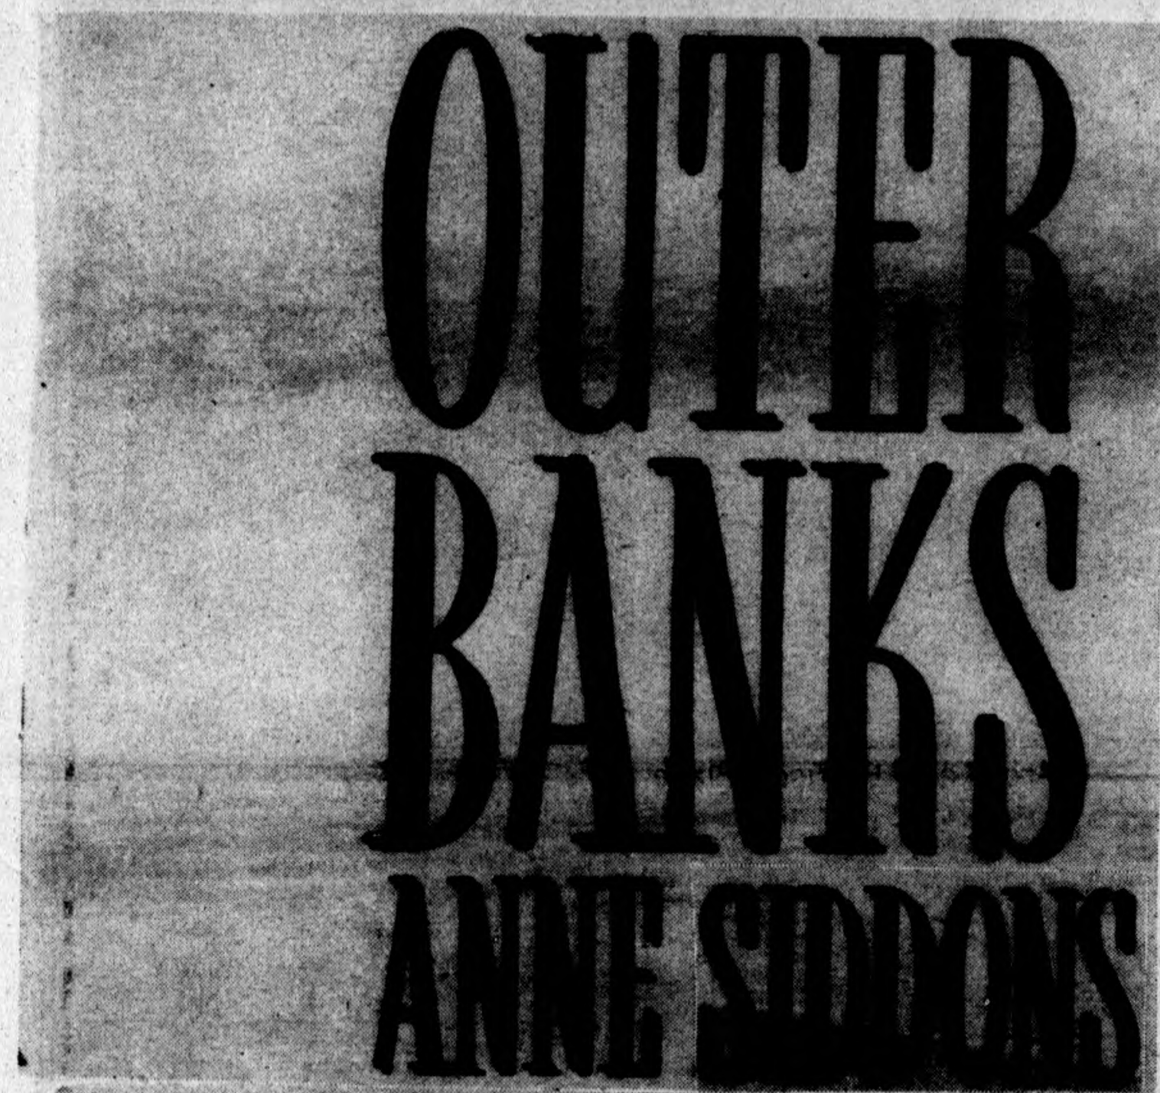
Although many of the tracks are not new, they have been given a facelift and are certainly worth a second chance. Of course, Madonna contributes with an average mix entitled "Supernatural" that is sure to become an instant favorite.

Red Hot + Dance is a rare collection of hip tunes that is focused on one cause. All of the royalties and net profit of the album will be dedicated to AIDS research and relief. The music is positive and can actually make you feel good about yourself knowing that you are supporting the fight against AIDS.

As the album cover states: "Blame is one of the worst aspects of this epidemic. It gets us nowhere and is a convenient way of avoiding the real issues ...

STOP AIDS NOW!"

Anne Siddons examines personal struggle



By COLEEN KENIREY
Assistant Entertainment Editor

In her bestselling novel "Outer Banks," Anne Rivers Siddons has combined many elements of great summer reading. Romance, betrayal, friendship and personal struggle combine as four girls come of age at a Southern college in the '60s. The story revolves around Kate, a child with painful emotional scars hiding behind the convincing facade of a rich debutante with a Southern aristocratic lineage.

Siddons follows Kate from her years as a young girl imprisoned in a phoney image created by her father, through her experimental college years and finally to her difficult adulthood. The mature Kate must deal with the death of her son as well as confront her own mortality. The reader comes to feel personally involved in Kate's struggle with her emotional demons.

During her college years, Kate forms close ties with the intellectual Cecie Hart, vivacious Ginger Fowler and "Fig" Newton, an outcast who assumes the role of Kate's shadow. Cecie and Kate form sisterly bonds through their mutual love of Dorothy Parker's poetry and their secret jokes about Fig. Kate, as narrator, also recounts the girls' trips to Ginger's lovable old beach house on the Outer Banks of Nag's Head, N.C.

The story becomes more intriguing as Siddons reveals the details of Kate's relationship with handsome and worldly Paul Sibley. Once she graduates from college, Kate moves to New York City to pursue an architectural career and experiences heartbreaking changes in her relationships with her college friends and Paul. Her personal growth takes new directions as she continues to resolve past feelings. The reunion of the foursome is the pivotal point of the story.

With Siddons' extensive description of the Outer Banks and the beach's central role in Kate's life, the novel is perfect summer reading, but it is entertaining regardless of the season. The main character is fully developed, as she is presented at all stages of her life. The only flaw is a twist at the end which appears to have been added to increase the story's mini-series potential. "Outer Banks" is, however, a great romance novel, character sketch and coming-of-age story all in one well written package.

Bowie stumbles on Oy Vey, Baby

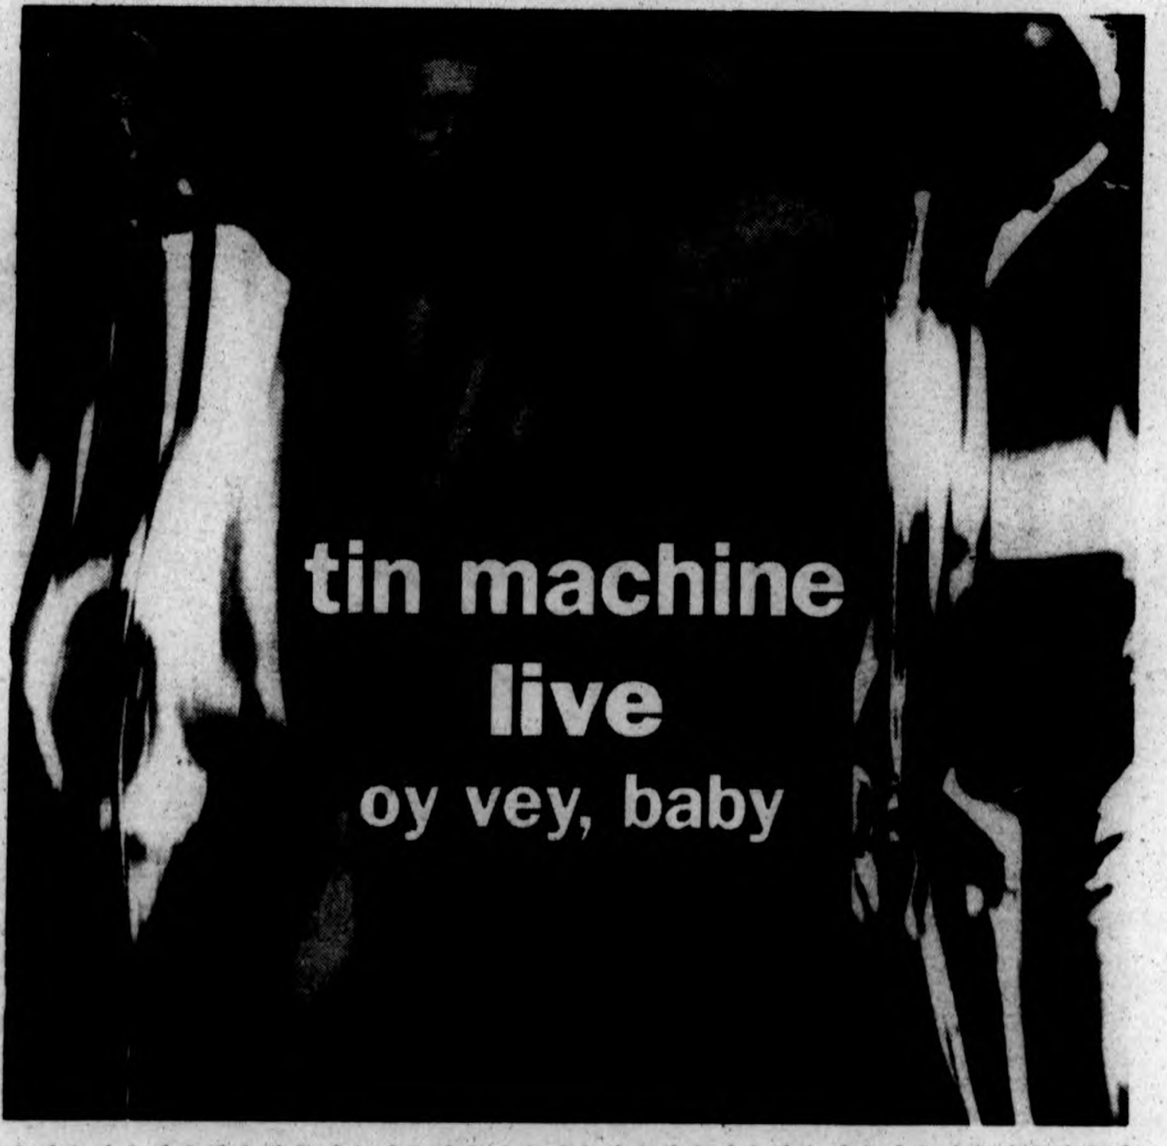
By JOHN KAZMIERCZAK
Staff Reporter



Tin Machine, David Bowie's latest endeavor, recently released a live compilation album titled Oy Vey, Baby. Featuring eight tracks culled from a nine-week world tour of the U.S. and Japan, Oy Vey, Baby presents an interesting mix of rhythm and blues and what the band's publicist terms "slam-bang rock."

Tin Machine, which consists of Bowie (lead vocals, guitar and sax), Reeves Gabrels (lead guitar and vocals), Hunt Sales (percussion and vocals), and Tony Sales (bass and vocals) experienced its genesis when Bowie and the Sales brothers teamed up in Iggy Pop's 1980 release, Lust for Life.

Considering the enormous potential of this talented quartet, Oy Vey, Baby is something of a letdown. Owing largely to the live-concert format of the album, the songs are longer and improvised upon, which should be a good thing but is not. Most of the seven-minute-plus songs start off well enough but seem to wind down and drag in the middle. Although there was an abundance of solos and improvisations, none managed to generate much excitement. This recurring theme is best illustrated in "Heaven's In Here," a 12-minute cut that, at best, sounds like a cheap Stevie Ray Vaughan imitation. The band seems to lack direction and drive, floating aimlessly through its songs. Perhaps the normal length album versions would be more palatable.

It is imprecise, however, to say that Tin Machine's third album is completely devoid of high points. Gabrels' screaming guitar has its moments, most notably as it unabashedly steals the show in rock-oriented "If There Is Something," and "Amazing." Drums and bass are merely adequate, while Bowie's vocal venture into rhythm and blues is competent and smooth, if not particularly inspiring.

The most accurate word to describe Tin Machine's latest offering is "adequate." Die-hard Bowie fans will love it because of his sax and trademark voice, but as a whole, Oy Vey, Baby lacks the impact and vitality to distinguish itself from the multitudes of similar rock and blues bands that exist these days.

Soccer falls to George Mason

BY BOB TRAVISANO
Staff Reporter

The women's soccer team was derailed in its first game under new Head Coach Shelly Chamberlain, losing 3-1 to nationally-ranked George Mason University Sept. 6.

The Cats were on the defensive the entire game as GMU outshot the team 17-7. However, strong goaltending from senior Danielle Fagan kept 'Nova close. The Cats trailed 1-0 at halftime.

> The other coaches and I feel like it was a 1-1 game. They scored on simple mistakes.
> Head Coach Shelly Chamberlain

The second half was a different story as George Mason came out on fire, scoring consecutive goals within a minute of each other. The first score came at 11:30 into the second period as GMU launched a 40-yard shot past Fagan, making it 2-0. Less than a minute later, the Cats surrendered their third goal on a free kick in front of the net.

At 16:05 into the second half, 'Nova responded with a Marcy Micek score, assisted by Ali Maue, to trim the deficit to 3-1. It was a case of too little, too late, however.

"The other coaches and I feel like it was a 1-1 game. They scored on simple mistakes," said Chamberlain. "Both goals were unnecessary. One was a 40-yard shot; even though it was a cannon, it was a gift from heaven."

After an average 9-7-2 season in 1991, the Cats are looking to improve behind junior Rachel Moreau and a pair of sophomores, Sharon Hewitt and Micek.

Spearheaded by that trio, the team is blessed with offensive firepower. Nevertheless, Chamberlain's philosophy is to blend that talent with a strong, stable defense anchored by Fagan, junior Leslie Coleman and sophomore Eileen McCarthy.

"When I first came in, I didn't ask the girls where they played (last season). I wanted total freedom to rearrange the group," said Chamberlain. "We play a 3-5-2 zone with seven possibly on attack and everyone else back."

The emphasis for Chamberlain's Cats is defense.

"We feel the key is preventing goals, not as much in attacking," said Chamberlain.

Even though the Cats lost several key defensive players and All-American Tina Conti, the team's leading scorer last season, Chamberlain is upbeat concerning the 1992 campaign.

"I'm optimistic about the team in general," said Chamberlain. "Every game we'll need strong team effort against some tough competition."

The Cats' schedule is loaded with talented opponents, including five nationally-ranked teams — Virginia, North Carolina State, Rutgers, Maryland and George Mason.

'Nova next travels to NC State for a 1 p.m. contest this Saturday against the Wolfpack. The Cats will then square off against UNC-Greensboro on Sunday.

Cheerleaders gear up for fall

Villanova University's varsity cheerleading squad captured five awards, four of them first place honors, recently at the Universal Cheerleading Association College Camp. The camp, one of five regional camps across the country, was held Aug. 10-14 on the Rutgers University campus.

The Wildcat squad was voted first in its sideline and fight song performance, and third in the cheer evaluation by the panel of cheerleading coaches. The Wildcats also won the honor of the Spirit and Leadership Award, voted on by all the cheerleaders at the camp, and the honor of Most Collegiate, an award given by the camp. Over 800 collegiate cheerleaders from the East Coast were present for the week-long camp.

"I'm excited about coaching at Villanova, both from the cheerleading aspect and the sports aspect," said first-year Head Coach Charlie Murgia. "The squad here has worked really hard so far and did a tremendous job at Rutgers. Football season should be fun for everyone in the stadium this fall."

Soccer to contend in Big East

By MICHEL DAVIES
Staff Reporter

The upcoming season for the men's soccer team promises to be one of great possibilities, as well as one of great difficulties.

For the first time in years, the team is expected to be a major contender. "I think this year is the first time we've been really solid since I've been here," said Scott Aimetti,a skillful midfielder who will unfortunately miss the season with a broken foot.

And solid they are. Having lost only two players from last year's team, the Wildcats are strong at every position.

Returning All-Big East forwards Ken Santos and Joe Roy are expected to handle a major portion of the scoring load, while Temple transfer Keith Taylor is sure to add some extra punch to an already potent offense.

"He's a pure scorer. Give him the ball within 15 yards (of the goal) and he'll bury it every time," says one teammate of Taylor.

Having allowed no goals in last weekend's Lehigh tournament, the Cats are sure to be strong defensively as well. Fifth-year senior Pat O'Malley and junior Scott Dougherty, along with the rest of the defense, allowed only nine shots on goal the entire tournament.

Although the offense and defense are very strong, they should not overshadow the midfield. Workhorse Sean Whitely returns from sweeper to the midfield this season after having started 36 consecutive games for the Cats. Whitely and senior Hector Campus will handle most of the work at midfield while freshmen Bill Read and Jay Summers are expected to contribute extended minutes at the other midfield positions.

> If injuries are minimal and the recruits develop quickly, combined with our new schedule, which is more demanding, I think we have a reasonable chance.
> Head Coach Larry Sullivan

Although the team is very solid and potential contenders, it will not be easy. Perennial favorites Seton Hall and St. John's promise to be difficult matches.

"Seton Hall will definitely be a very tough match," said Captain Santos. But look for the Wildcats to be up for the Pirates after having been eliminated by the Hall in the 1991 Big East Tournament.

Despite the optimisim, Head Coach Larry Sullivan knows that certain things must happen in order for 'Nova to be contenders.

"If injuries are minimal and the recruits develop quickly, combined with our new schedule, which is more demanding, I think we have a reasonable chance," said Sullivan.

A true measure of chances will come at midseason when it plays games against St. John's and Syracuse.

The team is off to a solid start, having captured the Lehigh Tournament last weekend. The Cats defeated Oneonta State 5-0 and then downed Robert Morris 3-0 to claim the Championship.

The women's tennis team is gearing up for another impressive season in 1992.

Tennis looks solid

By JENNIFER FAUSTMAN
Staff Reporter

Dr. Robert Langran has his job cut-out for him this year as the men's and women's tennis coach, as he faces a very challenging tennis schedule after losing his third, fourth and fifth-seeded players. But possibly the biggest problem that Dr. Langran will face this year is that, since he can use only three courts at St. Mary's, he has had to split up the team during practice which physically hinders him from being able to see all his players at the same time.

What coach Langran does have going for him is a solid women's tennis team. Led by senior co-captains Stephanie Kirchner and Jessica Pagana, the team seems as though it can meet the challenges laid before it. Returning from last year is the previous No. 1 singles player, junior Caroline Daley. She will play sophomore Kelly Barnes to see which of them will hold the No. 1 and 2 spots this year. Together, they will be teaming up to make one fierce doubles team.

In the third spot will be sophomore Kerry Dillon, who has moved up from a No. 6 singles spot from last year. She will be a doubles partner with the No. 4 singles player Tiffany Giefer, who is a sophomore that just joined the team this year. Behind them will be the No. 5 and No. 6 singles players, juniors Julie Homicz and Amy Santaiello, who also comprise the only returning doubles team. Coach Langran also remarked that sophomore Isabelle Perrault shows promise worth mentioning.

The schedule will be difficult. The Cats should be receiving the stiffest competition from Georgetown, Mt. St. Mary's, Lafayette, Temple, Lehigh, St. John's and Fordham. It promises to be a great season for watching tennis.

Temple rolls over field hockey

By ALEX SCOFIELD
Staff Reporter

The Villanova field hockey squad faced a formidable opening day opponent in Temple. Head Coach Jackie Gerzabek knew this one would not be easy against an Owl team with revenge on its mind.

"They're out to get us because we beat them last year," she said before the game.

The Owls proved to be even tougher than expected, showing no mercy in a 4-0 win over the Wildcats at Villanova Stadium Sept. 6.

Temple struck quickly in the first half, netting two goals in the opening ten minutes of the game. On a penalty corner hit for Temple, Debbie Utz lodged one into the right corner of the Villanova goal at 5:54. Less than two minutes later, Temple's Toni Byard jumped on the ball right after 'Nova broke up another Owl corner hit. Her goal left 'Nova trailing 2-0 at 7:05 into the half.

Villanova co-captain Marianne Connelly prevented the Owls from doing further damage in the first half. The junior halfback stopped several fast breaks, hit Utz with a flying slide tackle, and lived up to the praise Gerzabek had for her.

"[Connelly] is very smart, and she's fast," she said. "She'll probably be marking [defending] the best girl on every team that we come against."

The Cats were on the defensive for most of the contest, having to thwart 12 Temple penalty shots and only getting one of their own. Late in the second half, Temple notched two more goals, including Byard's second one with 2:35 remaining in the game.

Despite the tough outing on opening day, the Villanova stickwomen have good reason to believe that they can improve on last year's 9-9-1 record. "There are only two key positions we lost last year, and I think we filled them nicely with the players we do have," said Gerzabek.

One player that 'Nova lost to graduation was scoring leader and co-captain Missy Paolantonio. Her 12 points (six goals, six assists), as well as her leadership qualities were key factors in last year's success.

This year, senior co-captain Melissa Rea "will provide the leadership. She's a little quieter than Missy, but she is one of the best players on the team — very aggressive, and she wants to win in her senior year," Gerzabek said.

Rea (one goal, eight assists in 1991) will hold down the right wing position for the Wildcats.

Villanova's main scoring threats come from sophomore Barbara King and junior Bree Hawthorne. In her freshman season, King led the team in goals with seven. Hawthorne caught fire towards the end of last season, notching four goals in the last three regular season games.

Hawthorne and King should receive some offensive help from freshman right-midfielder Teri Galante. Gerzabek describes Galante as "a very quick, very strong player ... the same type of player as [Paolantonio]." Galante and Paolantonio, incidentally, both went to Shore Regional High School in New Jersey.

The Wildcats look for another strong season between the pipes from sophomore goalie Chrissy Thomas. With eight shutouts, Thomas (1.3 GAA and .86 SV%) started every game for Villanova last year. The defensive line should relieve some of the pressure on Thomas, returning starters Connelly and Kate McKee.

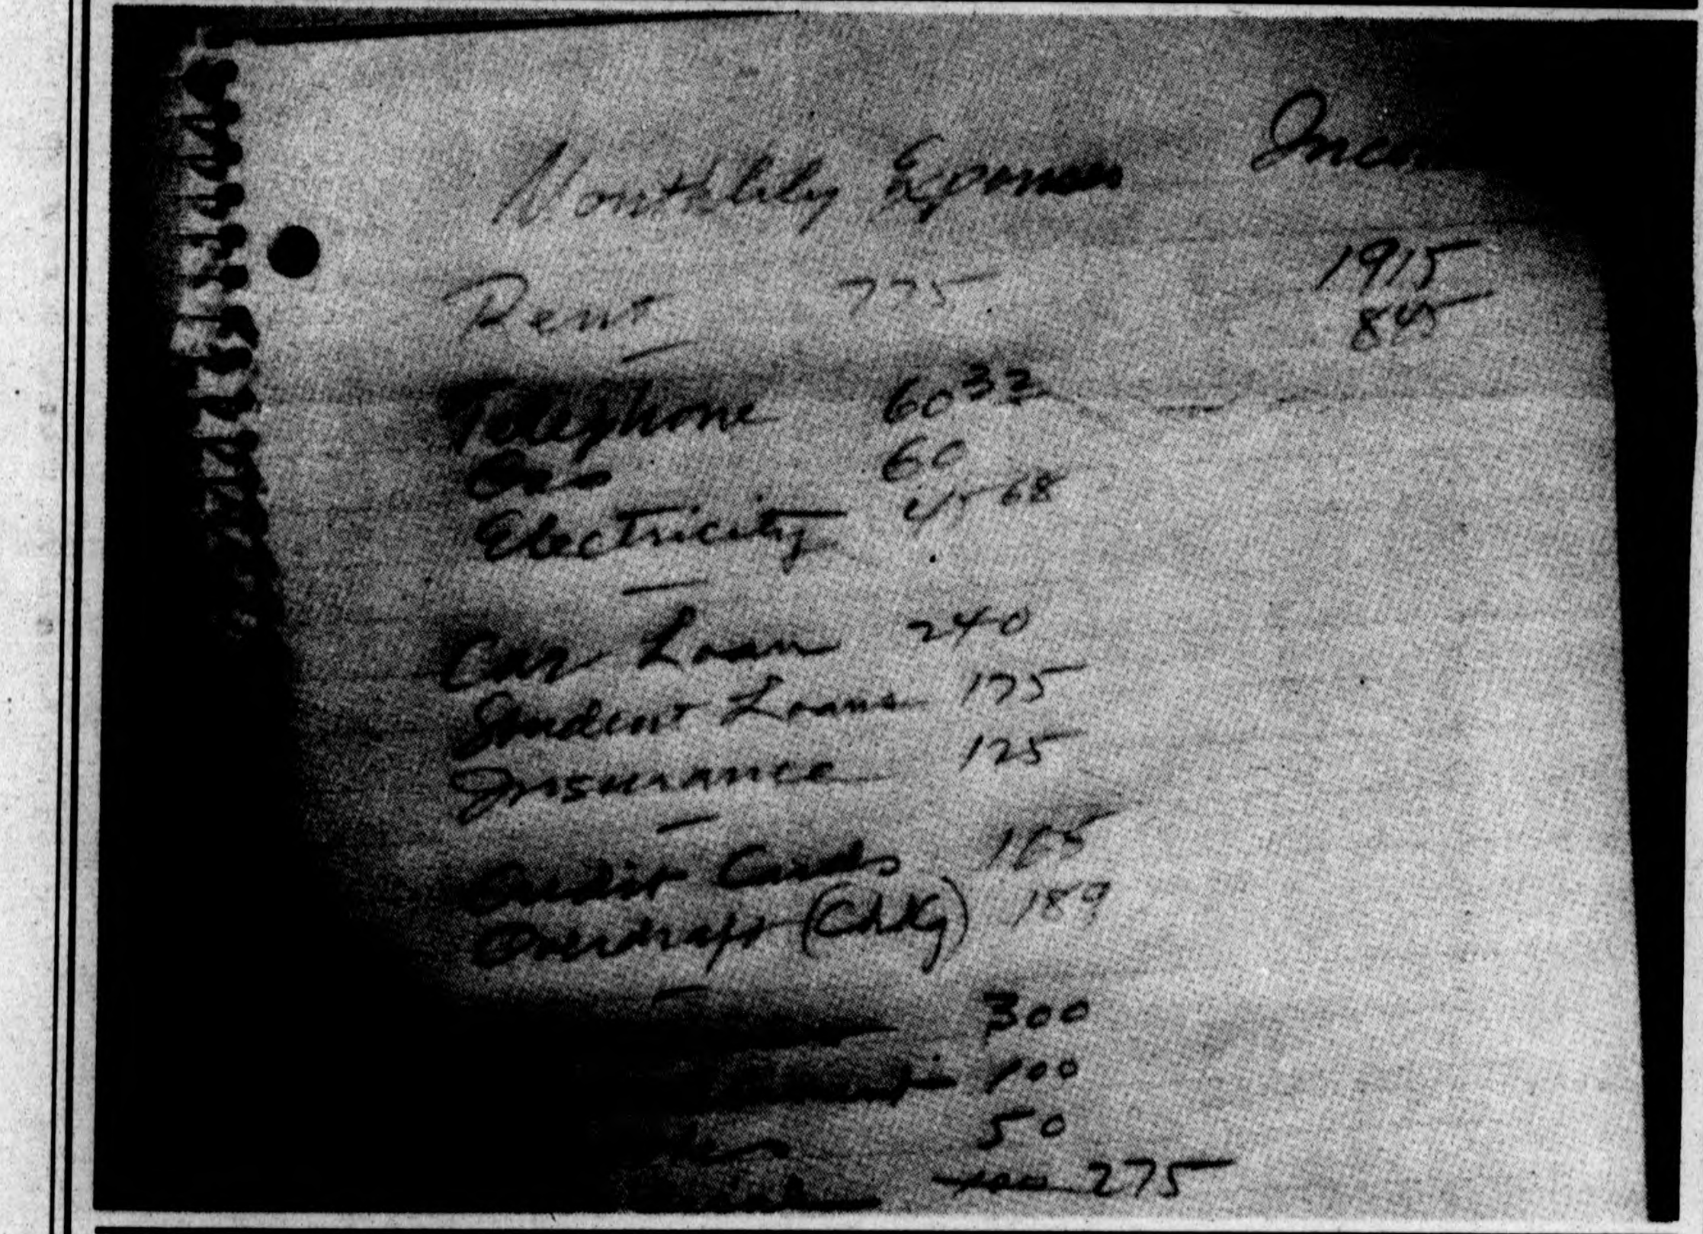
'Nova's schedule for this season is heavy on home games with 14 of 19 games to be played at Villanova Stadium. The Temple game was the first of five consecutive home contests, which include matchups against Michigan today and UPenn on Sunday.

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

VICKY DISPENZA

This week the Villanovan recognizes Vicky Dispenza from the volleyball team. The senior setter registered 31 assists and seven digs in a 15-9, 15-9, 15-1 win over Rutgers on Sept. 5. Dispenza was a first team All-Big East selection last year, playing a major role in the Cat's school-record 31-10 season in which 'Nova finished second in the conference. She was second in the Big East with 10.6 assists per game and again figures to be among the leaders in assists and digs.

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING



IRONICALLY, THE TIME TO START SAVING FOR RETIREMENT IS WHEN IT LOOKS LIKE YOU CAN LEAST AFFORD IT.

Can't afford to save for retirement? The truth is, you can't afford not to. Not when you realize that your retirement can last 20 to 30 years or more. You'll want to live at least as comfortably then as you do now. And that takes planning.

By starting to save now, you can take advantage of tax-deferral and give your money time to compound and grow. Consider this: set aside just $100 each month beginning at age 30 and you can accumulate over $192,539* by the time you reach age 65. But wait ten years and you'll have to budget $227 each month to reach the same goal.

Even if you're not counting the years to retirement, you can count on TIAA-CREF to help you build the future you deserve—with flexible retirement and tax-deferred annuity plans, a diverse portfolio of investment choices, and a record of personal service that spans 75 years.

Yankee Conference Preview

By JUSTIN KESTNER
Assistant Sports Editor

Entering its 46th year, the Yankee Conference has emerged as one of the premier football alliances in Division I-AA. Last season, Villanova, Delaware, and New Hampshire shared the conference title as all three advanced to the I-AA playoffs. In addition, these schools each maintained Top 20 status for most of the season.

This season should be another banner year for the conference. Both Villanova and Delaware have national championship aspirations. Also, 13 members of the 1991 All-Conference team return, including the offensive and defensive players of the year.

Delaware (10-2 Overall, 7-1 Yankee Conference)

The Blue Hens are set to prove that their 42-35 double-overtime loss to James Madison in the first round of last season's playoffs is behind them. Tubby Raymond, coach of the year in 1991, returns for his 27th season at Delaware. Joining him are 15 returning starters from a squad that went 10-2 and finished sixth in the final I-AA poll.

Quarterback Bill Vergantino, an all-conference selection who led the team in rushing and passing for the second consecutive season last year, will run Delaware's Wing-T offense. Keita Malloy led UD in receptions last season and will again provide Vergantino with a downfield target. Daryl Brown, the conference rookie of the year in 1991, gives the Blue Hens a solid ground game. The 6-foot-3, 234-pound fullback scored 11 touchdowns and gained 592 yards. The biggest question mark for Delaware is the offensive line, which lost its center and both tackles to graduation.

Senior Warren McIntire anchors the defense. The defensive back was a unanimous first-team conference selection, leading Division I-AA with nine interceptions. The entire front four returns, led by end Mark Hrubar. Joining McIntire in the secondary are four-year starter Tim Jacobs and junior Scott Acker at the corners. The linebacking corps will have to replace two starters, as only sophomore Pat Mulhern returns.

The kicking game will also be suspect, as two-time All-East punter Gene Vadas and all-conference kicker Mark Drozic have graduated.

Delaware has the talent and experience to contend for the conference and national championships. If it can fill holes on the offensive line and kicking game, Delaware should be very tough.

New Hampshire (9-3, 7-1)

Barry Bourassa is back for UNH, and that is bad news for the other Yankee Conference defenses. Bourassa led Division I-AA in all-purpose yards for the second straight year. In doing so, he was selected as the conference's Offensive Player of the Year.

Coach Bill Bowes must replace quarterback Matt Griffin, who threw for over 5,000 yards in his career. Both starting wideouts return, including John Perry, who caught 52 passes for 918 yards. Only center Matt O'Neill returns to the offensive line.

The Wildcats must find a way to replace All-American linebacker Dwayne Sabb, who was selected in the NFL Draft. The secondary looks to be the strength of the defense, as three starters return. Second team all-conference end Dwayne Gordon anchors the defensive line.

It will be tough to duplicate last season's 9-3 mark, but with Bourassa leading the way, do not count UNH out.

Boston University (4-7, 3-5)

Experienced may be the best way to describe the BU squad. Third-year Coach Dan Allen has 18 starters returning — nine on each side of the ball.

Walter Norton, Jr. and Greg Moore both started games last season and will again compete for the starting job. Whoever emerges as the starter will have several weapons to utilize in the run-and-shoot offense. All four wideouts return, led by Scott Mallory (51 receptions for 692 yards). Four starters also return to an offensive line that averages 270 pounds. The only hole that must be filled is the running back slot. Last season's leading rusher, Jay Hillman, must be replaced.

The Terriers' top three tacklers return, including linebackers Andrew Brennan and Kevin Dowd. Sack leader Mike Pedone is one of four returning linemen on the Terriers' five man front. Three starters return to the secondary which ranked second in the conference in pass defense.

If BU is able to find a capable running back, it should have no problem improving upon last year's 4-7 record.

Rhode Island (6-5, 3-5)

The Rams are very inexperienced on offense. Sophomore quarterback Tony Squitieri started the final three games last season and went 2-1. He has his leading receiver back in tight end Darren Rizzi, who hauled in 53 passes for 782 yards. Wideout Chris Pierce, who averaged 23.9 yards per catch, gives the Rams a deep threat. The offensive line lost four starters, as only Pat Hughes returns. Dario Highsmith, a talented tailback, suffered an off-season injury and is out for the season. URI must rely on an inexperienced Rich Rouser to fill this void.

Defensively, seven starters return, including the entire secondary. The front is a little inexperienced but is complemented by a veteran linebacking corps led by Dave Slattery.

Rhode Island must develop continuity along its offensive line and find a way to stop the run. The Rams finished 3-5 last year in the conference and should be on target for that again this season.

Connecticut (3-8, 2-6)

Fourteen starters return for UConn, but unfortunately for Head Coach Tom Jackson, NFL Draftees Cornelius Benton and Mark Didio are not among them.

Benton threw for 2,701 yards while Didio caught 88 passes for 1,354 yards and eight touchdowns, garnering All-American status. But flanker Alex Davis, who hauled in 72 receptions for 909 yards, returns, as does the starting backfield.

Three members of the front four return, including Paul Duckworth, who registered nine sacks last season. Jim Reppi, the team leader in tackles a year ago, heads the linebackers. All four members of the secondary are back, including safety Mark Chapman. Chapman picked off six passes last season.

If UConn can replace Benton and Didio, the Huskies should better their 2-6 conference mark from last season.

Maine (3-8, 2-6)

The Black Bears look solid offensively, with the quarterback, wide receivers, tight end, and the right side of the line returning. Sophomore field general Emilio Colon showed promise as a freshman. But all-time leading rusher Carl Smith, who accounted for 88 percent of the team's rushing yardage last season, is gone.

Maine is thin up front on defense, as only end Corey Parker returns. He registered 11 sacks last season to lead the team. Jemal Murph is back at linebacker, where he recorded 91 tackles and four sacks. The secondary is experienced and should improve upon its last-place conference ranking in pass defense.

Head Coach Kirk Ferentz must find a way to put more pressure on the quarterback. The Black Bears were eighth in the conference in total offense last season, but should greatly improve upon that this year. If not, it will be another long, cold season for Maine.

Massachusetts (4-7, 3-5)

The Minutemen will be hard pressed to replace Jerome Bledsoe, the nation's second leading rusher at 140.5 yards per game. But this is just one of the many tasks for first-year Head Coach Mike Hodges.

Junior Tom Fasano will be the new quarterback. Fullback Mike George and junior John Johnson, the 1990 Yankee Conference rookie of the year, will handle the rushing chores. Eric Thomas could be Fasano's main target at wide receiver.

Defensively, only three starters return. Linebacker Mario Perry returns after missing a year due to injuries. Perry was a first-team all-conference selection in 1990. Donald Caparotti is the only returning member of the secondary.

UMass has several question marks. Perry must regain form and Johnson must reach his potential if the Minutemen are to have a respectable season. Call this season a learning experience for Hodges and his youthful squad, as UMass will contend for the cellar.

Richmond (2-9, 2-6)

Coach Jim Marshall hopes quarterback Greg Lilly can help change the Spiders' recent misfortune. Richmond has won only four games in its past three seasons.

Lilly, a junior, threw for 1,950 yards last season. His top receivers both return along with tailback Uly Scott. Also, three starters are back along the offensive line.

Defensively, All-American linebacker Eric Johnson returns. Johnson led the conference in tackles for the second straight year. Also returning at linebacker is Jeff Edmiston, who was fifth in the conference in tackles.

Richmond finished last in the conference in both total offense and defense. If Lilly and Johnson do not get much-needed support from their teammates, Richmond will once again be in the Yankee Conference cellar.

The ever-important kicking and punting chores will once again be handled by William Hoffman. The junior will look to improve on his 6 of 15 field goals made.

As for the schedule, 'Nova plays seven of 11 games at home including its Yankee rival Delaware Oct. 17. The three non-conference opponents include Division II West Chester and Patriot League foes Bucknell and Fordham. There are no Division I-A schools on the schedule that possibly would boost support and likely upgrade the status of Villanova football in many people's minds. According to Talley that is just not realistic.

"We tried that [playing a Division I-A opponent] against Wake Forest [in 1988] and it screwed us up the rest of the year with injuries," said Talley. "Why not play teams at our own level at Division I-AA and be good at that?"

But despite a No. 3 ranking in Division I-AA, the team will realize that a season of blowouts like last year is not likely as evidenced by the 26-6 hard-fought opening victory over Division II West Chester.

"Teams are going to play us a lot harder this year," said Talley. "We can harp on it [staying motivated] all we want, but we won't find out until we actually play."

With a talented, hard-working, proven core of players and coaches, and a schedule conducive to an unbeaten season, the 1992 Wildcats are legitimate national title contenders. The only possible flaw is lack of fan support, something very frustrating to the players and, especially, Talley.

"This is the most talented team ever developed here and we need the support. It is so frustrating to not hear anything from our crowd because the stands aren't filled. I think it's about time football is made more a part of the social calendar for students," said Talley.

Last Season:
Villanova 40, Bucknell 0

OUTLOOK: Coming off a lackluster victory over West Chester Sept. 4, the Cats will look to get their offense back in sync against a Bucknell team that went 1-9 last year.

Patriot League foe Bucknell returns nine starters on offense. The Bison will likely try to establish the running game with Matt Smith, who gained 120 yards last week in Bucknell's 41-24 win over Bloomsburg.

As for 'Nova, the main priority for the offense is to pass the ball to tight end Scott Donald, who was shutout by West Chester. Look for running back Kevin Mosley and fullback Jeff Johnson to have big games against the Bison defense.

Defensively, the Cats have a great chance to repeat the shutout of a year ago when Bucknell rarely moved the ball into Cat territory. The key will be to pressure quarterback Travis Kopp and force turnovers, something the defense could not do against West Chester.

This is the second of a three-game stretch of home games for 'Nova and the last warmup before Yankee Conference action begins next weekend versus Richmond. The Cats should rid themselves of the opening game jitters and pounce on a weak Bucknell team to move to 2-0.

Football debuts with win over WCU

By ANDY FITZPATRICK
Sports Editor

It is not often that you see a football team not satisfied with a 26-6 victory. Unless, of course, that team is the 1992 Wildcats, a squad accustomed not only to winning, but winning decisively. And a 20-point victory over a Division II school certainly leaves the No. 3-ranked Cats with a bad taste in their mouths going into tomorrow's home game against Bucknell.

"We were rough around the edges," said Head Coach Andy Talley. "With four turnovers, you usually get beat. But that's what this game is for — to get ready for the Yankee Conference."

"We struggled on offense. Our passing game is not where we want it. But give West Chester credit, they played hard right to the last minute and really gave us a tough time with their sprint-out offense."

Credit not only the West Chester coaching staff with its offensive schemes, but sophomore quarterback Dave MacDonald, who was constantly on the run avoiding would-be 'Nova tacklers and throwing for 183 yards. The Cat defense never really was able to stifle the Ram passing attack completely, although it did allow WC only 75 yards on the ground.

As for the offense, both running back Kevin Mosley (17 carries, 110 yards) and fullback Jeff Johnson (19 carries, 85 yards) wore down the spirited Ram defense in the second half to secure the victory. Both picked up the slack for an inconsistent passing game that never quite got on track.

We can harp on it [staying motivated] all we want, but we won't find out until we actually play.
Head Coach Andy Talley

Quarterback Tom Colombo was 12 of 20 for 155 yards with one TD and two interceptions but struggled overall, especially on a couple of deep throws. It also hurt the Cat offense that tight end Scott Donald was held without a reception, although flanker Harold Hart was very impressive with 101 yards receiving on seven catches.

The good sign through all of this was that when the offense needed to score, it got the job done. Trailing 6-0 after a West Chester 13-yard TD return on a Johnson fumble, the offense reeled off 17 second-quarter points on one-yard runs by Mosley and Colombo that were sandwiched between a safety and a 27-yard field goal by William Hoffman to establish enough of a cushion for the defense, which did not give up a point.

Led by Yankee Conference Defensive Player of the Week Curtis Eller, the defense overcame the loss of linebacker Andy Cobaugh by blitzing more and pressuring the Rams. Eller, hobbled throughout the game with a hyperextended knee, recorded two sacks and made eight tackles on the night.

Next up for 'Nova is the 1-0 Bucknell Bison, 41-24 winners over Bloomsburg. The Cats humiliated them last year 40-0 on their home field. According to Talley it won't be that easy again this year.

"This is a scary game," said Talley. "We were surprised how easily we beat them last year and they were surprised at how badly they were beaten. So we're preparing for a tough game."

NOTES: This was the first football game played on the brand new $1.25 million astroturf, installed over the summer. Both the track and field were resurfaced with the Astroturf-8 playing field ... Talley was very pleased with the 10,213 fans who were at the game, saying that it was a tough sell considering the Labor Day weekend and it was rewarding ...

Volleyball off to fast start as Dispenza leads way

By JUSTIN KESTNER
Assistant Sports Editor

After posting a school-best 31-10 mark and unleashing a school-record 20-match winning streak last season, the women's volleyball team is poised to contend for the Big East Championship.

Ron Twomey replaces David Barkley as the new head coach of the Wildcats. The former Appalachian State assistant will have a talented, veteran squad at his disposal. Five starters from last year's Big East runner-up return.

Setter Vicky Dispenza and outside hitter Pam Clifford, both seniors, were first team All-Big East selections last season. Dispenza finished second in the conference in assists (10.6) and fourth in digs (3.56) per game. She is the all-time assist leader in Villanova history. Clifford was fourth in the conference in kills at 3.4 per game. Her versatility helped the Cats achieve its record mark.

Becky Kulbago, a junior mid-hitter, has emerged as a force at the net. She was fifth in the Big East in kills (3.2) and also one of the team's top blockers. Sophomore Mara Austrins is another key player at outside hitter. She was fourth in the league in serving, smashing an average of .43 aces per game. Austrins also was fifth in digs per game (3.49).

Although they exceeded many people's expectations last season, the Cats were somewhat disappointed with their fourth-place finish in the Big East Tournament. This year, 'Nova was picked fifth in the Big East coaches' preseason poll. But with only one freshman, setter Cari Clawson, the Cats have the experience necessary to go deep into the conference championships.

The Cats will face stiff competition from defending champion Pittsburgh, a pick to repeat in the coaches' poll. Tournament runner-up Syracuse should again be tough. The Orangewomen are second in the poll, followed by Providence, Georgetown, and 'Nova.

'Nova has started its season on a winning note, downing Rutgers 15-9, 15-9, 15-1 Sept. 5 at the Jake Nevin Fieldhouse. Dispenza led the way with 31 assists and seven digs. Kulbago registered 10 kills and also contributed 10 digs, both team highs. Austrins had eight kills and served three aces. Tracy Treahy and Amy Burke also played well, scoring seven and six kills, respectively. Maria Perparos tied Kulbago for the team-high in digs with 10.

The Cats hope to build early momentum this weekend when they play in the San Diego Tournament. 'Nova will play Northwestern and Baylor today and then San Francisco and host San Diego Saturday. The team's next home game is Sept. 16 against LaSalle at 7:30 p.m. in the Fieldhouse.

Hopes are high as Cats eye I-AA Crown

By ANDY FITZPATRICK
Sports Editor

The last time Villanova lost a football game was Nov. 30, 1991, against eventual NCAA Division I-AA champion Youngstown State, 17-16. And if everything follows as planned, the same will be said next year at this time.

For the 1992 Wildcats, a national championship is not just a dream, but an attainable goal. Led by 17 returning starters, the defending Yankee Conference champions are poised for more than just a repeat in their conference and an unbeaten regular season.

"We have the potential to be as good as last year," said Head Coach Andy Talley. "Offensively, we can both throw and run fairly well. More emphasis will be on throwing the ball as we want to continue to stay wide open on offense."

Senior quarterback Tom Colombo returns after throwing for 2,679 yards last year and taking over second place in Villanova's career-best passing list with 3,807. His favorite target, senior tight end Scott Donald, also returns along with wideouts Pat Friend and Straughn Lumpkin and deep threat Harold Hart.

Junior tailback Kevin Mosley will hope to make fans forget the loss of graduate Pat Kennedy, who scored 15 touchdowns and averaged 6.1 yards per carry. Mosley, an Ardmore native, won the job over Vern Smith, who has since left school for personal and family reasons. Reliable senior Jeff Johnson is back at fullback.

The underrated offensive line should again be the backbone of the offense with first team All-Yankee returnees Randy Crane, Bill Lacey and Tim Tarpey leading the way in the trenches.

On defense, the strength of the team according to Talley, nine starters return from the nation's No. 1 ranked scoring defense. Leading the unit is four-year starter Curtis Eller at inside linebacker. The Yankee Conference Defensive Player of the Year and all-American is playing through nagging injuries, but should be near full strength. He will have to be due to the loss of sophomore outside linebacker Andy Cobaugh, who will miss at least the first six weeks due to a left knee sprain.

I think it's about time football is made more a part of the social calendar for students.
Head Coach Andy Talley

The loss of Cobaugh means we will have to blitz more with linebackers and the secondary," said Talley. "We are thin at linebacker right now."

The secondary corps is led by experienced, hard-hitting strong safety Barry Alvis and senior cornerback Orin Solomon. Senior defensive lineman Tim Matas and Chris Grychowski along with senior starting linebacker Dan Summers provide the Cats with a proven, veteran-laden defensive

Dobbin announces new appointees

By KATE SZUMANSKI
Assistant News Editor

University President the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., announced four appointments and changes in title for the 1992-1993 academic year.

The purpose of this realignment is to sharpen lines of communication within the University, to minimize University bureaucracy in an effort to provide better service for all members of the Villanova community, to streamline University management, to promote quality management and to reduce the number of offices reporting to the President, said Dobbin.

The desired effect of this restructuring is to enable the president to increase his personal contact with the University's internal and external constituencies, while simultaneously maintaining close supervision of operations within the University, according to an article in The Spires.

Dr. Helen K. Lafferty has been appointed University vice president, a title and position new to the University, recently approved by the Board of Trustees.

The primary responsibility of the University vice president is to "coordinate the internal operations of the president's office and to oversee programs and functions reporting directly to the president's office," said Lafferty.

Other duties include coordinating the day-to-day operational decisions of the president's office, providing guidance to the Office of Planning and Institutional Research and helping coordinate the strategic and long-range planning efforts of the University.

Lafferty's additional responsibilities include providing guidance to the Office of Multicultural Affairs, representing the president's office in matters that cross function vice-presidential areas and serving as a member of the President's Executive Management Committee.

The University vice president is an unusual position, Dobbin said, designed to complement the University with the hopes of reducing the "Villanova shuffle" students sometimes encounter when visiting University offices.

"Staying in touch with the students and faculty is a primary focus of this position," said Lafferty. "I have found my responsibilities very challenging and will do my best to advance the University.

"It has been a very exciting first few months and the overwhelming response I have received from the Villanova community has been wonderful."

Campus security measures increased for '92-'93 year

By ELIZABETH BARSZCZEWSKI
Assistant New Editor

The Villanova department of Public Safety has taken some new steps as well as increased some existing safety measures to ensure greater safety for students this year. Among these are the installation of emergency call boxes around campus, the publication of campus crime statistics and the ongoing distribution of key chains bearing personal identification numbers.

One of the most notable additions to the University campus is the emergency call boxes. "These call boxes were installed to enhance the security and safety of the students," said Norman Wallace, assistant director of Residence Hall Security.

The department of Public Safety has already received several non-emergency calls this year, Wallace said. These calls included requests from people to have their car batteries jumped, he said. It is important to note that the call boxes are for emergency use only, Wallace stressed.

The call boxes, which are both solar and cellular powered, are easy to operate, Wallace said. Each call box consists of a telephone receiver with an armored cable to prevent vandalism and a red button, said Wallace. In an emergency, a person needing assistance must open the door of the call box and push the red button, he said. By pushing the red button, a signal is sent to a computer in St. Clare house and public safety officers are able to respond to the emergency, Wallace added.

The department of Public Safety responds to all signals it receives from the emergency call box system, even if there is no one on the other end talking into the headset, Wallace said. "We respond to all calls because the person on the other end may not be able to speak," he added.

Although there are instructions for their usage inside the call box, public safety is in the process of publishing a pamphlet that will be available to all students outlining the instructions for the operations of the call boxes, Wallace said.

Public Safety is also continuing its practice of making campus crime statistics available to the public, Wallace said. The publication of such statistics has been going on since 1989, said Wallace.

"The University is required by Pennsylvania state law to make campus crime statistics available to the public by request and we have been in compliance with that law," Wallace said. All students receive a pamphlet which lists how many times a specific crime has occurred, said Wallace. A more detailed set of statistics is given to all University faculty and staff and is available to anyone by request, he added.

Specially coded key chains are still being distributed by the department of Public Safety, Wallace said. These key chains, bear a personal I.D. number for each students, help public safety return stolen property to its rightful owner. The computer database which keeps all the student information and I.D. numbers on file has also been updated, said Wallace. "We are returning a lot more stolen property as a result of it," he added.

Parents' Weekend to mark Sesquicentennial opening

By JENNIFER CASTELLI
News Editor

The University's 150th anniversary celebration will officially commence during Parents' Weekend Sept. 18-20, said Lucyna J. Gorski, director of Student Activities. The Opening Weekend features three days of activities and entertainment for parents, students, alumni and other visitors, said Gorski.

Parents were invited to attend classes with students today "to witness the dynamics of teaching and learning ... for an academic 'open house,' " according to the Opening Weekend schedule of events.

All guests are also encouraged to visit the Sesquicentennial Registration Center in the North Lounge of Dougherty Hall until 6 p.m. today to check in. All visitors will receive an information packet and pick up any tickets that they ordered at the Registration Center.

Visitors to the campus will get a chance to get acquainted with the University throughout the weekend, said Gorski. Guests interested in learning more about the separate colleges within the University can attend presentations given by deans and their staffs Sept. 19. Also, guests can take campus tours by horse-drawn carriages or trolleys as guides "recount historical facts and fiction about 150 years of life on the Villanova campus," according to the schedule of events.

The celebration will officially commence on South Campus with a parade Sept. 19 at 11 a.m. The parade will feature 15 decades of music, fashion and transportation led by Master of Ceremonies Dave Roberts from WPVI (Channel 6) in Philadelphia. The Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., University president, will deliver a welcoming address.

A luncheon will be held after the pageant under tents on Mendel Field.

Throughout the day, visitors can tour historical exhibits, cultural events and the University Shop. There will also be a performance by Philadelphia Mummers string bands. Schedule of times and locations of events are all available at the registration and information centers.

In the afternoon, guests may attend a Villanova football game as the Wildcats meet the Richmond Spiders in the Villanova Stadium. During the game, visitors will be treated to an extended halftime show, according to the schedule of events.

Concluding the day, a dance will be held Sept. 19 at 9 p.m. under tents on Mendel Field. Tours of the Mendel Hall Observatory and ground level telescopes will also be available at the "Dance Under the Stars," said Gorski.

Strolling musicians will provide background music for two brunches to be held on Mendel Field Sept. 20.

West Coast recruits increase

By LARISA EPATKO
News Editor

The University employs a recruiter based in Southern California to increase the number of students attending Villanova from the California, Washington and Oregon area.

Joe Runge, western region admissions representative, graduated from Villanova in 1987. He visits over 100 private and public high schools and represents the ideals and philosophies of the Augustinian university.

Runge focuses on the community-centered aspect of Villanova. The 12-1 ratio of students to faculty members appeals to California students. Their local colleges have some classes with about 500 to 600 students, said Runge, adding that the smaller class sizes mean more individual attention.

Another attraction to the University is its high rate of students graduating after four years. California college students often take five or six years to graduate because of their large numbers, Runge said.

The students Runge talks to usually identify Villanova with its athletics — mostly track, basketball and now football — and its leading academic reputation, he said.

"The students that come to Villanova from California have a

Iran reportedly sent military support to the Muslim-dominated government of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Croatian officials intercepted a planeload of Iranian arms and personnel in Zagreb, the Croatian capital, Sept. 4. This occurrence is the first documented evidence of military support by Iran.

The Bosnian government has lost most of its territory mainly to the Serbian forces due to the heavy Balkan fighting going on there. According to American intelligence reports, Bosnian Serbians have 300 tanks, while Bosnian Muslims have two. Therefore, the smuggling of arms is important for the Muslims.

The Serbian fighting is due to a supposed defense against Islamic expansionism.

Moscow

Russian President Boris T. Yeltsin cancelled a trip to Japan, four days prior to the trip. The visit , to have begun Sept. 4, was an attempt to settle a bitter territorial dispute between Moscow and Tokyo existing since World War II.

The land causing the Moscow-Tokyo claim conflict is a group of sparsely populated islands in the Kurile chain north of Japan. The islands were taken by the Soviet Union in the closing days of World War II.

Yeltsin plans to reschedule his visit to Japan for December.

Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton, in an effort to make efficient welfare cuts, proposed a $6-billion-a-year program to sponsor job training and education for recipients of public aid.

Clinton plans to quadruple to $4 billion the amount that the government spends on job training for welfare recipients and add $2 billion in tax credits for the working poor.

Clinton's attempt to lessen welfare spending is a response to George Bush being the president during the highest rate of people on welfare — 4.8 million families, or 13.6 million people.

During his speeches in the suburbs of Pennsylvania and New Jersey, President George Bush, vowed that there would be no new tax increases. During his campaign for the 1988 term, Bush pledged "no new taxes." If elected to a second term, Bush promises he will not agree with Congress to improve the economy by another tax increase, like the one of 1990.

Bush claims that the economic troubles the United States is facing is due to a Congress that will not instill his economic programs. Bush also said that the recession is not just an American problem, but a global one as well.

Alumni astronaut brings 'Nova items back from space

University Press Release

Astronaut Andy Allen, a '77 Villanova alumnus, arrived on campus Sept. 15 in Connelly Center Cinema to return three items that accompanied him on his August mission aboard the Space Shuttle Atlantis.

At the special presentation, the Marine major and Bucks County native will give back a plaque to the College of Engineering, where he majored in mechanical engineering; a colorful flag from Villanova's Navy ROTC unit, to salute its former midshipman's inaugural flight as the pilot of the shuttle; and a Villanova pennant, witnessed worldwide via satellite in the cabin of the shuttle during maneuvers.

The pennant will be housed in a yearlong exhibit, called "Villanova College to University: 150 Years of Augustinian Tradition and Promise — 1842-1992," for Villanova's 150th anniversary which begins today.

Accepting the items were the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., University president; Robert Lynch, dean of the College of Engineering; and Capt. Sandy Stoddard, head of the Navy ROTC unit.

Afterward, Allen offered a slide and film presentation about his eight-day mission for the campus community and College of Engineering.

He visited the Navy ROTC unit in Barry Hall, and returned to Connelly Center to show a film and field questions about his space experience.

On his mission from July 31 to Aug. 8, the astronaut was part of a seven-member international crew that orbited Earth 126 times 230 miles high. They successfully deployed the European Space Agency's $400 million Eureca research satellite. They also tried to ferry another satellite on a 12-mile tether, but this maneuver was snagged by a bolt.

The astronaut will return to Villanova Sept. 19 to take part in an opening pageant from 11 a.m. to noon on the South Campus to officially kick off the Sesquicentennial year.

Wild Solarcat II won first place in the annual Tour de Sol with increased solar power and reduced weight.

Team Solarcat successful in summer racing season

By TIFFANY CHRISTENSEN
Staff Reporter

Team Solarcat, Villanova's organization of engineers and other students who design and build solar vehicles, is entering its fourth racing season after a series of successful summer events. In May, the team's Wild Solarcat II placed first in the transcontinental race of the annual Tour de Sol, defeating the Virginia Institute of Technology and Drexel University.

About 40 cars from different east coast schools competed in the five-day race from Albany to Boston.

The Wild Solarcat II was recently a main attraction on display at the Pocono Raceways Sports Car Grand Prix, where the car reached an all-time maximum velocity of 63 miles per hour.

Team Solarcat spent last year making several improvements on the Wild Solarcat II in preparation for these events. The amount of solar power available for use was increased, and the car's weight was reduced to 585 pounds.

"All the time and effort put into the project finaly paid off," said Louis Orotelli, senior mechanical engineering major and team leader.

Team Solarcat is now focusing its attention on new goals, specifically those of building more efficient Wild Solarcat III, and competing in the 1993 World Solar Challenge, a race across Australia in which schools and companies from all over the world participate.

The team is also hoping to gain more members this year, and stresses that they are appealing not only to engineers but to students from various other disciplines.

"We want the team to really be part of Villanova," says Terrence McMahon, a senior Liberal Arts major in charge of fundraising for Team Solarcat.

The Wild Solarcat II will be on display in the Sesquicentennial parade during Parents' Weekend. Also, anyone who would like to be a part of Team Solarcat is invited to stop by their office in Tolentine 28.

Stadium undergoes resurfacing

By LAUREN WURST
Staff Reporter

The stadium track and field resurfacing project that began in May and lasted until September has been completed, said James H. DeLorenzo, director of Villanova Sports Information.

The $1.25 million renovation project was funded by a donation program that began last year. "We started a donation program and athletic signage program to provide a special account for athletic needs. We will continue to raise funds for other programs in the future," said Ted Aceto, director of Athletics, in the summer edition of the Spires.

The new surfaces on the Leo Goodreau Field and the Jumbo Elliot Track will "benefit the entire Villanova community," said DeLorenzo. The multipurpose facility will be host to graduation ceremonies, Sesquicentennial events and sporting events.

It has been 12 years since the initial resurfacing of the field, said DeLorenzo. New technological advances give the new surface, Balsam Product's Astroturf 8, added safety and longevity.

"The surface is a lot softer. You don't get as many bumps and bruises, so after the game you're not as sore," said Villanova running back Kevin Mosley.

The Elliot track, now composed of Balsam's Redortan S, is getting the track team "more motivated and excited for the upcoming season," said Cheri Goddard, member of the women's track team.

Belle Air Yearbook honored

By JOSEPH SOLE
Staff Reporter

The University's 1991 issue of the Belle Air yearbook received two awards from two national press organizations, continuing its distinguished reputation as a noted yearbook. Last fall, the Belle Air was featured in a showcase of outstanding yearbooks throughout the region called the "Northeast Class of '91 Yearbooks."

The awards were given to the top yearbooks throughout the nation.

One of the awards received was the Pacemaker, chosen by the Associated Collegiate Press (ACP). This particular citation was given to the eight best yearbooks in the country.

The second citation was also on a national level. The Columbia Scholastic Press Organization chose the Belle Air as a recipient of its Medalist rating. This honor was bestowed upon the yearbook as a result of a nation-wide competition. This competition included yearbooks from some of the most famous universities across the country.

The award that was given to the Belle Air last fall in the regional showcase was given to the top 12 university yearbooks. These 12 yearbooks were chosen from a selection of 2,000 university yearbooks from the East Coast and Midwest regions.

Dr. Joseph Kinney, English department

The person credited with overseeing the production of the University's yearbook is Dr. Joseph Kinney. Kinney is a professor of English at Villanova and a member of Villanova's Class of 1959. Kinney will travel to Chicago this October to accept the ACP's Pacemaker award at a ceremony during the ACP Convention.

In April of 1990, Kinney was chosen as yearbook adviser by the Student Activities Office. Patricia Cogan, editor-in-chief of 1991's award-winning yearbook, said she appreciated "the freedom to manage as editor in my own style."

Students are already at work on the 1992 yearbook. This issue, the 70th volume to be printed in Villanova's history, will be available for all students and alumni of the University in April.

Sesquicentennial Minutes

By Dr. David R. Contosta and Rev. Dennis J. Gallagher, O.S.A., Ph.D.

On the morning of Oct. 13, 1841, two Augustinian priests, Rev. Patrick E. Moriarty, O.S.A., and Rev. Thomas Kyle, O.S.A., set out from St. Augustine's Church in Philadelphia for Belle-Air, the country estate of the late John Rudolph, located some 10 miles west of the city. Their mission was to purchase the property as a setting for an Augustinian college and monastery.

The Belle-Air estate had been acquired in 1806 by John Rudolph (1760-1838), a wealthy Catholic merchant from Philadelphia. In the fall of 1841, the property included an attractive two-and-one-half story house (built about 1806), a barn, several outbuildings and just over 197 acres of land, with orchards, woods and fields.

The two priests offered $18,000 for the entire estate. It was accepted by Mrs. Rudolph, who may have sold it to the Augustinians for less than its market value as a gesture of religious devotion. Sometime later the Augustinian community purchased all the furniture and farming utensils for an additional $3,400. Title to the property was formally conveyed to the Augustinians on Jan. 5, 1842, later designated as the founding date of Villanova College and University.

Rev. John P. O'Dwyer was made superior of the Augustinian community which gathered on the old Rudolph property. At the same time he became president of the Augustinian college, to be opened shortly on the grounds. On St. Augustine's Day, Aug. 28, 1843, O'Dwyer said mass in the Belle-Air parlor and placed the new monastery and college under the patronage of St. Thomas of Villanova, a 16th century Spanish archbishop. Belle-Air had now become Villanova.

The first classes opened at Villanova College on Monday, Sept. 18, 1843, with just seven students in attendance. Shortly thereafter three more arrived. The students, faculty and college president all lived in the old Belle-Air mansion, the students in the attics, the priests and teachers on the second floor and the brothers above the kitchen.

The parlors served as classrooms, the kitchen as a study hall and the basement as a refectory (or dining room). Little is known about the curriculum, but it seems to have been rooted in the Greek and Latin classes, mathematics and philosophy — typical for colleges of the day.

Villanova's first prospectus, published in the Catholic Herald in the spring of 1844, assured parents that the college was located in "highly cultivated and salubrious country." It indicated that students could easily reach Villanova on the Philadelphia and Columbia Railroad (later absorbed by the Pennsylvania Railroad and still later by Conrail/SEPTA). The prospectus might have said, but did not, that the Lancaster Turnpike passed through the north side of the property.

As a point of clarification, it announced that only Catholics would be admitted, but this rule soon disappeared, and by the 1850s a few Protestant boys were attending the college. Tuition for students over 12 was $125 a year; for students under 12 it was $100.

Newspaper bans ROTC ads

By College Press Service

The five-member editorial staff of the University of Central Arkansas' student newspaper voted not to publish armed forces recruitment advertisements because of the military's ban on gays and lesbians.

Editor Kim Green said the staff writers and editors earlier this summer took a stand that ROTC units at the campus should be banned because of the gay rights issue. "We felt strongly enough editorially, so we decided we shouldn't have their ads," she said. The staff voted 4-1 to halt advertising.

The Echo publishes 14 times a semester, and local recruiting offices usually bought a quarter-page ad, which costs between $1,000 to $1,500 per semester. The ads ran in every issue if there was advertising space.

Campus reaction has been muted so far. The first edition of the paper on Sept. 2 carried the announcement of the ban, but word leaked out about the move.

Green said she has received some letters "telling us to go to hell, others praising our courage and one arguing we were discriminating," she said. "Maybe we are, but it's a political statement."

A spokesman for the Army Recruiting Command said that while the ban will have some effect on recruiting efforts, officials will find other ways to reach students.

Defense Department policy states that, "The presence in the military environment of persons who engage in homosexual conduct or who, by their statements, demonstrate a propensity to engage in homosexual conduct, seriously impairs the accomplishment of the military mission."

Green said it is the denial of civil rights that forced the issue at the newspaper. "We don't want a debate on the gay issue. It's about denying basic rights," she said. "We don't take 'no' for an answer."

Veterans' program closes at Citadel

By College Press Service

The Citadel closed its day-school program for male veterans rather than admit women veterans who have sued to gain access to day classes at the state-run military institution.

Three female veterans sued the Charleston, S.C., school in June to be allowed to attend the same day classes that male veterans attended along with The Citadel's 2,000 cadets.

The male veterans do not have to live in the school's barracks or dress in uniform, as do the cadets, and the women wanted the same access.

Lt. Gen. Claudius E. Watts III, president of The Citadel, defended the closure of the day-school program by saying that if the women had won the case, the survival of the school would have been in question.

"We believe it necessary to assure that our young men may continue to experience The Citadel system of education, which is both unique and a valuable contributor to a diversified educational system," Watts said. "Failure to act would pave a path toward the educational erosion of the school and all that it represents."

Officials said that if women were allowed into the day program, it could "cause The Citadel to lose its exemption under Title IX of the Federal Education Act. That would seriously undermine our core mission." Losing such funds would threaten "the very survival of The Citadel," the statement said.

But the action angered and dismayed male veterans who want to attend the day classes.

"The [male] veterans were irate," said Robert Black, a Charleston, S.C., attorney who is local counsel for the three women. "This is good ol' misogyny. I think what we have here is taxpayers paying for a boys' school."

The 78 male veterans enrolled in the day program will be transferred to The Citadel's evening program and summer school, and will be able to take classes at other colleges in the Charleston area, school officials said.

Thirty male veterans are in the engineering program, and will be transferred to the evening school, which is co-educational.

Black, who is working with the American Civil Liberties Union and law firms in New York and Denver, said The Citadel made a decision "not in the defense of education. They think women will pollute them and destroy the corps."

"They have always wanted to keep women out and treat them like second-class citizens," Black said. "But this could backfire big time, now that they've done this to the male veterans."

Black said he and other lawyers were studying their legal response to The Citadel's actions. "We were not surprised, but we were disappointed," he said.

In a press statement, The Citadel said, "Officials believe that its policies are constitutional, and that the court action being undertaken is clearly defensible."

The only other all-male state-supported military college in the country is Virginia Military Institute in Lexington, Va.

Democrats, Republicans plan strategy for election

By College Press Service

This year's presidential election promises to be a slugfest, not only between the presidential candidates, but between college students who support the Democratic or Republican candidates.

Consider what Bill Spadea, national youth director for the Bush-Quayle campaign, thinks of the opposition: "Kids hate the Democrats. They are not in touch with family values and mainstream America."

Responds Erin Mullan, project director for Vote for a Change, a coalition of Democratic youth groups: "We'll be everywhere. The Republicans have no facts behind them to support their beliefs."

The tone of this year's presidential election, analysts say, is ugly: attack, counterattack and attack again. And the analogy of battle trickles down to the college level, especially among the College Republican National Committee and the College Democrats of America and their ancillary organizations.

"This is a fundamental battle, actually a war, of ideas for the soul of the country," Spadea said.

The opening salvo was fired at the Republican Convention in Houston in late August. When Democratic national chairman Ron Brown and other party members tried to hold a news conference in a restaurant, about 100 young Republicans banged on the windows and waved signs that read, "Family Rights Forever. Gay Rights Never" and "Inhale This!" The New York Times reported.

While the incident may have been spontaneous, it received the blessing of Jeanie Austin, a co-chairwoman of the Republican National Committee, the paper reported. "There was going to be a big press conference by the other side, and the young people heard about it, so they went over and became, let us say, part of it," she said. "That was good."

"We did not plan the protest. But I have no problems with it," Spadea said. "It was not officially sanctioned, but it will happen again. Republicans are going to play hardball."

However, Tony Zagotta, chairman of the College Republicans, said that Republican youth held no demonstrations that he knew of and that the Republican Youth Coalition was created for the convention and no longer exists. Spadea said that the coalition does exist and works closely with the College Republicans on several projects.

College Democrats, said Adam Kriesel, director of the organization's voter registration drive, do not plan to use such tactics.

"We don't disrupt anything. We have more important things to do," he said from the College Democrat's Washington headquarters.

The College Democrats, with approximately 400 chapters nationwide and 40,000 members, plan three events this fall. One is an ongoing movement to register students on campuses. The other two are sanctioned through Vote For a Change, which is a coalition of Democratic organizations.

On Sept. 18, Vote For a Change will hold National Voter Registration Day on about 1,000 college campuses. The vice presidential candidate, U.S. Sen. Al Gore of Tennessee, will speak on the University of Maryland campus. Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton, the presidential candidate, will also speak, but it has not been determined at which campus, Mullan said.

On Oct. 16, the Democrats will hold National Student Day, which will draw the press and students together to discuss election issues and try to educate people about the election.

Spadea said College Republicans and the Republican Youth Coalition, working together, will create a grassroots effort. He said there are about 110,000 College Republicans on 1,100 campuses. "With those numbers there is no limit with what you can do," he said. "We will use the army to hit the streets."

The Republicans are also organizing local media "hits" with leadership conferences this fall. The media will be invited to the conferences in which students will be told about the election process and issues in the campaign.

alumni affairs. This title stresses the importance the University places on the role of its 70,000 alumni, according to an article in The Spires.

Capone has supported a strong alumni networking system and the Alumni Association has grown by nearly 20,000 members under his direction since 1979.

The Rev. George F. Riley, O.S.A., has been appointed to the position of special assistant to the president for alumni and external relations. This position involves developing and maintaining a strong communication network between the University, its alumni and other constituencies.

John M. Elizandro has been named vice president for institutional advancement. This position involves "the coordination of alumni, public relations, and development concerns in an effort to more efficiently present University programs," said Elizandro, adding that this is especially important as the University plans to broaden its Outreach program.

Until June 1980 the surface was comprised of grass and cinders. The field was then changed to astroturf. This surface proved to be beneficial to all who used it, said DeLorenzo. With added safety and durability, the new facility seems to be one from which the entire community will benefit, he added.

Florida University urges parents not to buy guns

By College Press Service

John Katon says he is providing a necessary product for University of Florida students by soliciting parents to purchase stun weapons for their children at the Gainesville campus.

University officials, sensitive to the fact that six University of Florida students and one Santa Fe Community College student have been murdered in the past two years, are incensed, saying Katon is feeding off of unnecessary fears to make a buck.

Katon, owner of Tamiami Rifle and Gun Shops in Miami, sent letters to the parents of University of Florida freshmen and sophomores in June, urging them to buy a $99.95 Stumbrella, a 60,000-volt stun gun that is disguised as an umbrella. He got the addresses from the university, which under state and federal law must provide a directory of students to anyone who asks.

"I'm jumping up and down. What an awful thing to do. So hang me up by my thumb nails," an exasperated Katon said. "It was all meant for security, to save lives and prevent crime. Face it. Eight kids were killed at the University of Florida. Can we all rest in peace in the world? No."

Seven students have been killed around the campus in the past two years, including five who were killed in a murder spree in August 1990 and two female students killed in their apartment in June 1991. The two women lived in the same apartment complex where University of Florida junior Tiffany Sessions was living when she disappeared in 1989. She has still not been found.

Art Sandeen, the University of Florida's vice president of student affairs, said that by law any institution, public or private, must release the names of students listed in a directory to any requesting organization or person. Local businesses such as apartment complexes and banks and student organizations request such lists most of the time.

"We've never had any problems," he said. "Until now."

Stun guns are not outlawed on the sprawling north Florida campus, but a student must be at least 21 and register the weapon with the university, Sandeen said. Guns and rifles are prohibited on the campus.

"We felt it was a manner of poor taste, given the strong emotions on the University of Florida campus," Sandeen said.

Katon said he wants to prevent any more students from being attacked or killed, and is not preying on parents' or students' fears. "It has a lot to do with precaution. The University of Florida gives out condoms as a precaution against girls getting pregnant and stopping the spread of AIDS," Katon said. "What is a girl going to do? Throw a condom at an assailant? Men will buy guns. Most women won't. They want something non-lethal."

He said he has received "hundreds" of orders from his mailout.

"We think it's a pretty low move, but there's not much we can do about it," said Joe Kays, a spokesman for the University of Florida. "Here's a guy who decided to take advantage of a bad situation."

Higher education hit by budget costs

By College Press Service

After a 63-day stalemate, California lawmakers passed a budget that cut hundreds of millions of dollars from higher education, prompting college officials to consider new measures to keep their schools solvent.

Students enrolled in three higher education systems in California will likely be affected by the new $57.4 billion state budget, signed into law in early September.

Officials at the nine-campus University of California (UC) system were particularly outspoken about the budget's potential impact on students. With a $1.9 billion budget, the UC system will receive $224 million less than last year, or an 11 percent cut. Officials were expecting a 7 percent to 10 percent reduction in funding.

"This makes it much more severe and puts everything back on the table," said UC spokesman Rick Melaspina. He said the UC system may consider increasing student fees, administrative cuts, faculty cuts and limits on enrollment for next year. Earlier this year, the UC system raised student fees by 24 percent in anticipation of the state budget cuts.

California State University (CSU) officials were no more optimistic. Their 20 campuses will split up $1.5 billion, 8.8 percent less than last year.

"It could mean more layoffs and class cancellations in the spring," said CSU spokeswoman Colleen Bentley-Adler.

In August, CSU Chancellor Barry Munitz directed $15 million to reinstate about 1,000 laid-off teachers and 3,500 classes that had been slashed from the fall schedule. Munitz had been hoping for only a 6.5 percent budget cut.

The CSU system will still have to drop more than 1,500 fall classes and impose some faculty cuts, despite a 40 percent fee increase this year. So far, the budget cuts have not forced the UC system to impose faculty layoffs or class reductions, the latter of which UC officials consider the most sacred.

Officials at both UC and CSU systems said any new cost-saving measures would depend upon several factors, including fall enrollment figures and the number of employees who decide to take early retirement.

Students at California's 107 community colleges, meanwhile, will have to cope with an increase in fees from $6 to $10 per unit hour. That number will rise to $50 per unit hour for 124,000 community college students who have already earned degrees.

more global perspective about their education" and do not mind the infrequent visits home, said Runge. Sometimes they are intimidated by the cold weather of the east coast, but they see the opportunity of coming to Villanova, he added.

Since beginning this position in September 1991, Runge has created a "significant increase" in numbers of students applying and attending the University, according to the Rev. William McGuire, O.S.A., dean of Enrollment Management.

The number of students who applied from the California, Washington and Oregon region increased from 107 in the fall of 1991 to this fall's 136. Twenty-four students now attend Villanova, topping last year's 19.

The recruitment program for the California area was established to take advantage of the increasing numbers of high school graduates in that area, said McGuire.

"Public demographic studies show a tremendous number of high school graduates in California over the next six to eight years," McGuire said. In the northeast, studies forecast a decrease in high school graduates over the next eight years, he added.

Alumni involvement in the areas of San Francisco, Los Angeles, Orange County and San Diego have increased the admission program's impact, said Runge.

The first year was experimental, Runge said, adding that the program has the potential to have the numbers of students going to the University compounded over the subsequent years.

News briefs from around the country

Rolling's Trial Date Set

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — Danny Rolling, who is charged with murdering five college students, will go on trial Sept. 1, 1993, a judge ruled.

Four University of Florida students and one Santa Fe Community College student were found slain in campus-area apartments in August 1990.

Rolling, who is serving five life terms for robbery and burglary convictions, is charged with five counts of first-degree murder, three counts of sexual battery and three counts of armed burglary.

Southern Illinois Heats Up

CARBONDALE, Ill. — Air conditioning has returned to 10 Southern Illinois University buildings that had been without cool air since a July 24 failure in one of the school's air conditioning refrigeration machines.

"We were burning up over here," said College of Liberal Arts Dean John Jackson. "We're hermetically sealed, so when it would be 85 outside, it would be 90 in here."

Two parts cannibalized from a borrowed compressor fixed the situation, and the air conditioning came back on Aug. 24, the day classes started. "I'm so grateful," Jackson said. "Life's a little more bearable."

Researchers Seek First U.S. Colony

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — University of Florida archaeologists say they have found evidence that the first European settlement in the U.S. was most likely in southeastern Georgia.

Archaeologist Rebecca Saunders and a team of researchers, including David Hurst Thomas of the American Museum of Natural History, believe they have located the Spanish colony of San Miguel de Guadalupe, which was founded in 1526 and abandoned in less than 30 days.

Researchers have speculated for years that the Spanish could have settled anywhere along the Georgia or South Carolina low country along the Atlantic coast, but recently Sapelo Sound, Ga., has been considered a likely spot.

St. Augustine, Fla., has been regarded as the first Spanish settlement in the United States.

Low Enrollment Forces Closing

PHILADELPHIA — The oldest independent school of technology in the United States, faced with financial problems and declining enrollment, will not open this fall, college officials announced.

The trustees of Spring Garden College said they decided to cancel classes "after extensive but unsuccessful efforts to resecure the long-term viability of the institu4ion."

Officials report that the college only had 250 full-time and 275 part-time students enrolled for the coming fall term. In 1981, the college had 797 full-time students and 548 part-time students.

The college, which offered degreees in computer technologies, architecture and interior design among others, was founded in 1851 and is a Philadelphia landmark.

Officials say the school has a debt of more than $10 million, and an operating budget of $5.5 million.

Plagiarism persists at all academic levels

By College Press Service

A marginal student, at the end of the term, turns in a major paper that is academically perfect — brilliant thoughts, wonderful analogies and insightful analysis.

Unfortunately, the words are not his.

The student has taken paragraphs verbatim out of a research book and included them in his paper without citing the author. In real terms, this student is a thief — he is stealing someone else's work and passing it off as his own.

Plagiarism, which comes from the Latin, meaning kidnapper or literary thief, brings up a plethora of knotty problems for students and academicians.

If a professor suspects a student of plagiarism, how should the case be handled? Do students get enough background on plagiarism to understand what it is? With rapid advances in the ability to make copies and printouts of print and electronic media, how does modern technology fit into the scheme of defining plagiarism and its consequences?

These questions tend to muddy an already gray area.

Plagiarism has existed as long as people have written, and despite widespread knowledge that it is a form of academic cheating, it still is practiced.

"If students do not understand the importance of doing their own work and being honest intellectually, they will fail to understand that when they get into the work world," said Elizabeth Baer, dean of faculty at Gustavus Adolphus College in Minnesota. "It is necessary for colleges to get students to understand the gravity of it. We need to help them [students] to understand that it is not acceptable."

Plagiarism occurs at all levels of college, from the freshmen year to doctoral work. Some cases that have received extensive publicity, according to The Chronicle of Higher Education and other sources, including:

- The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., the slain civil rights leader who plagiarized much of his doctoral dissertation. King received his doctorate in 1955 from Boston University. A panel investigated the finding, made public by Stanford University researchers at the Martin Luther King Jr. Papers Project, and upheld the plagiarism charge in 1991.
- H. Joachim Maitre, the dean of Boston University's College of Communications, resigned in 1991 after he used several passages of an article in a commencement speech without citing the author.
- U.S. Sen. Joe Biden (D-Del.) admitted in 1987 that he plagiarized part of a law school paper in 1965. He copied five pages from a law review in a 15-page paper without citing the source while at Syracuse University Law School. While running as a Democratic presidential candidate in 1987, he also used quotations in speeches from former British Labor Party leader Neil Kinnock and the late Sen. Robert F. Kennedy without giving them credit.

These are well-known cases that received much attention in the nation's media. But plagiarism also exists on a much quieter and anonymous level, from the student who copies verbatim out of research books and passes it on as his or her own work in freshman composition to doctoral candidates who secretly use the services of research companies.

"I see it as a very critical problem. It seems to me that the incidence of plagiarism has increased in the past 10 years," said Kevin Brien, a professor of philosophy at Washington College in Chestertown, Md. "I see it as something that is eroding academic institutions. Unless we work collectively to turn it around, we will continue to have problems."

We control our country's future

While the Villanova community prepares for a birthday celebration and its own future, a future of much greater importance remains to be decided — our country's.

The 1992 race between Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton and President George Bush is less than two months away. Considering the nation's recent downward spiral, this election may have a greater impact on our future than any other in which we will be eligible to participate. More than ever, we need a president who can secure the future of our generation. And it is up to you to vote for that person.

For three days this past week, Student Government and Residence Life sponsored voter registration outside of Connelly Center. They deserve praise for this service. Over 1,000 people registered and there was a constant flow of students signing-up. But there are numerous students who have not registered and do not plan to vote. Do not let that be you.

Whether Republican or Democrat, conservative or liberal, we all have something in common with everyone. We are Americans. And it is our duty and privilege as citizens to listen to the candidates, become knowledgeable of the issues and select our leader.

If you do not express your hopes for the future by voting, you will lose.

Think about your family values

Parents Weekend 1992. A 150th birthday celebration. Could there be a better time to talk about tradition and family values?

Most of us have been blessed with strong, financially-secure families. It is a fact we often take for granted. Let us take a moment this weekend to thank our parents for their love and support. (This means calling home if they were not able to come.)

Of course, it is also a good time to remember those who are not as fortunate. Many times, after we gather on campus for another semester, the rest of the world is forgotten. Villanova somehow becomes removed from the rest of the world.

The issue of family is as important to the future of this country as economics. However, the Republican rhetoric on this issue seems as far removed from the real world as Villanova sometimes becomes. The things we take for granted — loving parents, money in the bank and a comfortable home — are not as accessible to the rest of the world as the Republicans would like us to believe.

Villanova prides itself on its community. But, think for a moment of people who look or dress differently. How well are they included? (Be honest.)

In this election year, and on this weekend, let us take these issues seriously. Let us think of new ways to share our family backgrounds and values with each other, beyond rhetoric.

What's most important at V.U.?

To the Editor:

What is the main purpose of Villanova University? Why does it exist? In other words, why are we, students, faculty, staff and administrators all here?

With that in mind, allow me to recount two events that were reported on the front page of the Villanovan April 3, 1992.

The headline for the lead story read "Massimino Goes West." There were two front-page articles about Massimino; one on his 19 years as head coach of the men's basketball team and the other about his decision to take the head coaching job at the University of Nevada-Las Vegas.

On the bottom half of the front page there was an article entitled "DSA pro-choice flyers removed from campus." On March 18 the Villanova Democratic Socialists of America (DSA) had posted flyers throughout campus to organize student participation in the March For Women's Lives. That same afternoon the DSA was instructed by the Rev. John Stack, O.S.A., dean of Students, to take down the advertisements until the administration had a chance to decide if the posters were allowable.

The editorial section had two headlines: "Massimino deserves our respect" and "DSA controversy raises questions." The letters section included a letter from the student leaders of the DSA stating their position and the On Campus section asked five students this question: "Should the University allow pro-choice flyers to be displayed on campus? Why or why not?" The president of the University, Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., issued a statement concerning the University's position and it was printed next to the letter from the DSA.

The following week the editorial section was dominated by letters from both students and alumni about the resignation of Rollie Massimino. In total, four students and three alumni wrote in concerning Massimino. One student, the outgoing Student Government president, and three professors wrote in concerning the DSA.

Think back to last spring. Did you know anyone who was indifferent about the departure of Massimino? Did you know anyone who did not have an opinion about him leaving? Did you know anyone who had not heard of Rollie Massimino? I certainly did not.

Students cheered the announcement of his resignation. Other students wrote letters to the editor scolding those students who cheered. Many students were fiercely loyal to Massimino, many were not, some were more moderate, but everyone had something to say. Alumni did too: Thomas W. Perez, Class of 1988, wrote "I was embarrassed and almost ashamed to be associated with the school that means so much to me." Kimberly A. Hutman, Class of 1989, wrote "I was completely appalled and embarrassed …"

All of this was over a game.

Not one student, not one alumni wrote in expressing concern about the possible infringement on students' First Amendment right to freedom of speech.

I ask you again, why are we here? Are we here to win basketball games, or is there something else? As much as I enjoy basketball, I do not believe that is why we are here. I believe there is a higher purpose for Villanova University, and I believe that purpose includes freedom of speech.

Thanks for registering

To the Editor:

As one of the coordinators of the voter registration drive co-sponsored by Residence Life and Student Government, I would like to thank and recognize all those who gave their time and effort in helping to make this event an enormous success. Special thanks to Student Government President Ken Batchelor and Vice President Kathy Breen who really worked overtime in preparing for and working on this event.

A joint effort was made by the Resident Assistants and the student senate and cabinet members, who gave their time in manning the registration tables. During the three days in which the drive took place we successfully registered over 1,000 student and local resident voters living in Delaware. Chester and Montgomery counties. These registrations will be delivered directly to the county courthouses and will be processed within the week.

It is our hope that this event helped to raise political awareness in this important election year. Registering is the first, but not the only, step to participating in our country's democratic process. You have to take the time to familiarize yourself with both the candidates and the issues in order to make an educated decision. To follow up this registration drive, we will be providing a shuttle service on election-day both to and from the polling sites. So most importantly, remember to get out to the polls on Nov. 3 and exercise your right to vote.

Voting means knowing yourself

By TOM BENJAMIN

Decisions, decisions. All our lives we have been told how important it is to vote. Finally, we turn 18, an election year rolls around and the long-awaited moment arrives.

So, what's the big problem? Why is this decision so difficult?

A wake-up call should be coming to Villanova students this November. The "real world" is on the line, and it's not like the popular MTV program. We finally have a chance to say something about the future of our country, and we should be heard loud and clear. You know, "Rock the Vote."

Yeah right.

We are not so naive to think that we can remedy the ills of society with our one vote, but our academic trainig should provoke our consciences to take seriously our responsibility to vote. Of course, with this noble ideal established (and seldom practiced), we have to choose a candidate.

To do this, we must sift through the smokescreen of campaign strategy and decide who will most positively influence our community as well as our country. This is not a simple task.

Unfortunately, when the mysterious Ross Perot dropped out of the presidential equation most semi-intelligent debate of real issues ceased. Many Villanova students are dissatisfied because of this void.

We must sift through the smokescreen of campaign strategy and decide who will most positively influence our community as well as our country.

"Is Bill Clinton's suspect love life or draft record, although quality soap opera material, the most important thing the media should harp on?" asked Mike Sullivan, a senior political science major. "The most important issues are the stagnant economy and the ongoing recession. As a future college graduate, it is tough not to focus on the immediate future of our economy."

Too much emphasis is placed on the image of the candidate, and topics like the budget deficit and health care reform are forgotten, said Christina Olson, a senior economics and English major.

The pseudo-issues now being discussed are indeed suspect. The Republicans' notion of "family values" seems like an attempt to say all will be well as long as we can maintain a strong, although undefined, family unit. Do they honestly think this is a final solution to our nation's social problems, or is this just a rhetorical dance to be safely re-elected?

On the other hand the Democrats, who hold a small lead in the polls, are treading water. For fear of offending potential supporters, they are not willing to suggest real solutions to our problems. Instead, they chant only an empty mantra of change.

Both parties are tailoring their campaigns to make nice sound bites on the 11 o'clock news. Again, what do we do? How can we reach a decision?

These problems have stood before society in the past and Villanova community — people possessing the power to make a difference, holding the power to vote.

Of course, it's not an easy task because you must look within yourself to find the answer.

If you don't like this solution then that's tough and welcome to the REAL WORLD!

Student says, "Give me dumpster, or give me death!"

By PETE SHAUGER

In April 1992, after a gloomy and unsuccessful week of searching for affordable places to live for the upcoming year, my roommate and I decided to become trend-setters in the world of budget housing.

Our first idea was to rent a hotel room. We figured even the cheapest $18-a-night hotel room couldn't be much worse than the shoeboxes of Sullivan and Corr Halls. The hotel would supply two beds, a television and air-conditioning. Electricity and utilities would be included in the cost, as well as maid service and complimentary mints on our pillows for late night snacks. If we went away, we would not have to pay rent, and if we got kicked out, we could just find another place.

Then the thought of a mobile-home cruised through my mind. I'm sure with the money saved from not living on campus we could easily afford a good used mobile-home. Some of the benefits available here that were unavailable with the hotel room are the stove, the dinner table/fold-away bed, the shower/fold-away toilet, and the eight-track tape deck (we were looking at some of the older models). The only problem with the mobile-home, which my roommate Chad brought to my attention, is that if we bought one, everyone in Radnor Township would go out and get one out of jealousy, making ours just another mobile-home. A tragic ending to an idea of such noble birth.

A much less conspicuous and cheaper form of housing, as Chad suggested, would be his car. For a mere $75 a year we could rent a parking space in the main parking lot. Even better, we could rent a few spaces, rope them off, and create our own back yard with barbeques and badminton and everything. If we decided that we were a little smelly and needed showers we could always run over to Sullivan Hall for a quick rinse. If we had any trouble sleeping, we could always turn up the carbon monoxide, and if we had any trouble waking up, we could have Campus Security drive by and give us a ticket (that always wakes me up).

Ideas for budget housing include a car, a tree-house and, of course, a dumpster.

The most inexpensive form of housing I could imagine would be a dumpster, preferably the ones set up in the quad the last few days of school. Villanova students throw out some of the best junk. Couches, clothing, biology notebooks, half-open beer cans and week-old pizza … once you get over the smell of it all, I don't see how anyone could resist this bachelor's paradise. Sure we might get looks from the girls over at Sheehan, but as with the mobile-home, they would be looks of pure jealousy.

Of course, these were just the possibilities which we spent time on to plan every last detail. There were plenty of half-baked ideas which still deserve notice, in case any of my readers find themselves in a similar housing dilemma. For instance, we could have pretended to be sick every night around 11 p.m., go to the infirmary, and leave the next morning proclaiming a miracle cure. However, since I am already suspicious of what really goes on in that gothic building, I wouldn't spend an unconscious minute in there, let alone a year. The steaming roof of Falvey Library would be ideal during those cold winter months, and also a prime sun bathing location in the Spring. I could even build a tree house and collect money from all the tourists who come to Villanova's arboretum to see something occurring so rarely in nature (a tree?).

As it turned out, my grades were so good that I was rewarded with the honor of living at home with my parents and none of these plans were able to be put into effect. However, with a loving mother tucking me in every night, there is no reason that I can't pull my grades up and get the heck out of there and move into a dumpster. Every mother's dream.

Bush can successfully lead America into the future

By MIKE MARANO

As the 1992 presidential election nears, many students are questioning the qualifications of the two candidates. Many are still undecided on whom they are going to vote for, or even whether or not they are going to vote at all. The question of choices arises as well. Are either of the candidates capable of solving our domestic woes and restoring America's industry? It is my belief that only one of the candidates is strong and capable enough to carry out the plans to get America back on track.

As college students, what must we look for in a president? Should our president raise taxes to create more government spending, or cut taxes to give the middle class breathing room? Should our President be in favor of "abortion on demand" or be in favor of stricter abortion laws, such as the Pennsylvania law? Should our president want to waste more money in the stagnated welfare, health care and medicare systems, or be willing to cut welfare and reform the health and medicare systems? Depending on how you answer these questions, your choice may or may not be clear.

Do we, as college students, want our president to destroy American jobs by isolating every piece of woodland in which a Spotted Owl resides, or restore American jobs by resurrecting the lumber industry and other natural resource industries? Do we want our president to increase the amount of AIDS research from the millions our government already spends, or are we satisfied with the current funding? Should our president be a fan of pumping more money into our failing system, or should he want to reform and investigate why our present system is failing?

For me, these six questions have helped me formulate a decision. I want a president who makes strong decisions and is recognized and respected in the world community, someone who has proposals already devised for issues such as health care, welfare reform and education. A man who is capable of restoring our economy by cutting taxes, in turn creating revenue and jobs for the American people. We need to "get the ball rolling again." I believe only one of the candidates can perform along those lines.

We need to restore America's culture and drop the name tags that promote racism. We need to strengthen the American family and emphasize the importance of God. We need a man whom America can reunite behind and walk with through the next four years, hand-in-hand, to solve America's many crises. America is the superpower of the world, admired by many; now we must admire our own great nation.

I love this great nation of ours. Let's protect the Judeo-Christian morals and values that it was built upon. Together we as young Americans can set the standards for the 21st century. We are the answer, and the world is waiting to see where we, as young Americans and future world leaders, want to take our world. We must tell them that we are prepared to accept the beacon of leadership. So I ask you, fellow college Americans, is it "morning again in America" or is it time for a "new covenant?" I believe I see the sun rising over the water; it is a bright new day for us. Morning is a time for rebirth; a rebirth through George Bush.

Let's focus on family, but not like the Republicans

By ELLEN GOODMAN

Is there some way to close off this endless, surreal exchange between fact and fiction, real life and sitcom, Dan Quayle and Murphy Brown? It's become as wearisome as witnessing a couple fighting for the last word.

First it was Dan taking Murphy to task for the malfeasance of unwed motherhood. Next it was Mufphy waving an Emmy and a finger at Dan for picking on single mothers.

> Americans do not wake up in the middle of the night worrying about whether an unwed television mother is corrupting the country's morals.

Then last week, Dan tried to turn this heavy stuff into a Lite controversy by doing a promo for Murphy reruns at an L.A. TV station. "So what's your favorite TV show?" asked the station manager as the tape rolled. "Murphy Brown — Not," said the vice president.

And next week, the show's season opener will have Murphy watching Dan attack her on a TV set inside our TV set. She will answer back.

This is turning into a series of its own.

It is bad enough that George Bush is running against Hillary Clinton without having Dan Quayle run against Murphy Brown. The only one who can keep a grip on reality here is Candice Bergen. But then she had some experience in fantasy, growing up with a ventriloquist father who treated a wooden dummy as if he were her brother.

Mind you, I am not one of those people who regard the "family values" debate as some vast distraction from the "real issues" of 1992. My dictionary defines issue as "a major topic of discussion." Family may be the major topic of discussion in any gathering less formal than a focus group.

But the Dan-Murphy dialogue about family form distracts us from the dialogue about family functions. It is the functioning of families, or maybe the dysfunctioning of families, that worries Americans today. There is an uneasy and looming concern that we are shortchanging the people we love.

Like most people, I have spent decades worrying about this as both a working mother and working daughter. I know that parents with growing children are supposed to monitor what is on their children's television and in their schools, to check for lead paint and the seven signs of drug abuse, to have family dinners, oversee homework, know their friends. I know that adult children with aging parents are supposed to serve as their buffer with the world, their ombudsman with the system, and sometimes their caretaker. I know how often we don't live up to our own expectations.

Like most Americans I believe that families should take care of their own. But these days we often have to chose between being with our children or housing them. We have to chose between taking care of our elderly parents or preparing for our own old age.

Americans do not wake up in the middle of the night worrying about whether an unwed television mother is corrupting the country's morals. We wake up worrying about money and love, work and family. The balancing act.

The Dan-Murphy debate about family forms, morality and motherhood, is a diversion. It turns attention away from what can be done to mute these conflicts. It focuses on private not public choices. On what government can't do rather than what it can do.

Consider what happened this past week. While Dan said "NOT" to Murphy, the Bush administration prepared to say no — again — to the Family and Medical Leave Act, passed by the Congress Thursday.

This bill asks much, much too little. It would give full-time workers twelve weeks leave to care for a newborn, or for a seriously ill child, husband, parent. The leave would be unpaid and it would only apply to companies with 50 or more workers. But it is a classic example of the way government can begin to ease family life.

If the president can convince Americans that such a modest bill is too risky because it endangers jobs, then we will have truly sacrificed family to the marketplace. If we go through this season, avoiding a debate on family policies and prolonging a shouting match on family shapes, we will have nothing to lighten our load except bitter judgment of each other.

So much then for the Dan and Murphy show. Life imitates art imitates life imitates art. Anyway you look at it, in this too-long running family sitcom, the comedy is wearing thin.

Economics key to decision

By JUSTIN WELLER

As often occurs in a political campaign, the presidential race has become a contest of whining, crying, name-calling and crowd-pleasing. This means that the candidate employing the best spin-doctor is sure to win. Similarly, it forces the voting body to choose between two evils, hopefully choosing the lesser one.

So far the winner has been Bill Clinton, who leads in the latest polls by anywhere from to 5 to 15 percent. Clinton has accomplished this by getting out the message (much better than George Bush) that he is the agent of change. Well let's face it, neither of these guys is an agent of change, no matter what they say.

I think a reason for our present recession is one that many people do not think about. It has been a rule in history that after a sustained war the participating countries experience a brief recession directly following the war. Countries must retool their economies from that of a wartime economy back to peacetime economy (resources must be redistributed, workers rehired or retrained and, to give an example, companies must adjust back to making toasters instead of rifles).

As we all know, since the end of World War II, America has existed in a state of limited-war, known as the Cold War. What we do not realize is that our economy has been greatly affected by this state of readiness, if you will. Our economy has existed in a quasi-wartime economy, with defense contracts, research and development, enlisted persons and other related jobs making up a large portion of the workforce. Now the Cold War has "ended" by all accounts and thus the economy is forced to retool as it always has at the end of a war.

Another major reason for the present recession is the 1990 budget deal. This, in effect, was the largest tax increase in history and was in addition another unbalanced budget. The economy was just beginning to show signs of faltering at this time, and the deal ensured the economy's fall. It was the worst time to increase taxes and was a bad time to continue to increase the national debt. Now, how did this happen? Well, as has become usual, the president proposed his budget and the Congress in return wrote their own budget. The two sides refused to budge and the president finally gave in, and signed, in effect, the Congress' budget package.

It was a time when George Bush needed to take leadership, exercise all the powers of the president, go to the American people and put pressure on the Congress to concede to the only nationally elected official in the land. But Bush is a consummate diplomat, and therefore chose to discuss and compromise rather than act on his own instinct. Thus he is perceived as a man without a mission or a vision, when he is really a great visionary who so far has not exercised the strength to enact his policies. His problem is not one of apathy, but one of poor leadership.

If you wish to vote for change, change the American institution which has not changed in 40 years — the House of Representatives. Otherwise, vote for the man whom you trust to be your President for the next four years.

Justin Weller is a freshman concerned with political issues.

Most college students believe they know everything about the AIDS virus. What is harder to realize is what AIDS is doing to their own lives. Just as AIDS attacks the body's immune system, it attacks our society and the Villanova community.

Villanova established an AIDS task force in the early 1980s, but due to a lack of interest, this committee slowly deteriorated. The necessity to address this crisis, forced the University to reorganize the Task Force last semester.

"The Task Force wants to ensure that every student fully understands the information provided to them concerning AIDS, as well as the consequences of their decisions," said Gary Bonas, chairperson of the 1992 Villanova AIDS Task Force. The AIDS Task Force was one of the first in the country to develop an original curriculum with which to educate students, which may seem surprising considering Villanova's conservative tradition.

The Task Force directs a committee of peer educators. After an application and interview process was completed, 18 student volunteers were chosen to undergo intensive training to prepare them to educate fellow Villanovans.

Presently, the peer educators are easily available as sources of information. They wear a yellow button at all times on campus, reading "Ask Me About AIDS," to distinguish themselves. The Task Force and the peer educators will work together, along with another soon-to-be-established committee, to coordinate Villanova's AIDS Awareness Week beginning Feb. 14, 1992.

This semester the Task Force made presentations to students during the 1992 New Student Orientation. During late October the Task Force will begin making presentations to various teams, clubs, organizations and residence halls. Arrangements have already been made to have Dr. Richard Keeling of the University of Virginia, an authority on the AIDS crisis and its relationship with college students, as a guest speaker.

Serving a Catholic university, the Task Force must be sure to present all information concerning preventative measures in a manner which does not contradict the Catholic teachings and values the University promotes.

One manner in which the AIDS virus may be contracted is through any type of sexual relation. Condoms, if used correctly, provide a prevention rate of nearly 80 percent. However, the Task Force, in cooperation with the trustees and the president of the University, wants to ensure that all students are aware that abstinence is the ultimate protection against AIDS, as well as standard policy in the Roman Catholic Church.

"Epidemologically speaking, condoms are effective. However, no form of birth control is tolerated by the Church," Bonas said.

In addition, the Villanova Circle of Care is another fairly new organization of students. Under the direction of Sr. Beth Hassel, P.V.B.M., Campus Ministry, the group voluntarily provides services to various programs that care for AIDS victims.

"Last semester we received a call inquiring about the availability of four to six students for a Cuddler Program, which is basically to provide affection for babies with HIV, not necessarily fully-developed AIDS. We placed an ad in the mass bulletin, and an overwhelming number of 175 students replied. At that point we began to seek other organizations which we could provide with our time. We do a considerable amount of work with St. Christopher's Children's Hospital in Philadelphia. However, our program is small because, due to lack of funding, programs for which we can provide service are unfortunately just too few in number," said Hassel.

Roles change for women at 'Nova

By GRETCHEN FISHER
Assistant Features Editor

We are well aware by now that this is a special year for Villanova, marking 150 years of continued progress and development since its founding in 1842.

An old adage goes something like "times change, but people remain the same." Villanova has certainly changed with the times, growing from a few buildings in 1842 accommodating a freshman class of seven, to a multi-faceted campus equipped to meet the needs of over 8,000 students.

The Villanova students of yesterday could easily have been much like students today, but for one major difference — until 1918 the student body was entirely male.

It was during that year, 76 years after the school was founded, that Saturday sessions were instituted for local teaching nuns and other school teachers who wished to take part-time courses in working toward their college degrees. Those involved in the Saturday program were Villanova's first female students.

In 1928, evening courses were introduced for those who could not attend classes during the day. This program, which is now known as University College, has been co-educational since its beginning.

The Department of Nursing Education developed into the School of Nursing in 1951, marking the first year women were admitted into day school. In 1955, the 10 women who had begun the program in 1951 became the first graduates of the program.

It was not until 1968 that women were admitted for the first time to all undergraduate programs.

Jaye Montresor, PhD., speaks out about women's changing roles at 'Nova.

Villanova continues to change in terms of women being more equally represented in the faculty.

Jaye Montresor was hired by the English Department in 1988, I think there were only four other women teaching full-time in a department of about 30," said Montresor.

'Nova plans campus nightclub

By JANE CIANCI

With the beginning of every new school year certain changes come to the school itself. Appearances change, the curriculum expands and the students advance yet another year in their educational career. Villanova University is certainly no exception with regard to this tradition. The 1992-93 school year heralds the Sesquicentennial celebration, a new basketball coach, the Wildcard and . . . a nightclub?

That is right. Villanova is currently awaiting Budget Committee approval for an on-campus, non-alcoholic nightclub to be located in the "Pie Shop" in Dougherty Hall, according to Director of Student Activities Lucyna Gorski.

A grand opening ceremony is tentatively slated for sometime in January, said Gorski. In addition, a contest may be held to select a name for the club.

The entertainment aspect of the club would include various programs.

During mealtimes the "Day Hop," the room adjoining the "Pie Shop," serves to relieve some of the overcrowding which occurs in Dougherty's main dining hall. For this reason, progress on the night-club's construction will construction will be highly visible to students usingthe dining room.

Those students who have not already heard about the club will be made aware of its impending arrival through an announcement, if and when its budget is approved, Gorski said.

As far as the operation and physical layout of the club are concerned, certain details have yet to be agreed upon. However, sketchy plans concerning the night club's workings have been established.

There will be food served until 2 a.m. in cooperation with the Department of Food Services. Students who would not mind working off-beat hours could be hired as servers, said Gorski. Though she added, in the past, student employees have been virtually impossible to find for

Diners vie for student business

By MONTA MONACO
and KAREN CAMPBELL
Features Editors

Diners are as American as apple pie. For 23 years Minella's Main Line Diner has been Villanova's choice for greasy burgers, ice cream sodas and late-night cravings. But now some competition has be-bopped its way onto the Main Line — the Villanova Diner.

Practically in the backyard of O'Dwyer Hall, the Villanova Diner brings cholesterol-filled delicacies within staggering distance of campus. Can this prime location draw students away from the Minella's tradition?

Minella's definitely wins on atmosphere. Complete with jukeboxes at every table, formica counters and polyester-clad waitresses, Minella's carries with it that certain je ne sais quoi of the '50s.

Minella's is a little more conservative with their menu selections, but who really goes to a diner for lobster?

The Villanova Diner is newer and classier (well, as classy as diners get). It almost appears as if the proprietors were trying to emulate Howard Johnson's, trying to make customers forget their establishment is a diner. Greenery, wood tables and carpeting — what were they thinking? If they are going to call the place a diner, it should look like a diner.

The Villanova Diner has a slightly more extensive and expensive menu. They compensate for this by providing a 10 percent discount to students with college identification.

The Villanova Diner offers an appealing array of appetizers, including a potato skin "bar" with about every imaginable topping. Also on the menu are a variety of Greek foods, Italian foods, deli sandwiches and, of course, hamburgers. For the occasional gourmet, the Villanova Diner offers such delicacies as stuffed grape leaves as well as lobster.

Students rate value of new dorm security boxes

By LIZ WEAVER
Staff Reporter

"Ready ... ready ... ready ... enter." These blinking red lights are becoming a familiar sight to many Villanova students. The University installed an extensive safety access system during the summer.

To some this "access control system" is a nuisance, to others it brings a sense of security, some it does not affect at all. The system cost the University approximately $200,000 to install in each dorm and in the new St. Augustine Center for the Liberal Arts. The University will also pay $11,000 each year to lease the necessary equipment from Griffin Technology, said Don Friedman, who is responsible for the Wildcard security system.

Most upperclassmen agree it will be a little harder to remember to carry their I.D. card with them at all times.

The system will be in full effect as of Tuesday, Sept. 15. With this new access control, the doors of the dorms remain locked day and night, as opposed to the former system, where they were locked after visitation hours. The feeling among some students is that it does make them feel safer, but there are ways around the system.

"All one has to do to gain access is wait for someone to let you in. Therefore you really don't feel much safer," said sophomore Alexis Baumann, who lives in Stanford.

For the freshmen, this system may be easier to get used to. However, most upperclassmen agree it will be a little harder to remember to carry their I.D. card with them at all times.

Not all freshmen think that the security system access is without its faults. "It is safer, but if you forget your card, it can definitely be a hassle," said freshman Emily Peterson.

She is not alone in her opinion. Some of the local food deliverers feel the same way. According to senior Sean Connor, a student who delivers for Campus Corner, the Access system "is a pain, especially if you're carrying a lot of food and you have to search in your wallet for your card."

Accompanying the issue of the safety access system is the policy of having only one main entrance and exit per dorm. Many students disagree with this policy.

For the larger dorms, it is often an annoyance to use only one door, students said, especially if there are other doors much more convenient for student use. The reason for this is the idea that, with only one access to the dorms, it will be easier to keep tabs on who is entering and leaving.

One aspect of the system that some residents of Stanford like is the phone on the outside of the dorm.

"The phone outside is great because if you have friends visiting, they can call up to let you know they're there," said sophomore Chris Esposito.

Villanova Committee for the Philadelphia Homeless
Organized and led by student chairpeople with a Campus Minister as coordinator, VCPH has four main programs:
THE STREET COMMITTEE - three times a week students take sandwiches into areas where the homeless live. A separate committee organizes groups of students who make the sandwiches.
THE SOUP KITCHEN COMMITTEE - A group of students serve meals to men, women and children in a Soup Kitchen.
THE HOMELESS EDUCATION COMMITTEE - publicity, fundraising and the publication of a newsletter twice a year helps to educate the campus community about the issues of homelessness.
HOUSING REHABILITATION - on weekends, groups of students do repair work, painting and odd jobs for the poor and the area shelters. The HABITAT FOR HUMANITY campus chapter is part of the rehab committee and works on a Norristown house on Saturday mornings.

We respect and put into action the hope of St. Augustine: "that they may all be one mind and one heart in God."

HUNGER AWARENESS WEEK

Social

Hunger Awareness Week
Coordinated by Campus Ministry and run by student chairpeople, the HAW program informs fellow Villanovans of the situation of world hunger and challenges them to respond. Activities such as the Run for Hunger, The Hunger Banquet and letter-writing campaigns to our legislators converge in a week of consciousness-raising.

Balloon Day
This spring counterpart to our fall Hunger Awareness Week has a two fold purpose: to benefit the hungry through a fund raising carnival, and to provide our community with a day where we can celebrate the beauty of nature and the gift of each other.

Liturgical Life

In all of these ministries, training is provided so that students are ready to serve the community with faith and skill.
LECTOR - Proclaim the Word of the Lord to the community.
HOSPITALITY - Welcome members of the community at the celebration.
EUCHARISTIC MINISTERS - Share the Bread and Cup with the community.
PASTORAL MUSICIANS - Come sing or play an instrument and lead the assembly in liturgical song.

Spirituality

Besides the accessibility for sacraments, spiritual direction and counseling, Campus Ministry provides:
- preparations for baptism and confirmation
- Pre-Cana Weekends for engaged couples
- day and weekend retreats
- prayer groups and Scripture study
- a week of renewal
- HEC (a service retreat with, and for, persons with physical disabilities)

Parents arrive for 150th

By MARYBETH GOELLER
Staff Reporter

If, over the course of this weekend, it seems that 1992 has rewound to the year 1842, do not be surprised. This is the year of Villanova's Sesquicentennial, and its opening ceremonies are to be held at the same time as the annual Parents Weekend. From Sept. 18-20, Villanova's campus will be taking several trips down memory lane, recounting historical facts and the different ways of life over the past 150 years.

Assistant Director of Student Life Gary Bonas discussed the upcoming events. "There will be opening ceremonies on South Campus followed by horse and buggy or trolley rides around the campus, giving tours to families."

Of course the main attraction of Parents Weekend is the football game. The Villanova Wildcats will play the Richmond Spiders tomorrow, in a possible sell-out stadium.

Football, like many other Villanova traditions, is an event that has been covered by the Villanovan ever since it began publication. The Wildcats were already making headlines in October of 1958, at the first Parents Weekend. Here is a flashback from the first Parents Day held on Villanova's campus, from the Oct. 15, 1958 issue of the Villanovan.

Football Game, Open House Features of Parents' Day

This Saturday is Parents Day, offering the parents of Villanova students a double attraction — open house on campus and the football game with Wake Forest.

The day is being sponsored jointly by the University Student Council and the Athletic Department.

In addition to the game Saturday afternoon, the activities for the day include open house on campus beginning at 10:30 a.m., and a concert by the University Band in front of Dougherty Hall at 11:30 a.m.

To be of service to those who may care to eat on campus, both the Dougherty Hall cafeteria and the C&F snack bar will be open.

The game half-time activities will include an address by the Rev. James A. Donnellon, O.S.A., president of the University, and an address by Robert Murphy, president of the Student Body.

Following the addresses of welcome, the Villanova Marching Band and the NROTC Drill Team will present a special half-time show honoring the parents.

Francis X. Reagan, athletic director and head football coach, hopes to have the fathers of the players wearing their sons' numbers seated on the field directly behind the coach.

Since this is the first Parents Day at Villanova, the scope of activities for future Parents Days will be determined by the success of this year's day.

Whether it took place in 1959 or 1992, the main goal of both past and present staff at Villanova, is to enable parents to become better acquainted with the school their children attend. For this year's schedule, over 1,000 families

Straight from the permanent residents of Dougherty 201 come the Top 10 events that should have been (but, sadly, were not) included in the Sesquicentennial Celebration/Parents Weekend festivities, to present a true picture of life at 'Nova.

10. Check-In/Registration with overzealous Public Safety officers at the Main Gate (with complimentary fingerprinting, frisking and interrogation).
9. Extensive Opening Ceremony/Orientation during which everyone learns how to "get down."
8. Keynote Address by Steve Lappas.
7. "Dance within duPont Pavilion," featuring Rob Base and Tommy Conwell, amid other local talent.
6. Pre-dawn, thunderous wake-up pageant through all area hotels, courtesy Nova's ROTC.
5. Sunday Brunch catered by Campus Corner, complete with Villanova's own deja vu delights.
4. Dedication of the new football turf.
3. Why have a football game? Parents and alumni can be a part of the real-life games with a traffic-dodging dash across Lancaster.
2. Re-enactment of the 1985 NCAA win, just for old-time's sake. (Let's pump those alumni a bit more.)

And the No. 1 event parents, alumni and students should be partaking in this weekend, but aren't, is:

1. Historic tours of the Main Line bars. (Paddywagons leave Bartley Circle at 2 p.m.)

Follow the path of women through Villanova's history

"One thing that disturbs me," said Montresor, "is the predominance of women majoring in English at the undergraduate level, as compared with the predominance of men teaching in almost every English department in the nation."

However, Montresor never felt her gender was a stumbling block in her department at Villanova and, in fact, was warmly welcomed by most of its members.

Another testament to Villanova's efforts to improve gender equality is the addition of Women's Studies as a choice of minors, previously available only as a concentration.

"I didn't study women writers as an undergraduate or graduate student, a situation which, I am embarrassed to admit, I didn't question at the time," Montresor said.

"It is very fulfilling to feel that I can contribute to a greater awareness among students of how women have enriched our cultural history, and it is especially gratifying to offer encouragement to young women who are interested in academic or writing careers," said Montresor.

should be participating in at least one of the entertaining activities. The "alfresco luncheon on Saturday will be the most highly attended event — 1,200 families in all," said Bonas.

For the nightlife-oriented families, "Dancing Under the Stars" will be held under a tent on Mendel Field with a live orchestra and hors d'oeuvres. "This year Parents Weekend sounds really exciting — especially the dance on Saturday night. I think it will definitely be a success," said sophomore Jennifer Solano.

Looking back over the years at Villanova, family values have always been an important part of its history. Parents Weekend was established to strengthen the bond between families while their relatives are at school. Time does not change the bond between families. In another 150 years, Villanova will probably still be having Parents Weekends that are just as special as those of the past.

Minella's is a little more conservative with their menu selections, but who really goes to a diner for lobster? And they have the ever-famous Main Line Rocket Burger, which comes with fries AND onion rings, quite a humorous selection after coming from Smoke's or Kelly's.

Minella's is currently open 24 hours while Villanova Diner is presently open only until 2 a.m. However, they do have plans to remain open all night as soon as they can find servers for late-night shifts.

Service was fine in both, but the waitresses in Minella's are known to become a little sluggish and hostile at about 5 a.m., adding to the early-morning ambiance of your experience there.

All in all, the Villanova Diner seems to be more family-oriented, an appropriate place to have a little breakfast with the parents this weekend. Minella's still rules as the grease pit of the Main Line, with character and long-standing tradition making up for its lack of elegance.

such jobs. The alternative would be to hire outside, part-time employees.

The entertainment aspect of the club would include various programs. There would be a jukebox on certain nights with a dance floor. Other nights there might be comedians. The Student Programming Council and the Student Activities office have yet to coordinate a specific schedule.

The club will have ample seating capacity as well. There will be tables and chairs in the center of the room with benches surrounding the walls. One enclosed portion will be elevated three or four steps to provide better visibility for live bands or comedians.

The club's atmosphere is intended to provide a comfortable place where students can go at night to be with their friends and enjoy another positive aspect of Villanova campus life.

But more importantly, many agree, in making plans for the creation of a nightclub, the University has taken the first step toward responsibility for adding new dimensions to Villanova night-life.

Mr. College speaks out, Reveals Brady truths

By ANTHONY RUBINO JR.
College Press Service

Q. Dear Mr. College: What happened to Mike's first wife and Carol's first husband? — Baffled

A. Dear Baffled: Good question. Mike shot and killed his first wife in a domestic dispute. He claimed it was self-defense, and was never charged with any crime. Carol, on the other hand, was never even married. In fact, Marsha, Jan and Cindy each have a different biological father.

Q. Dear Mr. College: In the episode where Peter breaks Mom's favorite vase, do you feel that Peter should have received all the blame? Shouldn't Bobby and Greg share the responsibility? — Tormented

A. Dear Tormented: This may come as a bit of a shock, but I DO NOT believe that ANY of the Brady boys were responsible. After studying the angle and trajectory of the basketball I have developed what I call the "Second Ball" theory. I maintain that Cindy broke the vase with a softball thrown from the shag carpet area of the living room, or, "the shaggy knoll." Peter was nothing but . . . well . . . a patsy.

Q. Dear Mr. College: Who's your favorite Brady? — Curious

A. Dear Curious: Oh no you don't! I DO have a favorite Brady, but as one of the country's foremost Bradyists I feel it would be irresponsible of me to answer that. Sorry.

Q. Dear Mr. College: Who would win in a fight; Greg Brady, or Keith Partridge? — Often Wondered

A. Dear Often: No contest. Though they never actually fought, I have simulated this match on computer many times. There's no question that Greg could kick Keith's a__ Even if Danny got Reuben to help.

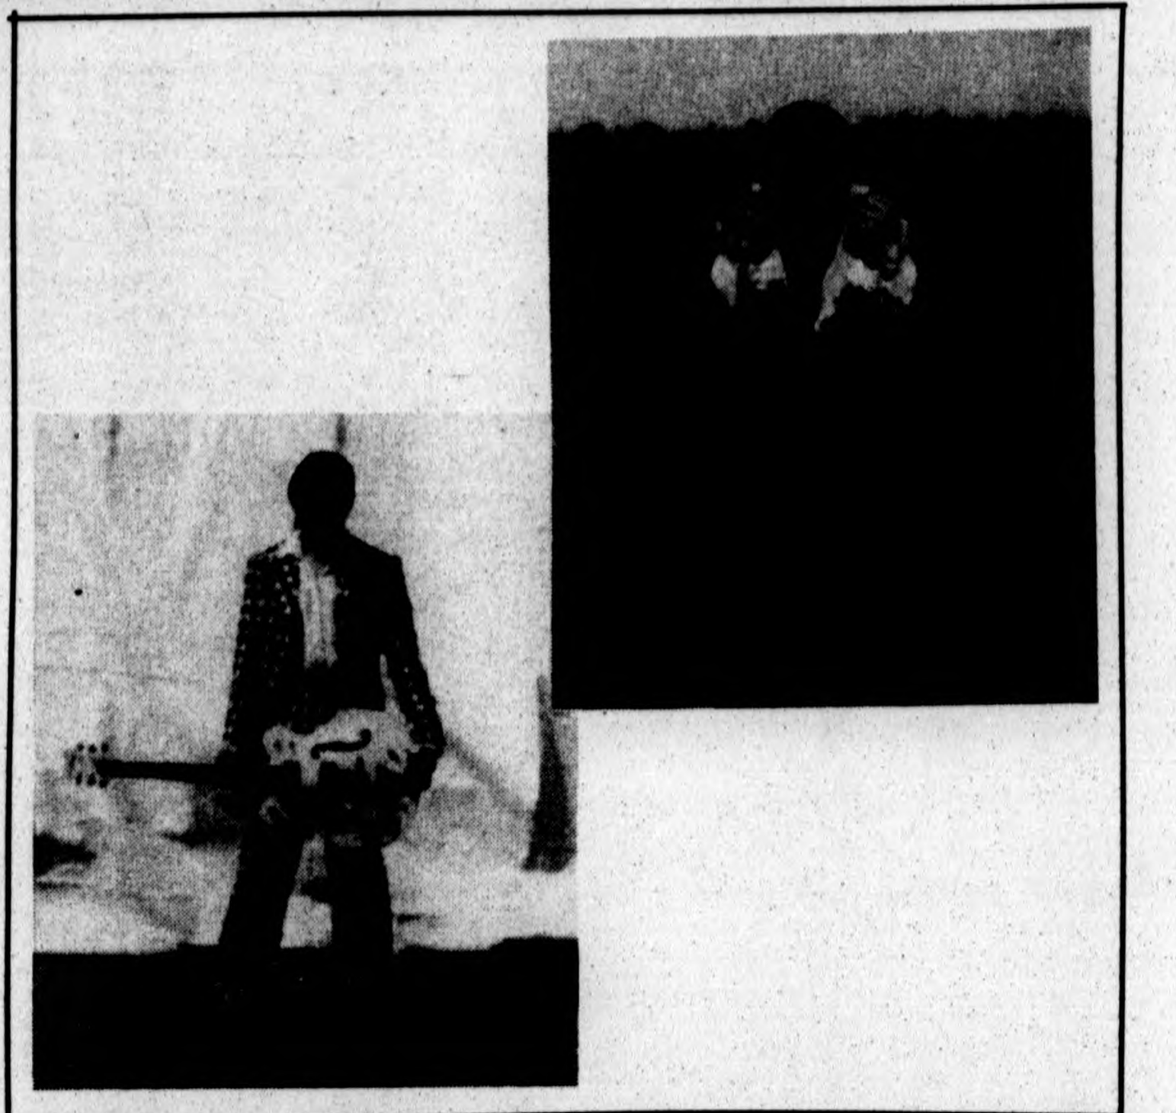
INXS shares views on current music scene

INXS' Kirk Pengilly & Tim Farriss Talk About 'Welcome To Wherever You Are' And Beyond:
(Courtesy of Atlantic Records)

Q: Tablas, sitars, a 65-piece orchestra, the fuzz tone attack on "Heaven Sent" — this is definitely a different album for INXS. What inspired this?
TIM: It's kind of a return to basics for us. The frustrating thing to me about X was that the songs were some of the best stuff we've ever written, and yet I found the production maybe a little too slick and polished. On the new album, we wanted to be a bit more honest and just basically give the impression that we just threw a bunch of microphones around the instruments and recorded ourselves without fiddling with it too much. And that's bascially what we did.
KIRK: Ditto!
TIM: It gave a live feel. With the 65-piece orchestra, we all played live at the same time. Even the actual vocals, and everything on it is live, and maybe some of the backing vocals.
KIRK: I think basically because we produced the record ourselves as well, it kind of tore away any sort of walls or boundaries that may have been sort of put on us by our producer and just allowed us the total freedom to do what we wanted.
Q: Tim, I read somewhere that you had suggested to the band to skip rehearsing the songs and just record them.
TIM: I've always sort of felt that way. I'm always charged up by that edge of the unexpected. Onstage, I like to be as surprised as the audience when I walk out there and I felt exactly the same way about not wanting to rehearse the new record. If the first time the band gets together and actually plays the song from start to finish — and it's felt that it's working — that's the time you should record it.
KIRK: When you're dealing with demos all the time from preproduction and rehearsing before an album, you tend to spend a lot of time in the studio going, "Is this version we just recorded in the studio better than the demo or is it just that the demo sounds better? And so it really helped to make a more spontaneous kind of situation."
Q: There's an old theory in rock and roll that it sounds best when it's played as if it's about to fall apart, but doesn't. So that would fall right into that theory of not wanting to play a song too many times.
KIRK: Yeah, when it's not too polished.
TIM: ... when it has some sort of fragility and it's on the edge of being dangerous. That could often spike a record with something that translates through the speakers.
Q: There's a real healthy trend in music right now — more risk-taking. And Welcome To Wherever You Are feels very much like a record that was made with the spirit of experimentation and chance.
TIM: The last time we were here in the States promoting the X album, the first thing we did here was the "American Music Awards," and I remember when we arrived at the venue — you know, national TV and all — and we were walking down the hallway to our dressing room. You know, we're passing the signs on the doors, and it would say, "Nelson," "Vanilla Ice," "MC Hammer," "Poison." I wanted to turn around and walk out again. And now with this thing that's happening in Seattle, and you know with the Chili Peppers finally getting the recognition they've always deserved, I think it's been like a breath of fresh air. It's more like bands we'd play alongside with in the pubs of Australia in the old days. And them being more honest with their videos — it doesn't look like they spend two million dollars on their video and $500,000 on the entire album.
KIRK: It's kind of kicked it back to just the bands again, rather than 50 dancers or whatever. It's really kinda brought it back to where it started and what it really is all about. You know, bands and just performing and doing their thing. And that's what we've always been all about.

TIM: There's actually another good story — we were at the "AMA's" and a number of Australians like to drink beer and there was no beer allowed on the premises. So we had someone leave with the guitar case and come back with it full of beer. But of course we only had a small amount of ice in our dressing room. So we thought, "Oh, we know where we can get more ice." And we walked out of the dressing room, and Vanilla Ice happened to be rehearsing onstage, so we snuck into his dressing room and stole some of his ice. We stole Vanilla Ice's ice to keep our beer cold!
Q: With Kick, INXS catapulted beyond its alternative base into the mainstream. What was that like?
TIM: We didn't feel we did anything different on the Kick album. It was a continuation of where we'd been going. And the one thing I believe that success should be able to bring you is the ability to take people along the ride with you and give you the freedom to do whatever you want, instead of feeling like you have to cater to that successful record for the rest of your life. I mean, I didn't think we are interested in doing that.
KIRK: It's kind of a weird situation when you're talking about alternative and all because you look at a band that's supposedly called an alternative band and all of a sudden the record sells millions and they become pop. The album hasn't changed. It still started out alternative. So it's always been kind of weird to me. I still look at say, Nirvana, as being kind of alternative to what's going on. It just so happens that lots of people have bought their record.
Q: Back in March, INXS headlined the big AIDS fundraising concert, the "Concert for Life." I know it raised a half million dollars and more so the awareness for AIDS in Australia. How does AIDS — the specter of it, the reality of it — affect life in Australia right now?
KIRK: Probably very similarly to here, really. Obviously the States have a much larger population, but Australia is a very aware country. In a lot of medicinal fields, it's actually been a leader in a lot of research and other levels. And one of the reasons we did the "Concert for Life" was to help raise that awareness, which is such an important thing with AIDS. Not so much raising money, necessarily — I mean, the big objective for us was to raise the consciousness and it was actually the first time we'd really gone full out to the press with a charitable thing that we'd done. Normally, we just don't necessarily talk about it because we don't feel we need to. But we did with the "Concert for Life" because of its AIDS implications.
Q: Would you say there's a sense of dread in Australia about AIDS?

KIRK: Definitely — I think there's worldwide I guess. And now they're talking about this new strain that's not detectable. It's got the ability to be the plague of the 20th Century or the 21st even.



Q: Let's talk about the album cover — I mean all the graphics are really fascinating, and all those funny pudgy looking boys in uniforms on your album/CD/cassette covers. What's the significance and where did the pictures actually come from?
TIM: From Steve Pyke, the photographer — we really like his work. It's all kids in uniforms, which is really, I think, a rather unique angle, for a photographer's work to solely be that. When we first started thinking about the album cover, we didn't want to have another album cover with our faces all over it or something — you know, parts of our anatomy! So we chose to use parts of kids' anatomy! They're all new pictures. Some of them look really old, but they're actually really recent.
KIRK: Pyke basically did a study of kids in uniforms and he went right across Europe and Ireland and took photographs of all these different, sort of, cub scouts and girl guides and whatever — just kids in uniform. So we literally had to go through hundreds of pictures.
KIRK: Yeah, some funny ones, but we couldn't, in the end, decide on one. So we chose three. So as a result, one's on the cassette package, one's on the vinyl package and one on the CD package.

Q: On the CD package, the picture of the boys, when they're all pyramiding, do you know the story of them? Where they come from?
KIRK: There's actually a little rave on the back of the book inside the cover explaining who they are. They're basically an Irish street kids choir that's been around since 1872.
TIM: They'd teach them to play instruments, too.
KIRK: It was a kind of famous organization. In fact, Larry Mullen of U2 was in the choir as a kid, and the singer of the Committments, and one of the guys in Hothouse Flowers, the sax player. Quite of few boys have gone on to become famous musicians — they all came from that choir.
Q: Your most outrageous moment on stage from your early gigs?
KIRK: Our early pub gigs in Australia are firmly entrenched in our minds. You really had to be a good live band to attract a crowd and you actually got paid a percentage of the door or whatever. They'd cram 2000 people into a pub that could hold 1000 people. It was wild. It would rain from the condensation, basically, all the sweat from the guys who'd have their shirts off. It was a lot of fun.
Q: At the end of the song "Baby Don't Cry" on the new album, there's a great rap from Michael that shows the uniqueness of the band and the ability to put a modern style of rap into a song that drums up '60s memories of Petula Clark or Tom Jones.
TIM: I was as surprised as you when I heard that. I mean, one

Brash sound characterizes Copper Blue

By JOHN KAZMIERCZAK
Staff Reporter

The release of Sugar's latest album Copper Blue is a loud, clear announcement that Bob Mould, the ex-Husker Du frontman, is back with a vengeance. Mould teams up with David Barbe (on bass) and Malcolm Travis (on drums, percussion) to produce, arguably, his best work since he broke from Husker Du.

From the first song, "The Act We Act," the discrepancy between the band's sound and its age is readily apparent; judging solely from the tight, cohesive performance, one would be inclined to believe the band had been together for quite a few years (it actually formed less than two years ago). Sugar's mature, yet still youthful sound is largely influenced by Mould's past two solo albums, the thoughtful, bleakly introspective Workbook and more obtuse Black Sheets of Rain. While Mould unquestionably acts as the lead figure in Sugar, it is important to make the distinction that this is not merely Mould and his new backing band; Barbe and Travis are talented musicians who pull more than their own weight. The extensive interaction and interdependence within the trio is the factor that precludes Sugar's success.

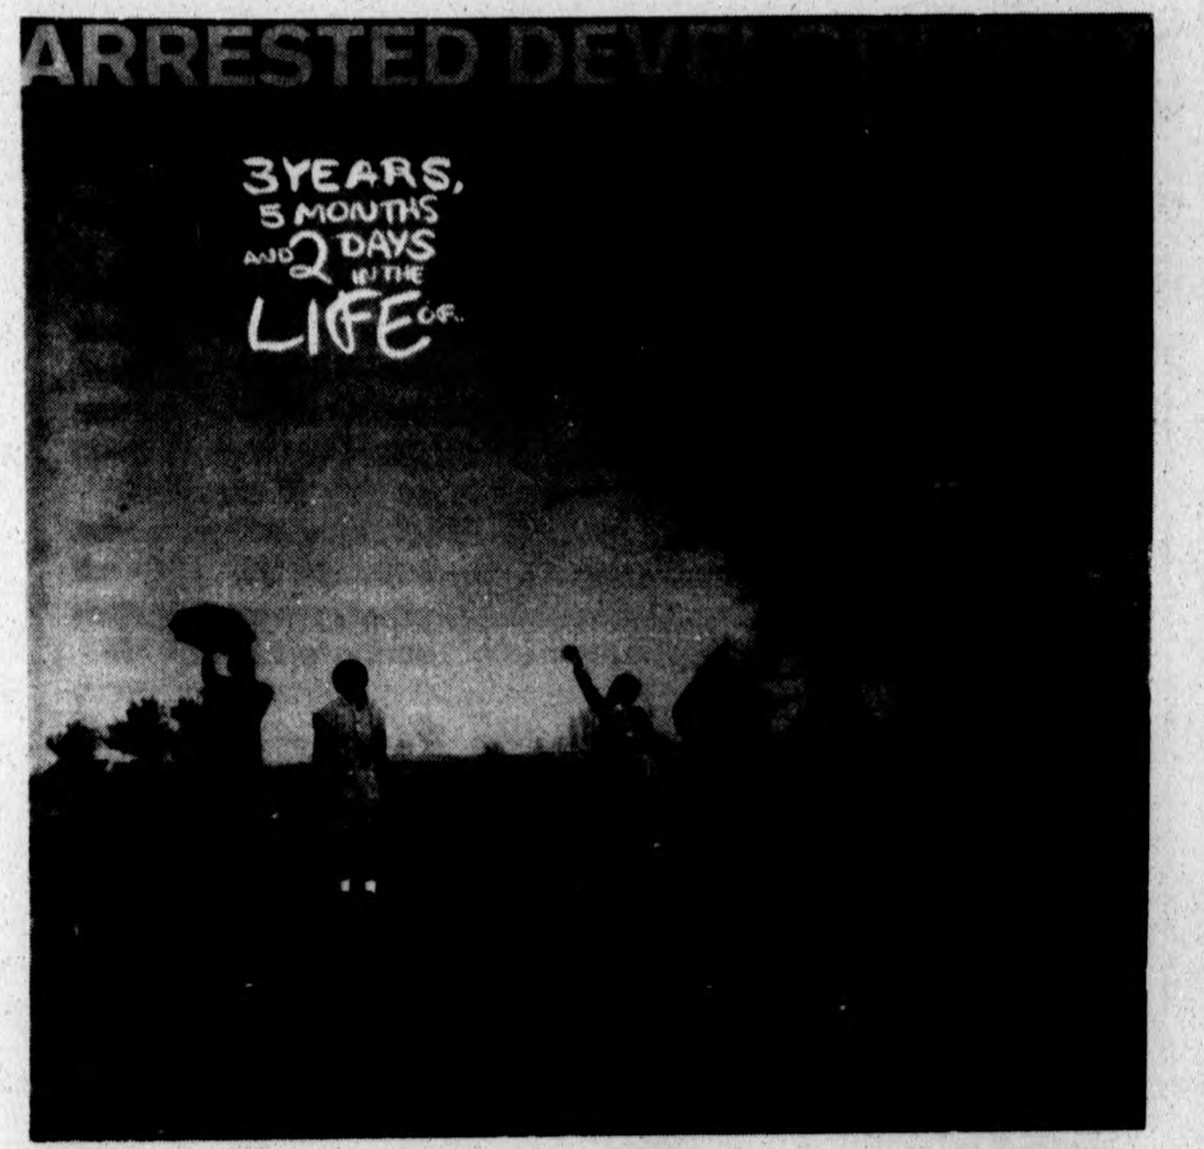
Throughout the album, Mould's odd, resonating vocals and flashy lead guitar work competes with Barbe's bass for the limelight. Since the album is primarily composed of heavier, bass-oriented tracks, the result is best termed "an uneasy standoff." Travis, an above-average drummer, unfortunately never ventures out of the background.

Lack of diversity is one of Sugar's drawbacks. They do well with their thundery, bass-heavy rock motif, but they seldom stray from it, or allow their music to achieve lighter tones. Two songs prove to be exceptions; "Hoover Dam," in which Mould's grandly plunging guitar steps squarely into the forefront and "If I Can't Change Your Mind," a lightning-fast, feel-good anthem, that is easily the best track on the album.

Lyrically, Copper Blue runs the gamut from nonsensical to R.E.M.-like abstract. The words themselves never really play a large part in the listening experience. It seems that Mould is here to play, not to sing.

Copper Blue marks the return to prominence of Bob Mould, a musician who has come full circle, both thematically and stylistically. Sugar presents an interesting, straightforward mix of expert, hook-laden guitar and noticeable but never obtrusive bass that makes this album a pleasure to hear to.

'Life Music' conveys rare positive message



By MAURA RURAK
Assistant Entertainment Editor

"Lord — Through Arrested Development may your work be done and the vibes created from these sound recordings positively effect every living entity in the entire universe ..." claims the album's jacket cover.

According to the band, Arrested Development is devoted to creating "life music." This type of music can fall into no specific category because it crosses all boundaries. The only quality "life music" must contain is that it must make the listener feel good not only about themselves but also about living.

Arrested Development is unique in the fact that they have placed concentration on the good things in the world. They take a realistic stand on violence and poverty and comment on it quite intellectually. It is obvious that the five members of the group are truly devoted to focusing on the good whereas some popular hip-hop groups feel obligated to condemn violence only because it is the "socially-conscious" thing to do.

Three years, 5 months and 2 days in the LIFE of ... was released last spring, however it has recently been thrust into the limelight thanks to t(e Top 40 hits, "Tennessee" and "People Everyday." The grooves are an amazing mix between rap and reggae. The music stands on its own and falters when commentary is mixed in between the tracks.

The album sounds almost as if it were recorded live. It definitely contains a club sound that seems out of place on a dance track. Unfortunately, the version of "People Everyday," a remake from the disco era heard on the radio, is not the same cut that is on 3 years, 5 months and 2 days in the LIFE of ... This may be disappointing to the average listener who buys the album on account of Arrested Development's commercial success.

The poetic nature of the group is obvious in all of the lyrics that are written. "Civilization are we really civilized, yes or no/Who are we to judge?/When thousands of innocent men could be brutally enslaved and killed over a racist grudge." (Mr. Wendal) It is interesting to note that Arrested Development is not blind to the violence that often occurs between blacks. "I told the niggars please let us pass friend/I said please cause I don't like killing Africans/But he wouldn't stop and I ain't Ice Cube/ But I had to take the brother out for being rude." (People Everyday)

"Life Music" has some very outstanding aspects. It places the emphasis on the good and looks for justice in the world. The mix of sounds can become confusing and cluttered and, at times, sound like preaching. On the whole, though, Arrested Development has tuned in on upbeat, positive music that the public is obviously thirsting for.

Waters attempts new sound on unusual LP

By CAROLYN POPE
Staff Reporter

Roger Waters, ex-Pink Floyd vocalist and bassist, recently released his solo endeavor Amused To Death. After spending four years writing the album's 14 tracks, Waters re-emerged onto the r/ck scene with his unusual creation.

The album, a commentary on contemporary society, parallels some of his past work. In sound and story content, the current album continues this style of Waters' 1987 release, Radio KAOS. KAOS told the story of nuclear destruction as heard through a Los Angeles rock radio broadcast. Similarly, the recent Amused To Death depicts a soc)ety that experiences the corruption and violence of our world behind the blur of a television set. Waters' lyrics editorialize the selfishness and hatred of a super-capitalistic America. The album taken as a whole seems to ask, "Is this what it means to be civilized?"

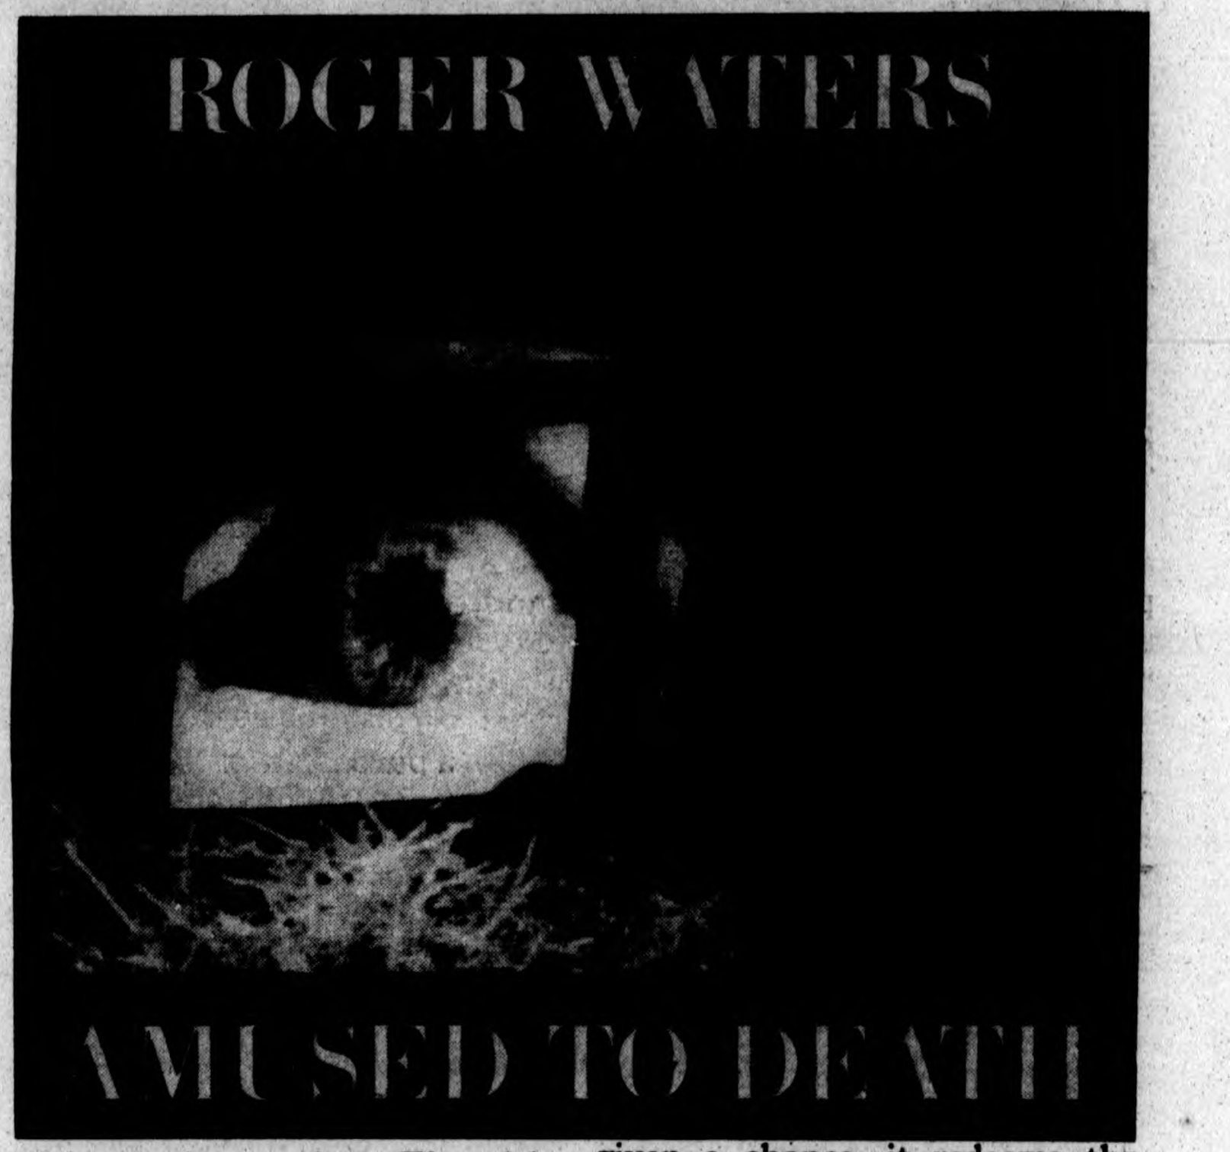
Listeners of the album should not expect the classic sound of Pink Floyd rock. The Waters' album is devoid of the collaborative musical excellence experienced in his work with Floyd in the '70s and '80s. Instead, this album focuses on lyrics and virtually the only creditable instrumental work belongs to the guitar stylings of Jeff Beck.

Waters' lyrics editorialize the selfishness and hatred of a super-capitalistic America.

However, Amused To Death is steeped in imagery. Waters incorporates many background sounds — everything from dogs barking and phones ringing to exploding bombshells. Such underlying sounds contribute to his 20th Century theme. And his use of background vocals, along with calling children, droning telecasts, and other low details create a great noisefloor for the album.

In general, though, Roger Waters surrenders to the cynicism of his age. His angry lyrics dominate the album's feel, especially in the three-part song "What God Wants" ("God wants goodness/ God wants light/ God wants mayhem/ God wants a clean fight"). Also, his first-released single, "The Bravery Of Being Out Of Range," reveals Waters' frustration through its words and tone. First written about Reagan's aggressive foreign policy, the driving tune includes America's unnecessary violence in the Persian Gulf and its insensitive public.

Those with limited experience with Roger Waters' music will find Amused To Death an elementary endeavor, limited in both musicianship and the ability to be positive. Some Waters' fans may feel the same. Even though the new album sounds harsh and irate, a second listen may offer a different impression. The title track, "Amused To Death," is a lyrical and moving finale and, given a chance, it redeems the album's worth for the listener in the end.



Modine sets sail on the high seas in 'Wind'

By CATHERINE C. GRAHAM
Staff Reporter

Inspired by the America's Cup, "Wind" is an exhilarating movie with sailing competitions so vividly depicted that you will become enamored by the film's natural surroundings. The first race (in Rhode Island) is won by the Australians, who become the team to beat in the next race, which takes place Down Under.

The focus of the film is on the water instead of on land and contains some of the most exciting sailing imaginable. The film has three sensational race scenes filmed so well that the viewer may actually feel a part of the competing boats.

Will Parker (Mathew Modine) acts as a dedicated helmsman hired by Morgan Weld (Cliff Robertson), a self-made millionaire and captain of the American ship, Radiance. Will's girlfriend, Kate (Jennifer Grey), is an equally skilled sailor; however, she is torn between her love of sailing, the sailor, (Modine) and her own career as an aeronautics engineer. After Kate is thrown off the crew because of her relationship with Will, she angrily leaves Newport, RI for Dead Man's Flat, NV. Here she teams up with an eccentric aircraft designer, Joe Heiser (Stellan Skarsgaard), who believes boats would go faster if they were designed using airplane principles.

The viewer may actually feel a part of the competing boats.

This is not your average sports-romance type movie. Will gets involved with the millionaire's daughter, Abigail (Rebecca Miller), and they eventually collaborate with Kate and Joe in the middle of the Nevada desert, where the four of them build their own racing ship, Geronimo. The montage of images depicting the building of the yacht is extraordinary.

The relationship of the four characters in the middle of the film are intriguing and the tension developed keeps the viewer interested. Not surprisingly, however, we learn Kate and Will are still in love while Abigail is raising the money for the boat and Kate and Joe are going through the motions of romance.

Even if you do not understand the mechanics of sail racing, "Wind" is a worthwhile movie to see. The glorious racing footage and scenery in Rhode Island and Australia are accompanied by a sportscaster who narrates some of the action and uses computer simulations to explain what is happening with the intricacies of sailing.

'Sneakers' ensembles cast

By AARON NICODEMUS
Entertainment Editor

Nic's Picks

What would you expect a movie called "Sneakers" to be about? A Muppet movie, perhaps. An in depth documentary into the life of a handicapped tri-athlete. A Pink Panther "made for TV" movie special. But certainly not what it is: a combination of intrigue and comedy that but for a few minor flaws might actually be worth seeing again.

Expectations aside, "Sneakers" does assemble a cast that resembles a who is (and who was) at the top of Hollywood's marquee list: Robert Redford, Sidney Poitier, Mary McDonnell, Ben Kingsley, Dan Aykroyd and River Phoenix. They combine to form a group of legalized bandits. Corporations, banks and other highly sensitive firms hire them to "test" their security system by breaking into it. "It's a bit strange," says Redford as he collects one check, "but it's a living."

The crew themselves are a mixture of men hiding from their pasts: Redford is a former computer hack who tapped into a national bank account system with his friend (Cosmo) as an undergraduate. He left for pizza, only to find Cosmo (Ben Kingsley) had been arrested for fraud. From that point on, Redford is a federal fugitive. Similarly, the other members have criminal or dishonorable pasts from which they are constantly on the run.

After completing a fairly lucrative job, Redford is approached by a U.S. government agency not connected with the F.B.I. or the C.I.A. A certain mathematician has just received an extremely generous secret grant from the U.S. government to develop a certain "equational box." This black box provides the method to break the formerly invincibly cryptic U.S. Intelligence Code, which controls and hides every government secret and document on file. Availability to such a database might prove disastrous to our nation's safety.

The plot twists and turns through the murder of the mathematician and some high-ranking Russian officials, the return of Redford's college friend as the vengeful villain bent on destroying the greedy corporate world by ruining their computer network and various side plots amongst the group's characters.

For three-quarters of the film, a quiet balance is kept between one-liners and a serious development of suspense and action. The interaction between group members is kept light, and their own engaging personalities surface briefly. But in a movie with so many stars, it is inevitable that the limelight will not shine on all. "Sneakers" really never allows it to find even one.

By the end of "Sneakers," the sappy ending and a complete disregard for tying loose ends leaves the viewer confused and annoyed. The last scene seems ludicrous in light of the two hours of film that preceded it. The characters wander about searching for a purpose (or possibly more screen time). In the final analysis, expectations can often wreck a film, and in the case of "Sneakers," this proves true.

FAST FORWARD: Billy Crystal directs directs and stars in "Mr. Saturday Night," in which he revives his character of Buddy Young Jr., a crotchety night club comedian who never allowed himself the chance to make it. Still bitter and broke, Crystal's character makes his way through the nursing home comedy circuit. "Mr. Saturday Night" opens in late September.

"Hero" involves a story familiar to us all: the person does something worthy, and another takes the credit. Dustin Hoffman plays a married, average father who saves an outspoken TV journalist (Geena Davis) from a fiery plane crash. When he does not immediately claim his just reward, a handsome replacement (Andy Garcia) soon comes forth. "Hero" has all the ingredients for a quality comic experience, and opens in mid-October.

REWIND: Now in video stores is "Mississippi Marsala," starring Denzel Washington and Sarita Choudhury in a film about international romance. While earning good reviews from critics, "Marsala" opened weakly and was quickly labeled an "artsy" flick. Although the topic was the subject of Spike Lee's controversial "Jungle Fever," "Mississippi Marsala" provides a much more intimate and lasting touch.

CLIPS: The Cultural Film Series announces its second film of its fall season will be "Amadeus," chronicalling the life of the famous musician. The music and screenplay combine to create an entertaining and enlightening insight into the artist's career. Show times will be at the Connelly Center cinema on Sat., Sept. 19 at 7 p.m.; Sun., Sept. 20 at 3 and 7 p.m.; and Mon., Sept. 21 at 7 p.m. Admission for undergraduates is $2.

Peppers offend at awards

By COLEEN KENIREY

The Cutting Edge

The 1992 MTV Music Video Awards, hosted by comedian Dana Carvey, provided some notable performances, acceptance speeches and award presentations. With "Even Better than the Real Thing," U2 garnered the award for Best Group Video. The band performed the song via satellite from Pontiac, Mich., the most recent stop on their successful Zoo TV tour. "Wayne's World" character Garth accompanied them on drums from UCLA's Pauley Pavilion.

The Red Hot Chili Peppers, known for their occasional socks-only onstage attire and for their nearly nude "Rolling Stone" cover, lived up to their controversial reputation. When the band received the Breakthrough Video award for "Give It Away," singer Anthony Kiedis and bassist Flea made sexual gestures in an attempt to add shock value to the show.

Disc jockey Howard Stern presented an award with Luke Perry and established himself as the most offensive presenter. Wearing a mock-superhero costume, Stern revealed his stomach and buttocks, parts of his body better left unseen.

The symbolic style of Guns n' Roses' videos was honored with the Michael Jackson Video Vanguard award, which Axl Rose quickly pointed out "had nothing to do with Michael Jackson." Nirvana's overplayed video for their crossover hit "Smells Like Teen Spirit" was bestowed the title of Best New Artist Video. The award for Best Direction was delivered to Van Halen for their thought provoking "Right Now" video, which conceptually echoes U2's Zoo TV.

Eric Clapton stirred the crowd during his acceptance of the Best Male Video award for "Tears In Heaven." At the podium Clapton emotionally recalled the song's message as a tender tribute to his deceased son. Another sentimental moment occurred when Queen's Bryan May evoked the memory of Freddie Mercury in his acceptance of the Best Video from a Film prize for "Bohemian Rhapsody."

Michael Jackson has been scheduled a 20-minute performance during the 1993 Super Bowl halftime presentation. Jackson has plans to combine the visual impact of the huge Rose Bowl stadium venue and the unmatched audience size created by the event to promote serious messages. The singer will reach out to areas of racial unrest such as East L.A. with musical pleas for peace.

The NFL will donate $100,000 to Jackson's Heal the World Foundation. The artist will also contribute his income for the performance to the charity.

FRESH CUTS: Business savvy Madonna has signed with Sire/ Warner Bros. to receive a $5 million advance for her long-awaited album, Erotica. The Material Girl will also obtain 20 percent of the profits from the new release which is due in late October. "Sex," a collection of erotic photographs of Madonna, will also be available soon.

Manchester band the Happy Mondays have recorded a new album titled Yes, Please. It was produced by Chris Frantz and Tina Weymouth, formerly of the Talking Heads and currently of Tom Tom Club notoriety. The production team touts the Mondays' new work as their best and as the endeavor which will launch them onto the charts.

The band has again utilized dance beats, but have given their sound a lighter feel. Some difficult times were overcome in the making of the album, as drummer Mark Berry broke his arm during its recording and singer Shaun Rider had to leave the project in progress temporarily for drug rehabilitation treatment. Oddly enough, the overall musical package is ultimately more upbeat, possibly reflecting the partial recording of the album in the tropical locale of Barbados.

'Teens emerge

Drop Nineteens are the sort of band that combine all the loud sounds of the electric guitar into songs that are pleasing to the ear. Compared to such bands like Ride, My Bloody Valentine, and Sonic Youth; they play along the same vein. However, they do have their own distinctive sound. Both vocalists and guitarists, Greg Ackell and Paula Kelley, share vocals on four of the 10 songs on their debut LP, Delaware. The vocals on the other songs are solos by either Ackell or Kelley. The meshing of their two voices in the songs "Delaware," "Ease It Halen" and "Angel" give the vocals on the album a range not heard in many bands today. However, that does not mean the rest of the band is in the background. They include Motohiro Yasue, Steve Zimmerman and Chris Roof; who play guitar, bass and drums, respectively.

From the photo of the band on the inside cover of the CD, one would get the impression that Drop Nineteens are rather young. Yet, their music has a maturity that you would not expect from the youthful faces of the band. This serves as an inspiring element because it is refreshing to listen to music made by our generation.

The song "Kick The Tragedy" is especially haunting in its depiction of death through the eyes of a child. It is here that Paula Kelley's innocent yet honest voice is most effective. You may also notice an early Madonna song redone by the band which is better than the original. The song "Angel" also happens to be their first single and video, which can usually be seen on MTV's "120 Minutes."

It is here that Paula Kelley's innocent yet honest voice is most effective.

Drop Nineteens are definitely a band to look out for in the future because of their youthfulness and already mature approach to song writing. For anyone more interested in them, they will be appearing at J.C. Dobbs, in Philadelphia, with opening act Revolver, on Sept. 19.

day we were playing with a 65-piece orchestra, and trying to record live, and all of a sudden, Michael goes into this rap. I turned around like, "Man, that's actually pretty cool!" And it worked.

KIRK: I think we just like to try things. Anything. One of the advantages of being successful, I guess, is that with that success, it allows you more freedom. And I think that's what INXS has always been about. Fusing different things. Not scared to mesh things together that, ordinarily, people wouldn't do.

Q: There's also a great blend on "Not Enough Time:" against that almost hip-hop rhythm going on there, that guitar sound is as basic as you could have with no effects on it.

TIM: I didn't use any effects on any of the guitars played on the album. It was just my Telecaster plugged into my amp.

Q: The release of Welcome To Wherever You Are in ECO-PAK is a much-needed nail in the coffin to wasteful longbox CDs. What was your attraction to having Welcome To Wherever You Are released in America in this configuration which also allows for a more creative presentation of graphics?

TIM: When I'd go to a record store in America and buy a bunch of CDs and go back to the hotel room and have to try to find every bin there is in the room in which to put the rubbish, it seemed like such a waste, of human resources and natural resources. So when the makers of ECO-PAK approached our management about it a year ago, we were very interested in it. Now that I've actually lived with it for about a week here in the States, I'm actually really impressed. I've been taking it to all the TV studios and dropping in on the floor, or smashing it on the arm of a chair or table, and it doesn't break like a jewel box.

KIRK: The more you look into it, the more it becomes impressive to us. It kind of brings back a bit more of what vinyl had to offer, and larger artwork has a lot more scope for creativity. It's interesting because you're actually getting more in the CD size in artwork. And we're endorsing and hoping it becomes the norm. It starts out as a long box and falls down to a normal CD; it has plastic edges, so it is still rigid.

TIM: I loved the days when you'd buy a record on vinyl because you'd get a gatefold and you could be listening to the music and have something to look at the whole time. That's what I think perhaps CDs have lost. You know, when you want to read anything about the album on the CD, you got to slide it out of the plexiglass cover and try to slide it back and you wrinkle the edges and it's just a pain in the butt really. I think this is just better.

OUTLOOK: The Cats open conference play against a Richmond team that finished seventh last year at 2-5 in the league. But do not let that fool you. Richmond is improved but the question is by how much. The win over JMJ, a playoff participant last year, leaves the Spiders with a full head of steam as they look to knock off the defending champs on the road.

For Villanova, a repeat of last year's blowout victory is within reach. Quarterback Tom Colombo will once again face an inexperienced secondary succeptible to the deep pass, as Colombo found out last year when he threw for over 300 yards and 3 TD's. This should be a good game for the Cats to reestablish their passing game.

Defensively, the Cats will be tested by a Spider offense featuring three legitimate weapons, quarterback Greg Lilly, flanker Sterling Brown and running back Uly Scott. Lilly threw for five TD's last week and will be looking for his favorite target Brown, a four-year starter. Scott rushed for 198 yards last week.

Richmond should provide the Cats with a good opening test in the Yankee, which is what 'Nova really needs. However, the Cats should be able to win rather easily with an overpowering defense that will tangle the Spiders in a web of their own again this year.

PREDICTION: Villanova 31, Richmond 10

Soccer now 4-1

By MICHAEL DAVIES
Staff Reporter

Men's soccer suffered its first loss of the season last week, losing to Penn State 3-1. But the Cats quickly bounced back, beating area rival UPenn 3-2, and downing La Salle for the first time in five years. The Cats' record stands at 4-1.

The loss to Penn State was very disappointing to the Wildcats. Playing with a man advantage for 75 of the 90 minutes would normally mean a rout for 'Nova, but that was not the case. Instead, the team played poorly and out of sync. The defense turned in its worst performance of the season, allowing three goals. In two previous games, the tough 'Nova defense had not relinquished any scores.

Furthermore, the offense did not have its normal potency. Although the Wildcats did play with an advantage for most of the game, they failed to capitalize. Scoring only one goal against a tough State team was not enough.

The team bounced back strongly on the road with a victory at UPenn. The offense appeared to be at full strength again, putting three balls in the net against the Quakers.

"(Keith) Taylor gave me a great cross in the middle of the field. I split the defenders, and fortunately I was able to put the ball in the back of the net," said Eric Hinds, a senior forward who has three goals on the season.

With the exception of a couple of breakdowns, the defense also played superbly. Penn's first goal came with 30 seconds left in the first half. Junior sweeper Scott Dougherty was injured on a previous play, and had to be taken out. When the Penn striker beat his man there was no sweeper to save him. Consequently, freshman goalie Aleko Zeppos was left to fend for himself. The result — an easy goal for the Quakers.

Additional goals from Sean Whitely and Joe Roy, their third and fourth of the season, respectively, enabled Villanova to seal the victory 3-2.

The team demonstrated why they were supposed to be contenders Sept. 14 when they defeated La Salle 3-1.

"This was a big game. We hadn't beaten La Salle in five years. Today we put everything together. This was a big game for us," said Hinds.

The Wildcats open the Big East regular season this Saturday with a game against Georgetown. It promises to be a very high-scoring game. Hopefully, Villanova will be able to keep the momentum rolling and dispose of Georgetown.

Cats beat LaSalle; struggle in North Carolina

By BOB TRAVISANO
Staff Reporter

The trip south of the Mason-Dixon line proved to be a long one as the women's soccer team dropped back-to-back games to nationally-ranked North Carolina State and UNC-Greensboro.

Head Coach Shelly Chamberlain's Cats started off the week on a good note, though, defeating rival LaSalle, 4-2.

Three minutes into the game, the Explorers took over with an early score, but 'Nova would quickly respond. Leslie Coleman provided the equalizer by notching the team's first tally as Rachel Moreau assisted with a pass from the corner.

Both teams were shutdown the rest of the first half, and 'Nova went into the locker room deadlocked with the Explorers, 1-1.

After the intermission, the Cats wasted little time disposing of LaSalle. Moreau and Gail Kegolis drained a score apiece that put the Cats ahead 3-1. The Explorers rallied for another score, but Moreau iced the game with another goal to give 'Nova the victory, 4-2.

Chamberlain was pleased with his team's execution throughout the game.

"Everything we worked on in practice got used in the game," said Chamberlain. "Before the game I held our usual 'chalk-talk.' Everything from the classroom got brought out onto the field."

Goaltender Danielle Fagan registered 10 saves on the afternoon.

The Cats' trip down Tobacco Road wasn't as beneficial, as powerhouse N.C. State downed 'Nova 3-0. The Cats fell behind early as the Wolfpack punched in two goals at the start of the first half. That margin would prove too great to overcome despite another outstanding effort from Fagan, who stopped 20 shots.

It was a case of little offense for the Cats, as N.C. State suffocated 'Nova's offense, allowing only two shots on the Wolfpack net. N.C. State played aggressively, attacking the 'Nova goal for most of the contest.

"We played 'D' most of the time," said Chamberlain. "We gained a lot of experience playing a team that's ranked so high in the nation."

And despite the loss, Chamberlain seemed somewhat satisfied.

"It was good overall and we got a chance to rub elbows with the No. 4 team in the country," said the rookie coach.

Especially since the Wolfpack carry 11 full-scholarship athletes, several of which are on the U.S. Women's National Team.

The following afternoon, the Cats squared off against UNC-Greensboro, getting shutout 5-0. Everything was running smoothly for 'Nova until 30 minutes into the contest when Greensboro recorded three unanswered goals in the final 15 minutes of the period.

After the first Spartan score, the Cats' offense lost some of its punch.

"We went into it thinking we could win," said Chamberlain. "The first time they scored against us, we went flat."

The second half saw the Cats surrender two more goals, although Fagan again recorded double digits in saves with 10.

"In this game (against UNC-Greensboro), we were on the attack more often, out of the defensive part of the field," said Chamberlain.

Despite dropping to 1-3 on the season, Chamberlain felt that the team was "very much competitive and played well overall."

In the next week, the Cats hit the road again for three road contests including a game against rival UPenn and New England foes Boston College and Providence College.

Volleyball slumps at Asics

By JUSTIN KESTNER
Assistant Sports Editor

Southern California was anything but a sunny paradise for the women's volleyball team last weekend, as the Cats (1-4) were swept in four matches in the ASICS/Grand Prix Tournament at San Diego.

Rookie Head Coach Ron Twome had to wonder what was wrong with the team after 'Nova managed to win only two games the entire tournament.

Villanova opened the event with an 8-15, 6-15, 4-15 loss to Big 10 foe Northwestern Sept. 11. Senior Vicky Dispenza registered 22 assists in the match.

Later that day, 'Nova squared off against Baylor and again was denied victory, losing to the Bears 15-6, 15-12, 10-15, 15-8. Sophomore Mara Austrins played a strong match, notching a career-high 16 kills. Midhitter Becky Kulbago added 16 kills for the Cats.

'Nova got off to a good start against San Francisco by taking the first game 15-12. But the team could not build on the momentum and lost the match in four closely contested games (12-15, 15-11, 15-7, 16-14). Tracey Treahy smashed a career-high 16 kills, while Kulbago added 20 more. Dispenza totaled 54 assists in the loss.

Villanova concluded the tournament with a loss to host San Diego State in three straight games (15-8, 15-3, 16-14). Dispenza distributed 18 assists while Kulbago had 10 kills. Kulbago earned all-tournament honors for her effort.

The Cats will attempt to get back on the winning track this weekend at the Penn State Tournament. Villanova, Penn State, West Virginia, BYU, George Washington and Hawaii will participate in the event.

It is apparent that the Cats are still adjusting to Twome. Their 1-4 record, should gradually improve as they become more comfortable with the system. Hopefully, the team will gel in time for the Big East season and will peak for its key matches.

The Cats next home match is against Big East rival Pittsburgh on Sept. 25 at 7 p.m. in the Jake Nevin Field house.

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

JOE ROY

This week the Villanovan recognizes soccer player Joe Roy. A returning All-Big East selection, the junior forward registered goals in wins against Penn and LaSalle, raising his season total to five. Roy has helped lead the team to a 7-1 start and figures to be a key player in the Cats' drive for the Big East title this season.

The Cats host conference rival Georgetown this Sunday at 1 p.m.

Eller heart-n-soul of defense

By ED WASIELEWSKI
Assistant Sports Editor

Teammates know him as L-Rock, Sug, or Eller-gator.

Opposing coaches know him as the returning All-American linebacker.

And Yankee Conference running backs, they just know him all too well.

At 6-foot, 225 pounds, Curtis Eller demands attention. The centerpiece of the No. 1-ranked Division I-AA defense in the country, Eller led the Wildcats in tackles last season with 101. He also recorded numerous accolades, including Kodak all-America First Team and Yankee Conference Defensive Player of the Year.

"He's our premier player on defense," said Head Coach Andy Talley. "His mere presence is an uplifting force. (Curtis) is an extra-hard hitter who has been an impact player for this program."

Ever since arriving at Villanova in 1989, Eller has been the mainstay for the Cats' defense, recording 122 total tackles his rookie season and 87 tackles his sophomore season. A Stratford, Conn. native, Eller has been the driving force behind a tenacious Cat defense.

"Our aggressiveness (on defense) comes from Curtis and his leadership," said Talley. "He's a settling, stable influence who's the type of player who makes everyone around him better."

Selected as the unanimous choice for team captain, Eller leads this team by example.

"He's not a holler guy; he's very quiet and very strong," said Talley. "(Curtis) is the heart and soul of the defense, and he lets his play do the talking."

As the consummate team player, Eller humbly acknowledges his accomplishments. However, he is quick to emphasize the team's focus for this 1992 campaign. After winning the Yankee crown last season, Eller has one goal in sight, the National Championship. "It's now or never," said Eller.

Just two weeks into the season, Eller realizes that every game is very significant.

"We try to take it one game at a time," said the four-year starter. "Sometimes, you look ahead (past an opponent), and they can surprise you."

If there is one thing Eller will not do, it is look past this season, his final collegiate one. When asked about his chances at making the NFL, Eller shrugs his shoulders and admits he has not spent much time thinking about it.

"I don't worry about it, really," said Eller. "I take it one step at a time."

If professional football does not pan out, Eller said he will simply use his degree to find a job.

On the other hand, Talley feels that his star linebacker has an excellent chance come time for the NFL Draft.

"He's a pro prospect," said Talley. "Some scouts think he's too small, but the numbers he's posted should provide him with an opportunity."

The recent success of "smaller" players, especially 5-foot-10 linebacker Sam Mills of the New Orleans Saints, should be an encouraging sign for Eller.

Yet, with league play beginning tomorrow, Eller and the Cats remain focused. Despite injuries to linebackers Andy Cobaugh and Phil DiMaria, Eller is confident that the talented backups will be able to take their place and we won't miss a beat.

So far, Eller has wasted no time establishing himself this season with impressive outings against West Chester and Bucknell, earning Yankee Conference Player of the Week against WCU.

Neither brash, nor flashy, Eller is "all business, whether it's school or football," said Talley.

This year is no exception.

Two of the past three years, 'Nova has lost in the first round of the Division I-AA Playoffs. Both times, the Cats lost to the eventual National Champion, Georgia Southern in 1989 and Youngstown State last year.

Is this the breakthrough year?

For Curtis Eller, it truly is now or never.

Tennis opens

The women's tennis team started its season with a bang as it swept its first match against Swarthmore. In singles play, they did not even lose one set. No. 2 singles player Kelly Barnes did not lose a game in winning the match 6-0, 6-0.

In the home opener Sept. 11, the Cats turned in a repeat performance of the Swarthmore match. They won 7-2 over Millersville as Isabelle Perrault won 6-4, 6-1 to add to the second singles sweep in as many matches.

The trouble began as the Cats traveled south to play Mount St. Mary's and Georgetown last weekend. It was a close fight against Mount St. Mary's with the score tied 3-3 after singles play, thanks to wins from Carolyn Daley at No. 1 singles, Barnes, and Julie Homicz. Mount St. Mary's went on to win 5-4 with strong doubles play.

Villanova was next shutout by Big East rival Georgetown 9-0. Daley was the only player to win a set during her match.

'Nova took on Seton Hall Sept. 13 to make up its rained out match that was scheduled for Sept. 10. Seton Hall took control and led 5-2 after singles play. Barnes and senior co-captain Stephanie Kirchner were the only two to win their matches.

"I felt a little unprepared," Daley said after losing a tough match to Kristen Downing of Seton Hall. "We have been faced with two tough teams over the weekend and I just didn't feel ready. That's not to take anything away from her (Downing), she really did play great. It was a good match."

About her upcoming matches, Daley seemed optimistic.

"Temple and St. John's should be tough, but I feel like I can do well."

The Cats will take on Fairfield University as part of the Parents' Weekend activities this Friday. They will play the University of Delaware Sept. 22 and St. Joe's Sept. 23.

Women's X-Country preps for Indiana Invitational

By SEAN M. KELLY
Staff Reporter

At one time, phrases like "back-to-back championships" and the proverbial "three-peat" were popular phrases among Villanova's women's cross country fans. Expressions such as thee, however, have long been put to rest. For the 1992 season, Wildcat enthusiasts will need to produce a saying that resembles the lady's newest road to an unprecedented fourth straight NCAA Championship.

Perhaps "Return of the Dynasty" would be a fitting slogan considering that is exactly what ninth-year women's Head Coach Marty Stern has created — a dynasty. There really is no better term that can so easily describe a team such as this which has dominated the colelgiate ranks for the past three years. As Stern proudly states, the program has not suffered a loss since Ronald Reagan was in the White House. In fact, not one member of the 1992 women's team has ever experienced a loss at the collegiate level.

For the time being, no one on the team is worried about keeping their phenomenal streak alive. Surprisingly, there is no tension among them.

"The streak is there but we don't talk about it," Stern admits. "There's really no pressure on us in that sense. Pressure's when you're losing."

If that is the case, and the Cats continue their successful ways, they will not be feeling pressure in that regard for a very long time. In the meantime, everything will remain business as usual. The runners have their sights set on nothing less than another national championship.

In a special way, each NCAA crown has its own individual meaning to the 'Nova squad. This undoubtedly spurs from Stern's insistence that each one of his teams is unique. This year's squad does have one similarity with former Wildcat clubs; they too are beginning their season on track to win a national title.

"The girls look tremendous in practice," Stern said. If everyone is able to stay healthy throughout the season, the road to the championships should be smooth.

As the No. 1 ranked team in the nation, the Wildcats will obviously be favored in all of their meets. 'Nova's top three runners, perhaps the top three runners in the country, are junior Carole Zajac and seniors Nnenna Lynch and Cheri Goddard. Zajac, who last year was second in the nation only to former Villanova star Sonia O'Sullivan, has emerged as the country's premier cross country runner. Lynch and Goddard are rated as two of college's finest.

"If this were football, we'd have three Heisman Trophy candidates," Stern said.

In no way will these three runners carry the team alone, however. The Wildcats have plenty of depth so that there is no impending need to rely on any one runner. Senior Irene Ruopoli, and sophomore Becky Spies, both of whom have made excellent strides in the off-season, are expected to be solid. Freshmen Jennifer Rhines and Megan Flowers also are expected to make an impact. Both runners were included in last year's list of the elite high school runners.

The Cats open the season tomorrow at the Indiana Invitational in Bloomington.

"The first meet is always scary," he said. Once the first one is over we can finally see how good we really are."

Although some teams will come after the Cats in an attempt to put an end to their dynasty, others will simply be too intimidated by their opponent's now famous Villanova jerseys to even stay close to the champions.

Water Polo looks to improve in '92

By ERIC WARREN
Staff Reporter

The Villanova water polo team is busy preparing for what may prove to be its best season ever by improving on last year's 11-9 record.

"The group we are returning is far better than any other returning team," said Head Coach Dan Sharidan, who returns five of seven starters.

The team lost only two seniors, Kevin Engstrom, last year's second leading scorer, and Steve Abbott, who was second in steals.

Senior Mark Verotsky led the team in goals and assists last year and should once again prove a deciding factor in close games. Paul Cera, who Sharidan describes as "an excellent driver," returns after scoring 25 goals last year. Junior Jim Floerchinger led the team last year with 40 steals and is also a scoring threat. Sharidan also has great expectations for Peter Trout, who was redshirted last year.

The greatest improvement in the team will be at the goalie position. Sharidan believes that goalie John O'Keefe will "make the difference in the season." O'Keefe has improved from walk-on status to one of the better goalies in the conference. The team's greatest difficulty will be defending some of the most dominant centers in the nation in the Eastern Conference.

Sharidan feels that this year's team has a legitimate shot at defeating some teams they have not beaten before. The team's goal is to make the Eastern Conference Championships by receiving one of the five at-large berths.

"We have a shot like we've never had before," said Sharidan.

The water polo team opens it season tomorrow at the Harvard Tournament against Boston College and also will play Iona College, Harvard and Navy.

Yankee Conference

By FRANK SCHNEIDER
Staff Reporter

The second week of Yankee Conference play included one of the best quarterback performances in conference history, a tough defense finding its identity, and a rookie on his way to Rookie of the Year honors.

Richmond 49, James Madison 40

The Richmond Spiders opened their season with a 49-40 win over cross-state rival James Madison. James Madison has fallen to 0-2 on the season and fields the worst defense in the Yankee Conference, having allowed 98 points. The only plus for JMU this young season has been the play of Kenny Sims, who averages 100.5 yards rushing per game.

Richmond quarterback Greg Lilly turned in one of the best performances in Yankee Conference history. He threw for 313 yards at a completion percentage of 64.7 percent. He had scoring throws of 82, 19, 50, 32 and 46 yards. He also ran for two touchdowns and completed passes on two two-point conversions. He was the Yankee Conference Offensive Player of the Week and figured in 45 of Richmond's 49 points.

Top performers for Richmond also included Uly Scott, who rushed for 198 yards on 35 carries and Eric Johnson, who had 14 tackles for a busy Spider defense.

Delaware 33, Massachusetts 13

Delaware opened its season against an overmatched Massachusetts team with a 33-13 victory. Daryl Brown rushed for 183 yards on 25 carries and two touchdowns. The Blue Hens are trying to defend its tri-champion title and will meet Villanova Oct. 17 on the Main Line.

Northern Arizona 21, Northeastern 14

NAU spoiled Northeastern's season opener by squeaking out a 21-14 victory. Northeastern's offense amassed 387 total yards, but a late fumble proved costly in its disappointing loss.

Connecticut 24, New Hampshire 21

Connecticut traveled to Durham, N.H. to pull off an upset over New Hampshire (0-2). Ed Long spurred the Huskies with a good effort out of the backfield. He averages 121.5 yards rushing per game. The tenacious UConn defense played solid smash-mouth football with linebacker Jim Reppi claiming Yankee Conference Defensive Player of the Week Honors.

He had eight tackles, forced one fumble and recovered another for a Husky defense which forced five Wildcat turnovers. New Hampshire fumbled the ball with three minutes left on UConn's 20-yard line to thwart UNH comeback hopes. New Hampshire was last year's tri-champion with Villanova and Delaware; they were also ranked 18th in I-AA pre-season polls.

Maine 10, Kutztown 0

Freshman Ray Baur rushed for 88 yards and received for 23, helping him to be named Yankee Conference Rookie of the Week for the second week in a row. The surprising Black Bears are now 2-0 on the season. Running back Ben Sirmans is averaging 111.5 yards per game rushing.

Rhode Island 36, Towson St. 19

URI opened its season with a 36-19 win in an offensive showcase against Towson St. Quarterback Tony Squitieri was 17 for 29 for 317 yards passing and threw for three touchdowns. Receiver Brian Field had six catches for 92 yards and two scores. Pierce is also second in the Yankee Conference in punt returns with a 13.5 yard average.

William & Mary 21, Virginia Military 16

William & Mary defeated VMI 21-16, laying the ground-work for an up-and-coming defense. The tough trio of Keith Bookler, Mark Tyler and Craig Staub helped created two VMI turnovers and combined for an astounding 47 tackles.

"Doc" Jacobs' Wildcat varsity basketball aggregation, led by Jack Barry, subdued the Ursinus Bears at the new gym last Friday night by a 55 to 31 score, thus avenging a defeat suffered at the hands of the Collegeville aggregation earlier in the season.

Smarting under the recent defeat administered last Wednesday by Manhattan the Wildcats, determined not to be humiliated again, rose up in their wrath to hand the passers of Charles "Horse" Chase one of the most decisive defeats which they have received thus far this season.

It was an entirely rejuvenated five that humbled Ursinus. The contest was not very old before it was apparent to all that Jacobs had "breathed life anew" into his charges. No more accurate passing and shooting was ever witnessed on the home court than that which was displayed by the Feline Five last Friday night.

At half-time the Blue and White aggregation was sporting a 19 to 15 lead. But in the second half the 'Cats literally submerged the Bears under a deluge of baskets. One of the principal participants in the onslaught on the Collegeville basket was Jack Barry, who raked up nine field goals and three fouls.

Jerry Daly was the second high scorer and he was followed by Lynch and Sheylin.

Cats run roughshod on Bison, 34-0

By ANDY FITZPATRICK
Sports Editor

Perhaps Head Coach Andy Talley should have given his starters the day off against Bucknell. Then maybe the game would have been a little closer, pitting the Cat backups versus the Bison starting unit. On second thought, probably not.

On the strength of four touchdowns, with still nine minutes remaining in the second quarter, the Cats (2-0) overwhelmed a rebuilding Bucknell team 34-0 to repeat the shutout of last year in the final tune-up before Yankee Conference play heats up tomorrow against Richmond.

Just how complete was the domination? So much so that the No. 3-ranked Cats racked up 485 total yards while holding Bucknell to only 169. For the most part, 'Nova had its second and third-teams in for most of the second half.

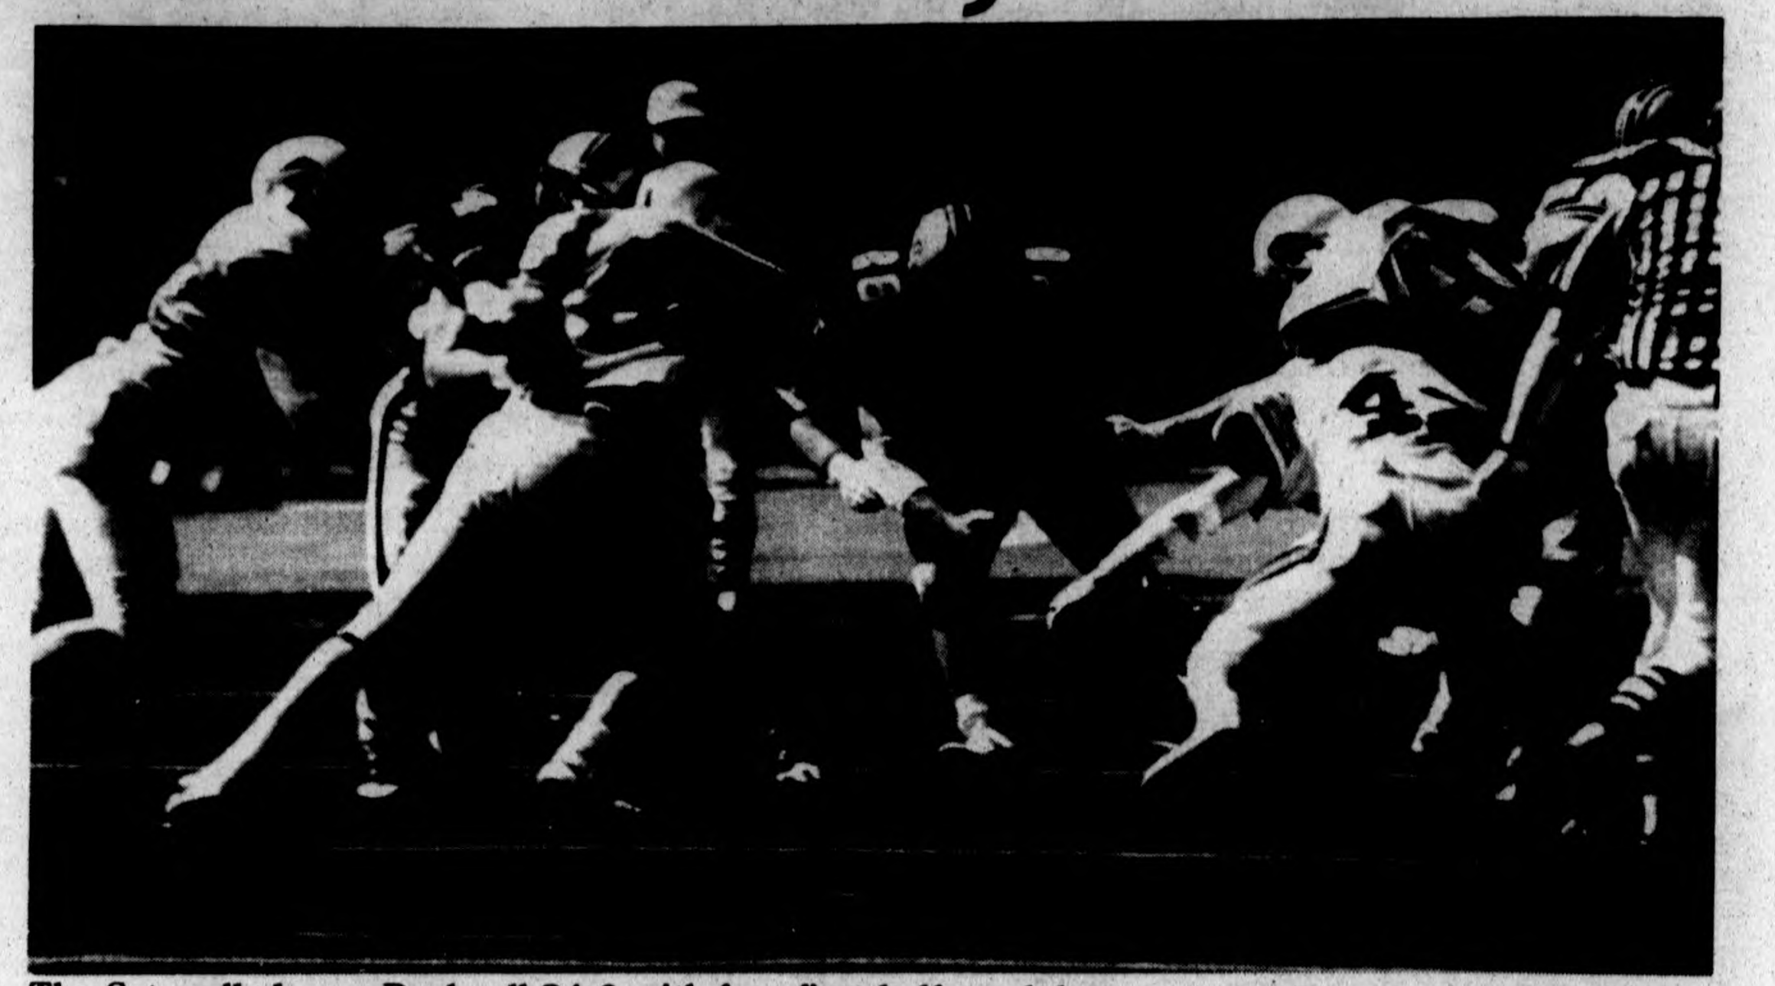
"The offense really took control of the game," said Talley. "When Tom's [Colombo] up, we're up."

And quarterback Colombo, coming off a medicore performance in the opening win over West Chester, made sure that the offense was ready to play, leading the Cats to four consecutive TD's in the first half.

"We had something to prove today," said Colombo, who finished 8 of 11 for 95 yards and two TD's in less than one half of action. "The offense played much more under control and then turned it over to the defense."

The defense, for the second straight week, did not allow a single point and just nine first downs. Surprisingly, Bucknell committed just two turnovers, only one of which led to a Cats' touchdown. Needless to say, the Bison were lucky to escape Villanova with just a 34-point loss.

"These first two wins give us momentum going into Yankee Conference play but there was not a lot of intensity," said Talley. "The electricity was not in the air but now [this week against Richmond] is the time to step it up a notch. And the players know that."



The Cats rolled over Bucknell 34-0 with four first-half touchdowns. The 2-0 Cats entertain Richmond tomorrow at 3 p.m.

One player who stepped it up against Bucknell was backup quarterback Brad Parpan, who directed the Cat offense in the second half. The junior completed 8 of 14 passes for 77 yards and one TD, proving that if anything should happen to Colombo, the Cats will be in good hands. In fact, both the offense and defense featured capable backups that if pressed into service, showed they can do the job. A championship-caliber team usually is one with great depth and the Cats certainly can attest to that.

NOTES: Tomorrow's game against 1-0 Richmond will be at 3 p.m. because of sesquicentennial activities earlier in the day ... Talley captured his 50th vicktory at 'Nova with the Bucknell win. He is now 50-21-1 overall, placing him second in Villanova history for wins ... The Delaware Watch: The Blue Hens won their opener 33-13 over Massachusetts. The anticipated Yankee Conference showdown between the unbeatens is Oct. 17 at Villanova Stadium.

Field Hockey wins 2 of 3; Rea, Thomas lead way

By ALEX SCOFIELD
Staff Reporter

In the midst of a five-game homestand, the Villanova field hockey team slugged it out in three hard-fought contests this week. A 3-2 loss to Michigan was sandwiched between a 3-1 victory over Ursinus College and a 2-1 squeaker over Penn. By week's end, the Wildcats had raised their record to 2-2.

'Nova's first win of the young season came Sept. 8 against the Grizzlies of Ursinus College. Going into the game with an 0-1 record, the Wildcats evened it up in a game that Head Coach Jackie Gerzabek described as "ugly, but a win. It was back and forth, and the [3-1] score doesn't represent the game itself."

Ugly or not, this game was only a contest for the first half. At 9:59 into the period, Villanova co-captain Melissa Rea snuck a feed from sophomore Barbara King into the Ursinus cage. The Villanova lead, however, was short-lived. At 19:57, Ursinus ran a trick corner in which Betsy Laskowski scored from a bizarre angle, tying the game at 1-1.

In the second half, Villanova erupted with two goals in four minutes. Grizzly netminder Hope Arroliga was helpless against a Wildcat corner hit, a smooth feed, a complete stop by Rea, and an overpowering shot by junior Staci Verzera. 'Nova's third goal came when King picked up the ball after a Wildcat corner hit and netted it.

Frustration reigned three days later when the Cats hosted their first-ever contest against Michigan. Regarding the 3-2 loss, Gerzabek said that the Wolverines "outplayed us and outhustled us. We were better than them ... [but] we let down."

Villanova jumped out to an early lead with another early penalty corner kick. Verzera scored her second goal of the season as she screened the corner into the left hand side of the Michigan goal. Wildcat goalie Chrissy Thomas would not give the Wolverines an inch in the first half, stopping a penalty stroke, and going on to notch 20 saves in the game.

With the game tied at one apiece and 15:20 remaining in the second half, Rea capitalized on a rebound and drilled one past Michigan's temporarily-immobilized goalie. From that point on, it was all downhill for the Wildcats, who surrendered goals at 24:35 and 28:16.

The 'Nova stickwomen redeemed themselves with a strong team effort against UPenn Sept. 12. Gerzabek said that the Wildcats "brought it all together, we looked much better." The difference was that they knew when to hold the ball and then they knew when to pass it ... Now they're concentrating on beating the defender and then passing it."

With 5:22 remaining in the first half, junior forward Bree Hawthorne drove in a rebound that had deflected off Quaker goalie Suzanne Pures' pads. Early in the second half, UPenn's Amy Pine tied it up. 'Nova broke the tie with a stellar passing sequence that ended with junior Kim Reed notching the game-winning goal at 13:19 into the half.

"Today was nice," said Gerzabek at the game's conclusion. "We played well, but welet down. You can't let down when youplay Big East schools," referring to upcoming road matches with Providence and Boston College.

The Wildcats tour New England this weekend with games at PC and BC. Their next home game will be in Villanova Stadium against crosstown rival Drexel — Sept. 24 at 3:30 p.m.

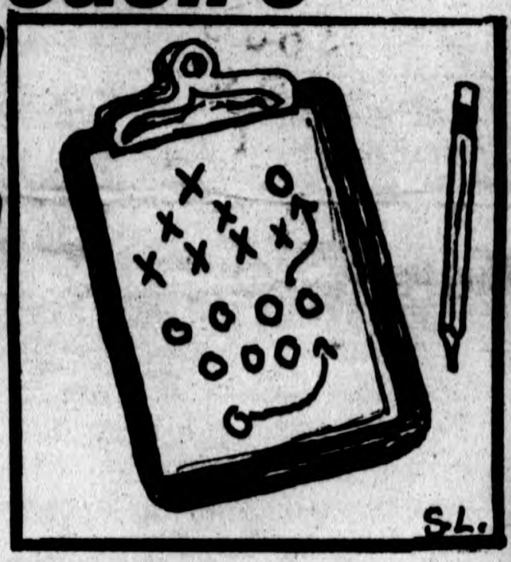
Coach's Corner



This Week: Andy Talley

Editor's Note: The following is the first of a weekly series featuring Villanova head coaches.

By ANDY TALLEY
Head Football Coach

Now that we have beaten West Chester and Bucknell and have a 2-0 record, we are now ready for the Yankee Conference. Richmond comes into town for Parents' Weekend ready to go. They upset James Madison 49-40 this past Saturday. JMU was No. 9 in the country and is a playoff team from last year. It is obvious that Richmond will give us all that we are looking for and more. They have a talented quarterback by the name of Greg Lilly, who threw five touchdown passes against JMU. Their defense had a tough job in containing JMU, which possess one of the best offensive attacks in the country. All in all, Richmond is an up-and-coming team in the Yankee Conference and it will be important for us to play well.

We were able to play a lot of young players in the Bucknell game; and it was good to see Brad Parpan, our second quarterback, really come on and play well. Also, Tom Colombo had an excellent afternoon and is shaping up very nicely at this time.

The passing attack still needs improvement, and that will take a little more time. Defensively, we have shut out two opponents; but we really need to improve. We are thin in a lot of spots, and anymore injuries on defense would really create problems for us. Our great linebacker, Andy Cobaugh, is out for five more weeks; and we're really not sure if he will come back this season. We lost Phil DiMaria, a starting inside linebacker, with a knee injury. At this time, we do not know how serious that injury is. He definitely will not play against Richmond.

The Richmond game should really be exciting — two high-powered offenses colliding head-on. Obviously,` our defense is better than Richmond's; and I hope that will hold us in well for the game.

Fan support for the West Chester game was phenomenal. It was truly an exciting evening. However, the Bucknell game was somewhat of a disappointment. I know that all of you will be out there for the Richmond game since it is Parents' Weekend. We really need your support. At the present time, we do not have a hometown, homefield advantage. Our fans are so quiet. If we are to get any crowd enthusiasm, it has to come from our students. Our football team is the winningest football program in the Yankee Conference. I need your help, and I

The University Senate will meet today at 4 p.m. in the East Lounge of Dougherty. A social hour will be held prior to the regularly scheduled meeting to welcome the newly elected and appointed senators for the 1992-93 academic year.

The meeting will commence with the approval of the minutes of the May 1, 1992, Senate meeting followed by the welcoming of new senators and the reading of official announcements and correspondence, including the following:

- Elections to the Academic Strategic Planning Committee are currently under way. Candidates for this office must be full professors, and all tenured and tenure-track faculty members will be eligible to vote regardless of rank, according to the Senate agenda.
- The Rev. George F. Riley, O.S.A., a Senate member for 18 years, and Dr. Angelo Armenti, Jr., a Senate member for 16-and-a-half years including 4-and-a-half years as chairman, will be commended for their years of service rendered to the Senate, according to the agenda.
- Sheila Stewart, graduate student in the College of Nursing and Erin Friday, an MBA student, are the two graduate appointees to the Academic Policy Dommittee, according to the agenda.

Faculty Council Chairman, Sen. Thomas R. Greene, will propose a motion following the announcements. Also, a resolution stating "that an Outstanding Service Award will be presented annually to a faculty member in recognition of his/her exceptional contributions to the governance and operations of the University" will be announced.

University families participate in Sesquicentennial opening

About 1,200 to 1,500 Villanova family members and alumni took part in the annual Parents' Weekend, Sept. 18-20. This year Parents' Weekend also served as the Sesquicentennial Opening Weekend.

According to Student Activities Director Lucyna Gorski, the Sesquicentennial festivities attracted a larger turnout of parents this year than Parents' Weekends have in the past.

The array of activities on campus included a performance by a Philadelphia Mummers string band outside of the Connelly Center, horse-drawn carriage and trolley tours of the campus and a parade of antique cars.

Parents and students danced "under the stars" on Mendel Field the night of Sept. 28, while some viewed Saturn and its rings in the observatory in Mendel Hall.

The Sesquicentennial Opening Liturgy on Sept. 19, celebrated by Villanova's President, the Rev. Edmund Dobbin, O.S.A., had the highest attendance, Gorski said.

Gorski said that one of the exceptional aspects of the weekend was the involvement of the entire Villanova community in the celebration. Students from Music Activities, the Special Olympics, The Blue Key Society and other volunteers participated in the events, she added.

Aside from all of the activity on campus, most students claimed to be happy just spending time with their families. "I think it's good that they have Parents' Weekend ... my mom and dad probably wouldn't have stopped by if there hadn't been a planned weekend," remarked one freshman.

Gorski said about the Sesquicentennial's kickoff, "I can't think of a better way for it to have opened."

'Nova ranked 2nd

By LARISA EPATKO

The University rose to No. 2 from last year's No. 3 position in U.S. News and World Report's sixth annual rankings of regional colleges and universities.

Villanova also maintained its No. 1 ranking for academic reputation based on other college officials' view of the University.

"We are most pleased because this speaks loudly about others' impressions of Villanova," said the Rev. William McGuire, O.S.A., dean of Enrollment Management.

The 558 institutions covered in the rankings are divided into North, South, Midwest and West. These schools award more than half of their bachelor's degrees in two or more professions, such as business or engineering.

A school's overall rank is determined by a combination of reputational scores and the school's own data. The ranking includes selectivity of the student body, faculty and financial resources, student satisfaction and average SAT/ACT scores.

Villanova ranked 18th for financial resources, which shows an area of improvement, McGuire said. The University is working on a capital campaign to garner $100 million for endowment, he added.

The entire study ranked 1,373 four-year schools with others in their comparable categories. Data about the schools was drawn from 2,527 responding college presidents, deans and admissions

From poverty to prestige: archbishop challenges church

By JENNIFER CASTELLI
News Editor

Most children spend their lives dreaming about fairytales and playing games. George Weakland was one of these children; however, he also had a bigger dream.

He dreamed of a better life. A life free from poverty and a life with God.

Now as Archbishop Rembert George Weakland, O.S.B., of Milwaukee, he has made this dream his way of life. The archbishop received an honorary degree of Doctor of Humane Letters at the University during the Academic Convocation Sept. 22.

Archbishop Weakland has always been an outspoken and sometimes controversial figure in the Roman Catholic Church. He has often been criticised by his peers for being too liberal.

"The word liberal in its original meaning meant free, and I would certainly love to consider myself free," he said.

"We're always striving to be freer and that comes about through our knowledge and our ability to face reality and to have the kind of value system that can respond to the needs of the times. So, I don't mind being labeled liberal if that's what you mean by it," Weakland said.

However, the archbishop believes that it is unfortunate that the word liberal has taken on such a political connotation.

"We've taken these political connotations which are overladen with other meanings and we've applied them also in church and I think that's sad," he said.

Weakland has instituted many changes since his appointment in 1977 by Pope Paul VI. The Archbishop has worked to give women and laypeople more senior positions in the Church, established renewal programs for parishes, dealt more openly with problems affecting minorities and continued ongoing dialogue with other churches.

Weakland is the chairperson of the bishops committee for ecumenism. Ecumenism, as started by Pope John XXIII, is a goal to reunite different religions that have been broken up since as far back as the Reformation.

It is difficult to gauge how far "we have come with ecumenism because it is a very hard thing to measure. Ecumenism doesn't go by degrees but by jumps and plateaus. Right now we are at a plateau, and we are ready to jump," said the Archbishop.

"I have a feeling that God's people are further ahead than the Villanova officially has Homecoming scheduled for Nov. 14, 1992. But for Steve Lappas, homecoming occurred April 14, when the former 'Nova assistant was named head coach of the men's basketball team.

Lappas served as an assistant to former Head Coach Rollie Massimino from 1984-1988. Massimino resigned April 1 to accept the head coaching position at the University of Nevada-Las Vegas.

"I had no question in my mind how much I was going to like Villanova," Lappas said. "It was whether Villanova was going to like me."

Lappas brings to Villanova the same enthusiasm and dedication he demonstrated while head coach of Manhattan from 1988-1992. Under Lappas, the Jaspers steadily improved from a 7-21 mark in his inaugural season to a 25-9 record and the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference (MAAC) regular season championship last year. In doing so, Lappas was selected as the National Association of Basketball Writers District 2 Coach of the Year as well as the New York Metropolitan Coach of the Year.

Peter O'Reilly, sports editor of the Manhattan student paper, said that recruiting is Lappas' strength. He indicated that Lappas worked his players hard and was not afraid to "get in their face." O'Reilly described Lappas as being "almost a clone of Massimino" in terms of coaching style. Lappas stressed defense and often

CHAPEL HILL, N.C.

About 7,000 people attended a rally at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill in support of four black football players' fight for a black cultural center on campus.

Approximately 800 students were led by the players to Chancellor Paul Harden's office Sept. 10. A Nov. 13 deadline was set by the players for Harden to make a public commitment to the center.

Harden had originally rejected the idea because he feared that it would have the appearance of separatism, but last week Harden said he would consider any proposal that showed "openess and receptivity" by all students, said Harden.

Filmmaker Spike Lee commended the players when he spoke at the rally. College athletes who generate money for universities should learn from them, said Lee. "Black athletes, please understand the power that you have," he said.

The four football players feel that their push is not for the construction of a building. It is about power and acknowledging all the black people who used to own the land where the University was constructed.

BOSTON, Mass.

Voters continued to demonstrate their dissatisfaction with incumbent congressman tied to the House check writing scandal during recent primary elections in Massachusetts. Chester G. Atkins, a four-term congressman and member of the powerful House Appropriations Committee was soundly defeated by a 64 percent to 35 percent margin in his efforts to retain his seat in the 5th congressional district. Atkins, who has never held a job outside of politics and never lost an election, incurred voter dissatisfaction in the Merrimack Valley area of his district north of Boston.

Atkins' defeat brings the total number of incumbent congressmen who have lost primary elections this year to 19 and establishes a new record. The old record of 18 incumbents defeated in primary elections in one year has stood for almost 50 years.

HARTFORD, Conn.

In an effort to save lives and multi-million dollar aircraft, the U.S. Air Force is developing a comprehensive computer program to plot the migratory routes of all species in North America.

The programming team has been aptly dubbed with the acronym "BASH," which stands for Bird Aircraft Strike Hazard. The BASH team is developing a computer program called the Bird Avoidance Model (BAM), designed to keep birds and planes as far away from each other as possible.

The Air Force has estimated that more than 3,000 of its aircraft collide with birds around the world each year causing more than $65 million worth of damage.

SARAJEVO, Yugoslavia

The Security Council voted 12-0 to suspend Yugoslavia's voting rights at the General Assembly at the United Nations. This action was done in punishment for Yugoslavia's role in Bosnia's civil war, but first it must be ratified by the General Assembly.

The new Federal Republic of Yugoslavia cannot continue using the membership of the former Socialist Yugoslavia Federation, which included the now independent states of Slovenia, Croatia, Bosnia-Herzegovina and Macedonia, the resolution said.

The new Yugoslavia state "should apply for membership in the U.N. and ... shall not participate in the work of the General Assembly," recommended the Security Council.

American representative Alexander Watson said that the present Yugoslavia was not a continuation of the former and must apply for United Nations' membership.

Milwaukee archbishop receives honorary doctorate

By KATE SZUMANSKI

The Sesquicentennial Academic Convocation was held in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center Sept. 22 at 7 p.m.

University faculty members, led by Associate Vice President for Academic Affairs, Marshal Charles L. Cherry, processed into the Villanova room as the Villanova University Band under the direction of John Dunphy, director of Music Activities, performed various musical selections.

The invocation address was delivered by the Dean of the college of Nursing, M. Louise Fitzpatrick.

Presiding over the program was University President, the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., who welcomed all in attendance.

The Most Rev. Rembert G. Weakland, O.S.B., archbishop of Milwaukee, received the honorary degree of Doctor of Humane Letters and delivered the Convocation address.

The conferral of degree ceremony began with the Rev. Kail C. Ellis, O.S.A., dean of the college of Arts and Sciences, reading of citation and concluded with Dobbin's conferral of the degree.

"In the Confessions, Augustine writes, 'The happy life is joy based on the truth.' Archbishop Weakland exemplifies the happy life by his forthright yet measured stands on many social and doctrinal issues with which the Church is beset. For having borne the burdens of his office with grace and joy and for his quest for the truth which has characterized his multifaceted ministry, Villanova University is privileged to confer on Archbishop Rembert Weakland degree of Doctor of Humane Letters . . . ," said Ellis.

In Weakland's Convocation address, he stressed the importance of a liberal arts education in today's world. "The liberal tradition in education is an integrated one," he said, adding that Villanova University, or any Catholic university in the country, would not be in existence if secular knowledge and discipline were not linked to sacred learning and revealed truth. This synthesis is very important to Catholicism today, said Weakland, adding that "the need to integrate the spiritual for the transcendent into the whole of one's life vision" is of great importance in the world today. "The liberal education tradition should provide the tools to help crack such a vision. It frees one up from one's narrow specialty to see the whole of the human person in this society," said Weakland.

"The free person, the one who has studied the liberal arts, is one who is not exploited by addictive forces, and is thus not prejudiced. Freedom challenges one ... to recognize one's personal limitations and then pushing beyond them," said Weakland, adding that during the 150th anniversary of the University, the Villanova community should renew the vision of education that brings together the whole of the human person and society and does not forbid the transcendent.

"A liberal education is more needed than ever before in our history. It is one of the most important insights in our Catholic tradition. It leads towards shared values and a common search for truth," added Weakland.

The acting director of Campus Ministry, Beth Hassel, P.B.V.M., D.Min., gave the benediction at the end of the ceremony.

All were invited to attend a reception following the program in the Main Lounge and Art Gallery of the Connelly Center.

St. Augustine's Center for the Liberal Arts dedicated in afternoon ceremony

By MEGHAN DONAHUE
Staff Reporter

The newly constructed St. Augustine Center for the Liberal Arts was dedicated and blessed Sept. 22. Students and faculty gathered on the front lawn of the center to witness the ceremony and hear the remarks of Helen K. Lafferty, University vice president and the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, University president.

Their words echoed the principles and ideals of the University as established by St. Augustine. Scripture and gospel readings further emphasized the Christian influence on Villanovan scholarship.

In her welcome, Lafferty spoke of a Villanova academic tradition "steeped in the centrality of the liberal arts" and the role of the Center in fulfilling this tradition. She noted the sense of community the new building will generate in drawing together faculty, students, and staff for study and contemplation.

The importance of a liberal arts education, Lafferty said, lies in the training of the mind to "enrich the habits of the heart."

Dobbin's dedication remarks followed a reading from St. Augustine defining scholarly objectives in harmony with Christ's teachings, "Contemplation of Truth and the Grace of Charity." Dobbin applied the goals of St. Augustine to the construction of the Center and its purpose. In his reflections, he referred to the building as "a statement that might remake Villanova" and a

Professor Jones dies at 52

By ELIZABETH BARSZCZEWESKI
Assistant News Editor

The Villanova community experienced a great loss Sept. 18 when James L. Jones, 52, assistant professor in the University's Communication Arts department, died at Chester-Crozer Medical-ical Center.

Jones received his Ph.D. from Pennsylvania State University where he studied classical and medieval-Renaissance rhetorical theory. Jones, a Wisconsin native, went on to teach various courses concentrating in rhetoric and public address at many universities from 1962 to the present.

Jones also played an integral part in bringing a debate team from Oxford University to compete against the Villanova Debate team in recent years.

"A lot of us in the department are feeling a great sense of shock," said Dr. Susan Mackey-Kallis of Communication Arts and a colleague of Jones.

Mackey-Kallis compiled some memories and stories from some of Jones' colleagues in the department to be included in the memorial program. "Jim was a master of the non-sequiter. I never knew what he was going to say, from a joke to a self-deprecating story to some strange fact. But I do know that, invariably, I would walk away from the conversation feeling better than I did before I talked with him," said Dr. Ed Lourdin.

Loretta Chiaverni, a secretary for the department, wrote "Jim always had a way of making my day special, either by a kind gesture or word. I feel honored to have known him."

"Jim was a wonderful teacher — inspiring, engaging, thorough, — deeply compassionate and concerned about the progress of his students. Students rated him among the best in the department," said Dr. Marguerite M. Farley, chair of the Communication Arts department.

"The department is very dedicated to seeing that his work continues. There is an article which we are going to have published and a manuscript for a book he has written which we are going to have published. We feel this is very important so he can be remembered for his work," said Mackey-Kallis.

The memorial service was held on Sept. 23 in St. Mary Chapel. The Rev. Jack O'Rourke, O.S.A., officiated. Donations may be made to the Falvey Memorial Library in the name of the James L. Jones Memorial Fund for Rhetoric. All donations made will go toward the purchase of volumes of rhetoric.

Sesquicentennial minutes

Anniversary Celebrations

The observance of Villanova's sesquicentennial has aroused curiosity about earlier anniversaries. The first such observance came in 1892-1893 when the college held its 50th anniversary, or Golden Jubilee.

There was much to celebrate about the first half-century: the completion of the College Building (Alumni Hall), the erection of a new church and gymnasium, the enlargement of the Villanova monastery (former Belle-Air mansion) and the growing reputation of the institution.

In honor of the jubilee, the Rev. Thomas C. Middleton, O.S.A., college librarian and former president, published his Historical Sketch of Villanova. The college also acquired a powerful new organ for the church and began issuing its first periodical, The Villanova Monthly.

A new iron gate, with the letters VILLANOVA COLLEGE spelled out in gold, marked the entrance to campus.

The climax of the jubilee year came at the June commencement: The buildings were decorated with American flags, papal colors and the flags of various countries. The exercises took place in a special tent which measured 40 by 100 feet.

Villanova's 75th anniversary in 1917-1918 came as the campus and nation at large were preoccupied with World War I. Consequently, there were no ambitious plans for the Diamond Jubilee. The most important event of the year was a commencement address by vice-president of the United State, Thomas R. Marshall, who also received an honorary degree.

Villanova anticipated its centennial in 1942-1943 with elaborate planning, but American participation in World War II forced the college to curtail several activities. Nevertheless, the Villanova Centennial was a great success. The celebration began on Sept. 20, 1942 with a Solemn Pontifical Mass, celebrated by Cardinal Dennis Dougherty, archbishop of Philadelphia, and attended by 3,000 people.

The students held a glittering Centennial Ball on Jan. 15, 1943, in the Villanova Field House. The college yearbook, The Belle Air, presented a pictorial history of the venerable institution. The year-long celebration ended with Centennial Convocation on May 3, 1943.

Villanova's next anniversary, the 125th, came in 1967-1968, with the United States again at war, this time in Vietnam. The anniversary was inaugurated with a Solemn Pontifical Mass on Sept. 13, presided over by John Cardinal Krol, archbishop of Philadelphia.

On April 5, 1968, there was a 125th anniversary dinner, followed by an academic convocation the next day, which was attended by nearly 100 presidents or representatives from colleges and universities throughout the nation.

Villanova celebrates its Sesquicentennial with a rich tradition of such observances. While remaining faithful to its past, it also looks forward to an even more successful future, replete with its own celebrations of past achievements.

Students help make food choices

Have you ever been reading the label on a box of cereal and wondering just what reduced fat or low fat means? Well now you can stop guessing, thanks to some Villanova students and the American Heart Association.

On Sept. 19, 24 and 25 some volunteer students from the Medical Health Psychology class taught by Dr. Larry Starr will take part in the "Just Food Festival." Starr is the chair of the American Heart Association, Main Line division, which is sponsoring the project.

The students spend class time learning how to read labels and will be given credit for participating in the project. Students will be at the Food Fair in Wynnewood and the Acme Market in Devon to answer questions.

The students will help consumers read the labels of what they are buying so that they will not be misled by such lines as "reduced fat" and "low cholesterol." They will also give the shoppers helpful tips about how to read the vitamin and calorie charts on the backside of most products.

Many consumers do not know how to properly read the labels on the food they buy, and as a result they are buying things they believe are healthy but may be bad for them, said Starr.

Newly renovated church dedicated in ceremony

By JANET KEMPLE
Staff Reporter

The newly-renovated St. Thomas of Villanova was officially dedicated Sept. 21.

The ceremonies began with a blessing of the baptismal font, led by the Rev. Anthony Genovese, O.S.A., pastor of the Villanova Parish community. This was followed by a Mass of blessing for the entire church, presided over by the Rev. Francis X. McGuire, O.S.A., past president of Vllanova. The evening culminated with an illumination of the church and its golden crosses.

The theme of the celebration was unity, as the University and parish gathered together to assist in the planning and carrying-out of the Liturgy. Co-ordinator the Rev. John Konwerski, O.S.A., said, "This is exciting ... the parish and campus communities are finally coming together."

> This is exciting . . . the parish and campus communities are finally coming together.
> Rev. John Konwerski, O.S.A.

Many of those who attended the dedication did so out of a sense of reverence for the church and a feeling of spirit for the anniversary celebration. "I feel that it is an important part of the Sesquicentennial," one woman said. "I've attended Mass here many times, and I'm really impressed with the improvements in the church."

The Rev. Shawn Tracy, O.S.A., said in his homily that "St. Thomas would have supported the renovation of the church." He cited Thomas' love for the poor and oppressed and noted the "increased accessibility to the church" for the physically disabled.

St. Thomas of Villanova Church was originally opened in 1887 and was closed for the 1991-1992 school year to undergo a complete facelift. The renovated church also has refinished stained glass windows and increased seating capacity.

Campus dance raises money for Ronald McDonald camp

By DANIELLE SANTUCCI
Staff Reporter

A dance sponsored by Student Nurses Association of Pennsylvania (SNAP) and the Pre Law Society was held Sept. 23 in the Butler Annex to benefit the Ronald McDonald camp for children with cancer. The goal was to raise enough money to send two children to the camp.

The camp, run by Children's Hospital of Philadelphia and the Philadelphia Ronald McDonald House, provides a vacation for children both receiving and not receiving treatment for cancer, and those who have completed their treatment. The camp allows the children to relate to others in the same situation.

The cost for one camper to attend is $400. The children receive a free week of chemotherapy, a lifetime of memories and the chance just to be kids.

The camp started in 1985 with an enrollment of only 35 campers. In 1992, 125 attended and enjoyed regular camp activities such as fishing, boating, dances and theater. Over 80 staff members volunteer their time.

Children from ages 8 to 18 attend the camp in Lake Como, Penn. The camp runs for one week a year, usually the third week in August.

According to Barb Mullen, head of the fundraiser and counselor at the camp, the children are "walking doctors. They are very knowledgeable about their illness. It's a very meaningful week for the campers."

There is also a good showing of Villanova students at the camp. This summer, five students from the University donated their time as counselors.

The dance served as a study break for students. Music was provided by WXVU (89.1 FM) and free pizza and soda were provided by Garrett Hill Pizza and Rosemont Beverage. There was also a $15 door prize drawing for Flowers on the Avenue. All proceeds went to the Ronald McDonald camp.

Tax bill may face veto

By College Press Service

A House bill that would rescind a 17 percent tax on graduate and professional students' stipends, scholarships and fellowships faces little chance of passing this year because of Congress' reluctance to eliminate taxes.

"It's all over for this year. The president is talking about vetoing anything that looks like a tax increase," said Thomas Linney, director of government relations for the Council of Graduate Schools. "My fear is that the political season is upon us."

The 1986 Tax Reform Act put a 17 percent tax on all scholarships and other money awarded to post-baccalaureate students in graduate and professional schools. The Internal Revenue Service is expected to begin actively enforcing the tax this year, officials said.

Revenues from the tax was expected to produce about $550 million from 1986-91, if the tax had been fully enforced. Scholarship money used for tuition and fees, books and supplies remains tax-free, while money used for living expenses and travel is taxed under the act.

"We opposed the bill at the time because we knew it would be a hardship on graduate students," Linney said. "Congress, in its fervor for its tax reform, saw college students as privileged people. But we know graduate students live on very little money."

The bill, co-sponsored by U.S. Rep. Tom Lewis (R-Fla.) and the National Association of Graduate and Professional Students (NAGPS), was introduced in March and has not been scheduled for a hearing yet.

"Perceptions are that graduate students are wealthy. We aren't. I don't know if it's anti-academic or what, but it's said," said Joy Ward, executive coordinator for NAGSP. "The tax is not on a wealthy segment of the population. To tax the bottom population is absolutely ridiculous."

Now, Ward said, there are more non-traditional students going to graduate school who can't rely on their parents for financial assistance, and they are competing for stipends, scholarships and assistantships from an ever-shrinking pool of available funds.

There are approximately 1.8 million graduate and professional students in post-baccalaureate programs. There are no estimates available on the number of students receiving financial assistance through awarded monies.

"There was a lot of funding available, so many undergraduates went right away because money was available," Ward said. "We're seeing less money now, so people are now not going to graduate school."

Many graduate programs prohibit students from holding secondary jobs, so they either have to break rules or depend on loans, stipends and other awards, or savings, to pay for school. That's why 17 percent tax hurts, said Richard Knaub, who is working on his Ph.D. in zoology at Clemson University in South Carolina.

"It's a major devastation. I haven't gone on food stamps yet, but I'm eligible. What disturbs me is that when we as a country do not value education enough to support it, then I see us slipping into a second-rate status as far as the nation goes," he said.

"The rules say you can't have a second job if you're on an assistantship. Where does that leave graduate students? In my department, most students have second jobs," he said.

Linney, with the Council of Graduate Schools, said the rationale for the 17 percent tax was "spiritual center of liberating learning."

Like Lafferty, Dobbin spoke of the significance of liberal arts at Villanova, stressing that "liberal learning" is broader than ever, and should include practical disciplines as well. Such an education should respond to the needs of society, he said, eliminating the classic dichotomy of knowing and doing. Dobbin closed his address by asking the audience to look back 14 centuries to St. Augustine's vision of devotion to unity and the search for truth.

The Center, four-and-one-half story building made up of over 200 faculty offices, seminar rooms, and other study spaces, was completed in late July.

Shared spaces within the building allow faculty, staff and students to come into contact with each other, Dobbin said. In the same manner, its external architectural quality complements and contributes to the aesthetic appearance of the surrounding campus, again giving identity to the community, he added.

Michigan readies for debates

By College Press Service

Officials at Michigan State University continued to work on a Sept. 22 presidential debate despite President Bush's refusal to commit to the event.

Democratic presidential candidate Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton said he will appear at the nationally televised debate in East Lansing, Mich., whether Bush shows up or not.

A spokeswoman with Bush's campaign said no final decision has been reached if Bush will appear at the debate. "As soon as we know, we'll let the press know," the spokeswoman said. "Nothing has been decided."

Republican officials rejected the format of the first debate, which involves one moderator and the two candidates debating for 90 minutes. Clinton has accepted all terms established bythe Commission on Presidential Debates, a non-partisan organization based in Washington, D.C.

Meanwhile, the commission planned to set up equipment and begin work on final details a week in advance of the debate on the Michigan State campus.

"We are still progressing as if it will still be held," said Bob Neuman, the commission's media director.

Other debates have been scheduled in October between Clinton and Bush at the University of San Diego and the University of Richmond in Virginia. A debate between Vice President Dan Quayle and U.S. Sen. Al Gore of Tennessee, Clinton's running mate, has been scheduled in Louisville, KY.

Each site has to raise $500,000 to cover expenses, and Michigan State officials have raised about 80 percent of the amount, said Nancy Brent, the school's on-campus debate coordinator. Most of the money has been raised from the East Lansing community and corporate sponsors.

The school applied to the commission to host the debate in June 1991 and received the go-ahead in August.

"It's the first debate, so we will get lots of exposure for the university," Brent said. "It's prestigous."

There are at least 60 university employees working to prepare for the debate, and local officials expect the one-night event to pump $1 million to $2 million into the local economy. Between 1,500 and 2,000 journalists are expected to cover the event from East Lansing, Brent said.

Despite the fact the debate is still up in the air, campus officials are putting together press kits, working on security issues and setting up the debate platform at the Wharton Center for Performing Arts, where the candidates are supposed to meet.

Gore, speaking on CNN's "Larry King Live" earlier in September, accused Bush of showing "contempt for the American people" by spurning the debate.

"I don't think George Bush wants to defend the disastrous economic record, and I think people know it," he said.

Mary Matalin, deputy campaign director for the Bush campaign, told the State News, Michigan State's campus newspaper, that Bush has not made any final decisions on the debates. "There will be debates. When and where we haven't decided yet," she said.

Serrano Photograph Sparks Debate

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — The student government association at the University of Alabama at Birmingham has objected to the purchase of a controversial photograph by the school's art department, saying the money should be spent to support students' needs.

The art department faculty paid $4,200 for a photograph titled "Pieta II" by Andres Serrano for the school's permanent collection. The money was raised through private donations. The photo depicts Michelangelo's statue "The Pieta" in a tank filled with urine and cow blood.

The university's student government voted 10-2 to urge the department to return the photograph and use donations to support student needs. Part of the resolution states, "that since many students are suffering the effects of budgetary restraint, such expenditures are frivolous as well as offensive." The resolution also states that the photograph, "despite its artistic significance, may be offensive to many."

Serrano, based in New York, took the controversial photograph "Piss Christ," which sparked nationwide debate because the photo depicts an image of Christ in a jar of urine.

Sonja Rieger, acting chairwoman of the art department, defended the purchase.

"We certainly, as educators, had read about how controversial his work is," she said. "The predominant feeling was that there was a real and profound interest in it. The photograph is breaking barriers in terms of transforming meaning in the materials used. A superficial reading is that he is denigrating Christ and Mary, but on a deeper analysis, it affirms Christ."

The department, which received the photograph this winter, has no plans yet to display it in the university's gallery, Rieger said.

Rolling Stone Endorses Clinton

NEW YORK — For the first time in 20 years, Rolling Stone Magazine has endorsed a presidential candidate.

A portrait of Bill Clinton posed against a blue sky appears on the cover of the Sept. 17 "college special" issue. Inside, an editorial by the magazine's editor and founder Jann Wenner endorses the Clinton-Gore ticket.

"I plan to vote for Bill Clinton and Al Gore with feelings of great hope and excitement. It is time to end the greed and the cruelty of the Reagan era, to rid ourselves of the paralysis and meanness of George Bush and to obliterate the prospect of Dan Quayle as president," he writes.

The biweekly magazine, a favorite among the 18-34 age group, touts a paid circulation of 1.2 million copies per issue and features slick photos and stories on everything from rock 'n' roll to date rape to profiles of glitzy movie stars.

In addition to Wenner's editorial, the magazine features an interview with Clinton at Doe's Eat Place in Little Rock, Ark., by veteran political writers Hunter S. Thompson, William Greider, P.J. Rourke and Wenner.

The last presidential candidate to be endorsed by Rolling Stone was George McGovern in 1972.

released evaluation reports of each standing committee of the Seante. These evaluation reports are drafted every three years.

The Academic Policy Committee was found to have "adequately performed its function," according to the evaluation of the Academic Policy Committee. Weaknesses of the committee included "the large and unwieldly size of the committee, a lack of regular and frequent meetings, lack of effective communication with some schools and lack of preparation by committee members."

The Rules and Review Committee has advised the committee "to effectively utilize sub-committees and to effectively organize regular meetings with previously distributed and set agenda," according to the evaluation.

"The Athletic Advisory Committee has met its responsibilities with efficiency and effectiveness," according to the evaluation of the Athletic Advisory Committee. The evaluation suggested that this committee "establish meeting times which will accommodate the schedules of all its members, particularly at a time convenient for student members," according to the evaluation.

The Rules and Review Committee found that the Executive Committee "performed its function exceptionally well . . . and has met its responsibilities in a superior fashion, " according to the evaluation of the Executive Committee.

The Rules and Review Committee did not find any major weaknesses in the operation of the Executive Committee, but has recommended that the committee "communicate clearly to all University constituencies ... and be more active in oversight of subcommittees and Senate committees in general," according to the evaluation.

bishops and that they would jump faster but that's ok," he added.

The churches have gotten past the initial stage of getting to know and trust each other, the "tea and crumpets stage," Weakland said. It is now time for the tough questions to be raised such as what is needed to have unity and what kind of pluralism would there be in unity, he added.

The archbishop is seen by some as a troublemaker but by most as a visionary. "I see myself as someone who does strive for change but appreciates the best of the tradition at the same time," Weakland said.

The archbishop is also known for talking frankly about complex issues that plague the Church today such as the ordination of women, contraception and abortion.

"The sexual issues are probably those that divide the Church most today," said Weakland.

He believes that the Church should not completely change their opinions on these issues, but that instead they should recognize the need for a re-examination of existing beliefs.

"You have to be consistent in your moral norms," the archbishop said.

"The position of the Church might seem strange to outsiders. We tend to be rigorous in our norms and very open in our forgiveness," he said.

This is a somewhat paternalistic view, he said, but there is some wisdom in it.

"We all need high ideals and I hope the Church doesn't relax on giving people something to strive for ... I wouldn't want to see the Church just completely and totally change all of its policies. We have to be consistent and if we do change anything, it has to be for a deep and justified reason," said Weakland.

"We're slowly getting more knowledge of the human person which we didn't have before and so I think the Church has to keep that into account," he said. But, there is still so much about human beings that is unknown, he added.

The archbishop also believes that the celibacy of priests is an important factor in the decrease in the number of vocations to priesthood and that someday that could be changed.

"I think that a lot of young men drop out of seminary because they have too great a respect for the priesthood and celibacy in a sense that they don't want to assume something that they can't fulfill," he said.

"One shouldn't take up a commitment of that sort lightly and maybe today more than ever," he added.

There are not enough priests to handle the amount of work out there, Weakland said. "We're at a point now where we won't be able to continue the sacramental aspects of our Church without more vocations, and I don't expect a great upswing," he said.

The decrease in vocations to priesthood has forced the Church to examine the role of layministries.

"I see all these volunteers, younger people dedicating a year, two years, three years of their lives to special projects and in a way that's how religious life got started. So, I'm not totally pessimistic," the archbishop said.

Throughout the archbishop's career, he has travelled extensively to all parts of the globe including Africa, South America, Asia and Europe.

"I think the thing that hit me the most when I traveled was the poverty around the world," Weakland said. "It's very sad. One sees great progress in some nations, like India, and then Bangledesh right next door is way behind," he said.

The archbishop also noted there there are many differences between the American Catholic Church and others around the world. The most obvious differences are the external expressions as a result of various cultures, but the basic values are the same everywhere, he said.

"There are remarkable differences out there, but strangely enough it didn't matter where I was, I felt at home," he added.

Weakland was born in 1927 and grew up in Patton, a small town in Western Pennsylvania. From a very early age, he excelled in music and academics.

"My mother was very bright and had the warmest intellectual curiosity," said Archbishop Weakland. "The dictionary was never closed in my house ... and I'm sure I picked up a lot from her.

"I also think it has to do with poverty," he said. "One has to excel in what one has ... I've always had an innate curiosity."

Among his many accomplishments, the archbishop received a master of science in music from the Julliard School of Music in 1954 and he is fluent in several languages.

His father died when he was a child, but he found a friend in the priest at his hometown parish. This relationship greatly influenced Weakland's decision to enter the priesthood.

"The pastor at my hometown parish became kind of a role model to me after the death of my father. I'm sure that was very much an important part of my wanting to be a priest," he said.

However, the archbishop found that there was more to being a priest than just wanting to be one. "I always say that the reasons that bring someone in are not the reasons that keep them there. So in time one learns that there are other reasons and motivations," Weakland said.

"For me, being a Benedictine and a priest was just a good combination," he added.

A Benedictine monk, he served as Archabbot at St. Vincent Archabbey in Latrobe, Pa., from 1963 to 1967, and as abbot Primate of the Benedictine Order from 1967 to 1977, according to a program from the University's Academic Convocation.

directors.

Worcester Polytechnic Institute (Mass.) took the No. 1 position for northern universities for the second consecutive year. Fairfield University (Conn.) ranked after Villanova in the third position, and Alfred University (N.Y.) was No. 4.

This year's U.S. News and World Report poll focused on financial challenges facing American colleges brought on by the country's recession.

Decreasing endowment was the cause for most financial burdens for 54 percent of the respondents. Fewer families are paying the cost of higher education, according to 85 percent of those surveyed.

To lessen financial burdens, 98 percent of schools are planning to raise tuition and fees, while 45 percent plan to reduce nonacademic student services, such as counseling and health care.

Different opinions broaden horizons

"Why did you print something like that?" people often ask regarding pieces in our editorial section. The criticism comes from both the left and the right. We received two comments on last week's issue that require some attention.

An anonymous student approached us after reading Mike Marano's commentary supporting George Bush. He was angry that we included an article that he called "mere political rhetoric." In fact, he said that Marano's piece was unsubstantiated and its publication was "unwarranted."

Likewise, we received a letter from Cyrus Sharer (see page 10) that questioned our use of Ellen Goodman's syndicated columns. She is a "major voice" in a culture war against Catholicism, he writes. Why are we spending money to purchase her work, he asks, when we could be receiving columns from people like William F. Buckley?

Questions like these force us to define our role as the campus newspaper. Certainly, we are in a unique position — influenced by both our Catholic heritage and a commitment to academic inquiry. We work consciously within the terms of the University's Mission Statement, and also attempt to provide a forum for the varied opinions of and about our community.

Although sometimes you might beg to differ, our goal is to be neither a liberal nor conservative medium. To the student criticizing Marano, we think that you have every right to be concerned about his statements. Just raise your voice in objection. Write a letter to the editor. Don't merely tell us it did not deserve to be published for politically correct reasons.

Likewise to Cyrus Sharer, you have every right to question Goodman's intentions. We thank-you for your letter. But you seem to say that anyone with opinions different from our Mission Statement should "move on." How is this part of academic exploration?

Not only do the people in our community deserve to be heard, they also need to hear the opinions of others. That way, issues are debated, minds are changed and horizons are broadened.

Friends let friends think for themselves

It appears the College Republicans hope to be the most laughable organization on the Villanova campus. The group posted flyers around the University this week telling students, "Friends don't let friends vote Democrat." With yet another close-minded proclamation, the College Republicans have displayed their incompetency. While the flyer may have been produced with humorous intentions, it promotes the dangerous ideas of peer pressure, conformity and ignorance.

Last fall during Homecoming, the College Republicans spewed veiled threats under the title "Concerned Students of Villanova." The group questioned the multicultural requirements of the new core curriculum and stated that multiculturalism "rationalized homosexuality and abortion" and breached the principles upon which Villanova was founded.

The College Republicans did not learn their lesson. With the "Friends" flyer, they again paint themselves as intolerant of opposing views and beliefs. They promote peer pressure and conformity. To vote for someone because your friend does is stupid and unfortunate.

Ignorance is dangerous. Just because a candidate is Republican (or Democrat) does not make him/her the better choice. Party allegiance is not the issue; competency is. Unfortunately, the College Republicans do not live up to such standards.

Parents thanked, song questioned

To the Editor:

As seniors, we begin to look around and take notice of those people and things which have become essential parts of our lives. It is not as if we see them for the first time, but our appreciation of the obvious increases dramatically. All of a sudden, we realize how good things really are.

For three years, we have been close friends with the same group, sharing the good times, the bad times, and the in-between times. At first, we had no choice with whom we lived but what has blossomed since then are friendships which know no bounds. As children, our parents knew not only our friends, but their families. As collegians, the possibility of our families gathering seemed slim to none.

You know their names, see their pictures and hear their stories; but are not able to spend time with them. This past weekend, Villanova provided that opportunity with Parents' Weekend. For us, a Floridian and a Pennsylvanian, it was the last chance for our parents to meet before graduation. It was an outstanding weekend.

This letter serves as a tribute to our school, our parents and our friends. Villanova has provided the opportunity for our growth: emotionally, mentally, socially and intellectually. Our parents have placed before us the world of higher education and have sacrificed to give it to us.

They have innstilled in us a strong moral and ethical foundation which we have found easy to build upon at Villanova. They made us proud and happy this weekend because we realize who they are and what they have done for us. Our friends have helped us to create a home at Villanova. With them we share our lives completely, which makes us feel that it was fate that brought us together.

This letter is a thank you to all those people. The people who have allowed us to become who we are, and guide us to become who we want to be.

To the Editor:

Well, the 150th year of Villanova University has arrived. We started recently with a wonderful weekend of celebration. At almost every sesquicentennial event two things are certain — a great display of the pride we all share in our university and the singing of our alma mater.

However, what version of this meaningful song have you been listening to? Did you hear the verse that, as printed in the Blue Book states, "Loyal heirs of Villanova, Sing a hymn of praise?" Or, was it the so-called "official" verse commemorating the sesquicentennial, "Loyal sons of Villanova, Sing a hymn of praise?"

Wording the alma mater with the exclusionary term "sons" is equal to saying that women do not really contribute in any significant way to the life at Villanova.

Women have made, and are making significant contributions to the Villanova community. The least the university can do is to mandate that "loyal heirs" be the only "official" version of the alma mater. We all share a great deal of respect and love for Villanova and for its rich tradition. It is time that all the daughters and sons of Villanova receive the recognition that is overdue.

Police harass student

To the Editor:

You may be tired of hearing from students who complain about their experiences with the Radnor police, but there is a specific reason for my letter.

I was having a party at my off-campus residence Sept. 16. Although it was not very crowded, the Radnor police decided to break it up anyway.

As I walked out my back door, I noticed that a friend of mine was being questioned by two police officers. It was apparent that he was being cited for underage drinking. I felt it was necessary to find out what was happening to my friend, and to see if I would be needed to bail him out.

As I approached, the officer who was not questioning my friend confronted me. He stated if I did not leave I would be arrested for disorderly conduct.

I asked, once again, if my friend would need my help. All of a sudden, the officer slapped handcuffs on me. I was shocked, and I asked if he had any justification for doing this. His only response was that if I didn't keep quiet, he would file additional charges against me. Throughout this entire episode I had remained calm, and I was neither belligerent nor rude.

This situation made me believe that the Radnor police have a personal resentment for Villanova students. Furthermore, I realized that this issue needs to be more seriously addressed by the University.

The University must take a leading role in making sure that this resentment ends.

COMMENTARY

What if the DSA and Villanovans for Life merged?

By JOSEPH BETZ

Two Peace and Justice student groups, the Democratic Socialists of America (DSA) and the Villanovans for Life (VLF), quarrelled last spring. The DSA put up posters inviting students to the "March for Women's Live" in Washington, and the VLF insisted that pro-choice advocacy was out of place in a Catholic university.

It's a shame that there is antipathy between the two groups. I value what each group stands for and value it to such a degree that I have supported each with some vigor in the past. For 10 years I was moderator for Villanovans for Life. When there was an exploratory meeting announced several years ago, a meeting to discuss founding our own campus DSA group, I attended. I praised the student initiative and encouraged them to go ahead. I assured them that the national DSA's endorsement of abortion was no necessary part of socialism. They rewarded me for my support by inviting me to give a talk to the group soon after it was formed.

> It's a shame that there is antipathy between the two groups. I value what each stands for and I have supported each with some vigor in the past.

What I value about each group is the way each supplements and remedies the weakness of the other. I thereby propose to them that the two groups merge. The resulting Democratic Villanovans for Socialistic Life, or some such name, would look like this.

They would both be certifiably Catholic and Christian. If Christ came so that all may have life and have it more abundantly, the VFL influence would protect life to birth and the DSA influence would foster the human fulfillment an abundant life promises. The VFL understands what the right to life means up until birth. But the DSA understands that, contrary to presidents Reagan and Bush, the right to life does not end at birth. The VFL knows that human life is left helpless before birth by defective government, the DSA knows that human life in our growing number of poor is left helpless after birth by defective government.

DSA's excellence is to know about abundant life. They want every child born into a society solicitous to satisfy every human need. Their socialism would foster that human flourishing which comes with decent jobs and economic adequacy for all. The child would have two parents who could afford him or her because they have steady work, government guaranteed health care, decent housing. The socialists know best about family values and would-be parents would have far fewer temptations to, or excuses for, abortion. The temptations toward abortion due to oppressive social structures would be gone. As Dorothy Day used to say, we need to transform our economy into one which makes it easier to be good.

But there are other temptations to abortion besides the joblessness, homelessness, lack of medical care and child care, and slum living of our present social structure. The other temptations are personal ones more familiar to the upper-middle class college student. These are the temptations which people bring upon themselves by personal irresponsibility, for instance, of the college woman who wants fully adult sex but is childish in refusing to accept its consequences. This is the irresponsibility of the one who is so ashamed of having become pregnant while still a student, still young and still in a child's role in her parents' family, that she conceals her mistake and destroys her embryo or fetus rather than accept the shame. Her reputation is intact at the cost of her offspring's life. Maybe she was not strong enough to say no to her boyfriend but she can thunder a quick and disastrous no to her fetus.

Here is VFL's excellence — accepting sexual responsibility and challenging others to accept it, especially those who would escape responsibility through abortion. I do not think that all VFL members always get the mechanics of successful challenging quite right. I think that they kid themselves when they credit themselves with "rescuing" a child by appearing at an abortion clinic on Saturday to block a woman's entrance to it for a few hours. That woman knows that the demonstrators will be back at school or work come Monday, so the baby saved Saturday is lost Monday when the demonstrators are gone. But even if obtrusive, the harsh encounter of pro-life's "sidewalk counseling" outside the abortion clinic does force the woman intent upon abortion to reconsider her decision, to defend it, to hear possibly unexpected criticisms of it, to accept responsibility. Here is the political conservative's strength — he or she wants us to take full responsibility for our previous and future actions. If you are going to have sex, accept responsibility for its consequences so that they bring no harm to any of those involved.

So DSA knows about society's role in providing support for all weak and needful conceived humans, but appears not to know individual responsibility for the conceiving of the human, or of the weak and needful state of the conceptus. And VFL knows about responsibile, personal sexual conduct, but appears not to know about providing support for all born humans, the natus (if I have my Latin straight). So each remedies the other's weakness and the two groups should merge.

If DSA and VFL do merge into my proposed DVFSL, I know a good moderator for them. She is an assertive, pro-life, socialistic feminist. I heard her talk at the Chestnut Hill Friends Meeting several years ago, though she is thoroughly Catholic. She is Maria Teresa Tula, a Salvadoran who had been organizing her nation's oppressed for COMRADES, inspiring them to confront the oppressive government President Reagan was keeping in power against the will of the majority of the Salvadoran people. Soldiers from that government had arrested, imprisoned and tortured her several times to try to scare her out of her "socialistic" activities.

One of those times she was raped by several soldiers and became pregnant. She had a 3 or 4-year-old boy with her as she spoke to us to beg for help for the popular movement she represented. After her talk ended, I went up to her and asked her if the child with her was conceived in the rape. She unselfconsciously, matter of factly said yes as she gave him a hug. It is true that abortion is foreign to Salvadoran, Catholic culture, but that woman had no feeling towards that child that I could detect other than love and protection. He was a gift of God to her no matter what harm the child's father has done, no matter who the boy's father was. She accepted the child but she would not accept the version of repressive capitalism which the U.S. wanted for her country. Though she was chosen for the Robert F. Kennedy Human Rights Award in 1984, she was denied asylum here by the Reagan Administration, even after the torture and rapes. But she labors on for her cause, a cause I propose to the new DVFSL to study and imitate.

Joseph Betz is a professor of philosophy at Villanova. He is the former moderator of Villanovans for Life, and he considers himself a socialist.

Weights need repair

To the Editor:

Villanova proclaims itself as a place where a student can exercise both mentally and physically in a safe and modern environment. Signs of this are seen all over campus: the restructuring of the core curriculum, construction of the new liberal arts center, renovations in Tolentine, the resurfacing of the football field, the refinishing of the Field House floor, etc. There is however, one blaring anomaly, the Field House weight room.

Unsafe conditions exist in the Field House weight room. I know that I am not the first to say so. The following occurrence should be sufficiently illustrative. Last spring, an obviously frayed and stretched belt on a machine was eventually replaced only after it broke, letting a guy get hit on the head with 150 pounds of force.

The University spends so much money on most of its facilities. Can't Villanova spend a little of that money to reward the many people who want to keep themselves in shape with an adequate and safe weight room?

Reasons Clinton should be the next president

By FRANK SCHNEIDER

The 1992 presidential election is now only two months away and the nation is finally realizing that a change is needed in the White House. The Republicans want you to believe that they are advocates of change this year. But; how can one have change with the same party and policies that have been managing the country for the last 12 years?

The facts make it obvious to me that Clinton deserves to be the next president of the United States.

The Republicans here at Villanova are looking for "... someone who has proposals already devised for issues such as health care, welfare, reform and education." Thank goodness that there is a candidate who embodies this characteristic. George Bush says emphatically, "Government is too big and spends too much ... that is where we will start!" President Bush does not seem to realize that 12 years of a Republican White House is what has created the large government that spends too much.

George Bush is like a Dr. Frankenstein unable to control what he has created; he cannot bring about a change in government. The man who has already devised these reforming proposals is Bill Clinton.

Clinton deserves to be the next president of the United States. However, one should first look at what must be reformed. Between 1977 and 1989, the annual take-home pay of the average American family rose only 9 percent, while the take-home pay for the top 1 percent more than doubled. For example, the top 1 percent in 1977 made an average of $202,809. In 1992, they will earn an average of $403,402. The rich flourish while the middle class and poor flounder in America due to Republican mismanagement. The top three-fifths of society earned $27,788 in 1977 and rose to only $25,705 in 1992. The bottom fifth of society earned $8,495 in 1977 while declining to $7,555 in 1992.

These numbers are called facts. They are something which the Republicans around campus and the country refuse to cite when crowning George Bush as the savior of a new America.

Enough negatives, however, I would like to accentuate Clinton's positive attributes. Clinton would be in the best possible position as president to set a new agenda in this country with help from a Democratic Congress. Clinton's mandate for change will include moving Congress to cut taxes on the middle class and raise them on the well-to-do. He will raise the top rate from 31 percent to 38.5 percent for couples earning more than $200,000 a year. Clinton would devote $50 billion less on defense than Bush has proposed for the next four years, and he would spend this money on education, worker training, infrastructure and research into promising commercial technologies for alternative fuels.

To make ends meet, Clinton has also proposed taxing Social Security benefits to the wealthy, or means-testing Medicare. "I don't like to use the word 'sacrifice,'" says Clinton. "I prefer to stress opportunity and responsibility."

Clinton is also a great supporter of higher education. In his own state of Arkansas the proportion of high school students going on to attend college has climbed from 39 percent in 1981 to 51 percent today. For example, he has passed a law prohibiting high school dropouts from getting a driver's license.

Clinton wants laws creating boot camps for first-time drug offenders, and state-business partnerships to teach literacy. Clinton's basic message is that it is time to replace the antigovernment, laissez-faire mantra of the Reagan-Bush years with the idea of "reciprocal responsibility." "No more something for nothing." Businesses under Clinton would get tax breaks, but only if CEO's stop overpaying themselves. Welfare recipients would get training, but only if they work.

Clinton also realizes that "our first goal must be to help parents succeed, and when they fail, to save as many children as we can." He, unlike George Bush, realizes the key to education starts with the children's first teachers: parents.

Furthermore, Clinton will guarantee student loans which can be paid back thorugh literacy corps volunteering and community service.

These are all specific proposals devised for the issues our country faces. The facts make it obvious to me that Clinton should be the next president of the United States.

Frank Schneider is a sophomore English major who recently changed parties from Republican to Democrat.

Bush challenged on a variety of issues

By RICH JOTZ

I was greatly disturbed by Michael Marano's endorsement of George Bush in the Villanovan (Sept. 18). His idea of a perfect America is typical of the ignorant Republican rhetoric that says anyone who is not a rich white male means nothing to this country.

Marano believes that cutting taxes will give the middle class "breathing room." However, we have all seen that the "trickle-down" theory does not work.

That is proven by the fact that the top 1 percent of the population has one trillion more dollars than the bottom 90 percent. George Bush is not a candidate for the middle class. He has become strictly a candidate for the rich who wish to escape paying their fair share of taxes. I believe that Democratic candidate Bill Clinton's plan to raise taxes on only those who earn more than $200,000 a year is more than reasonable.

Claims made by Marano that money in the welfare, health care and medicare systems is a "waste" are frightening. I guess the poor, sick and elderly are not entitled to the right to life that the majority of us here at Villanova can afford. Clinton's plan to reform the welfare system by providing job training will get people off welfare and into the workforce. The welfare system should motivate people to work and Clinton's plan will do just that.

Marano calls for us to "drop the name tags that promote racism." Did he happen to catch Pat Buchanan's women and gay bashing speech at the Republican convention? Some very discriminatory comments were made. The fact that any variety of human being should have less rights than another is totally against what this country stands for. The ideology that a woman's place is in the home is an insult to talented and educated working women across the country."

The belief that family values will save this country is a facade for the real problems that the United States is facing. Family values help an innocent "crack-baby." Family values won't help a man not hired because he is black. Family values won't help a hemophiliac with AIDS. Family values obviously did not keep George Bush's own son Neil out of the savings and loan scandal. If family values don't work for Bush's own family, then how can he except them to work for the United States? Bush's call for a return to the days of Ward and June Cleaver shows that he is not for progression but regression.

If the United States is to be able to compete in the foreign market, then there must be change. George Bush has offered no such change. Bill Clinton has what it takes to get this country back on its feet through job training, education reforms, and taxing the wealthy. I hope everyone will see through this illusion of family values and recognize the candidate who will do something for you rather than the candidate who expects you to do everything for yourself. President Bush had his chance and failed. It is time to let Clinton have a chance to make this country into a leading economic power.

Should we listen to Goodman?

To the Editor:

With every penny we spend today, we tend to look for maximum return. With that thought in mind, now is a good time to ask why all Villanova students are forced to subsidize through their tuition the weekly views of nationaly syndicated columnist Ellen Goodman in the Villanovan.

It was most opportune that her commentary "Let's focus on family ..." appeared in the Parents' Weekend edition (Sept. 18). This made it convenient to compare and contrast her notions of family values to the moral values surrounding the family held by the Roman Catholic Church and all Christianity.

Goodman began by describing "Dan [Quayle] taking Murphy [Brown] to task for the malfeasance of unwed motherhood." This is secular jargon for committing fornication by the fictional Murphy. It is the act of fornication that is evil or harmful (malfeasance), not the condition of motherhood as Goodman would have us believe.

In any event, she appears unwilling to admit, much less concede, that the commandment, you shall not commit adultery (which includes fornication, incest and homosexuality, all actions which undermine the ties and trust that bind together family members), is in any way involved here.

In other columns Goodman presents abortion in a favorable light. To do so requires that she ignore the commandment you shall not take innocent life.

To return to the original question, "Should Villanova tuition monies be used to subsidize views and beliefs totally at odds with the university's Catholic heritage?," we may ask in all sincerity: How did such a perversity as this ever come to pass at Villanova? Who was asleep at the switch?

Bear in mind that 90 percent of Villanova's students come from Catholic families. The remaining 10 percent and, I hasten to add, all faculty and administrators also voluntarily chose Villanova and, hence, are honor bound to uphold and support the school's moral code. Should some find it impossible to embrace the school's openly professed set of moral absolutes, they should move on.

The war against traditional values in this fall's presidential election in reality is a world war against religion. As one local, perceptive commentator has observed, who will win largely depends on whether or not "the church and synagogue leaders of the West finally wake up to the fact that they are the ultimate target of an intensifying campaign of religious destruction and realize finally ... that they will not survive as children of God if they will not defend themselves much less their own flocks."

Goodman's home base is the Boston Globe, long notorious for its culture war against Catholicism. As she has been a major voice in that effort, I would recommend that her column be discontinued or at least alternated with one or more of the following Catholic or Christian journalists: William F. Buckley Jr., John Leo, Joseph Sobran, and Cal Thomas. All are excellent and I invite you to sample them.

Student says, "Television is my best friend."

By PETE SHAUGER

There is a certain indescribable pleasure that people get from shutting off their brain. I'm proud to say that I've shut off my brain for many hours at a time, and to the best of my knowledge, I have never harmed anyone in this semi-conscious state. The state I am speaking of is that of the self-induced coma produced merely by turning on the television.

Nothing is more relaxing than coming home from school and collapsing in front of the "boob-tube," lapsing in and out of the real world only for food and drink. But that is only one of the many essential services the television provides.

The television is a prepaid babysitter who doesn't fall asleep on the job, nor does it empty out the refrigerator. And after about five or six hours glued to the set, any child's eyes will naturally shut, and no one need ever again go through the tortunous "But I'm not tiiiirrrred" sessions before putting a child to bed.

The television is a friend when no one else can stand to be in the same room with you. I can't remember how many times I have had fights with friends or parents or gotten upset over a girl, and I'd just flip on the screen, and a crazy episode of Three's Company or Diff'rent Strokes would cheer me up in no time. Once I had to watch eight straight hours of television before I felt ready to face the world, but it worked, darnit, it worked!

On sunny Saturday afternoons when all the other kids were out playing ball, I was inside learning any number of valuable lessons from my cubical friend. I learned how to bowl. I learned how to paint. I learned how to beam myself onto a space ship if ever the situation arose.

I learned how to bowl. I learned how to paint. I learned how to beam myself onto a spaceship if ever the situation arose.

Oh sure you are saying, "Pete, what a puny and sick child you must be." But, I say to you not so. Never has anyone ever exercised as much as I have on a Saturday afternoon running from the couch to the bathroom all the way upstairs, over to the refrigerator to make another pitcher of iced-tea, to the cabinet for another bag of Fig Newtons and then back downstairs to the couch in a single commercial break.

By now I'm sure that most of you are sold on the positive aspects of the television that I have set before you. But still some of you are thinking that I have not really lived yet if all I have done in my spare time is watched television. But I am going to let all of you in on a little secret. Come closer ... closer. I am what they call a "televisionary." I live vicariously through the TV screen, which means that by watching a variety of programs, I can pretend that I have lived a full and dynamic life.

But there will always be disbelievers, skeptics. They are usually so far removed from the television world and the real world that they have trouble discerning between the two. It is with a certain oneness I have achieved with my television set that I can watch a program and extract from it only what I need.

However, there are some people out there who think that by watching Star Trek, all of a sudden I will start beaming into really embarrassing situations, causing trouble and dismay. But as I said before, I have no need to practice any of the things I learned on television (except maybe for a good practical joke on a friend or something) because of me being, as I said, a televisionary.

However, all too often these very useful and practical functions of the television are overlooked and labeled as just another mindless form of entertainment. Anyone who dares to dispute me in this matter had better be on guard, for I have seen many a TV show in my day, and I am not afraid to use any of the powers I have learned from them. But if I have done my duty, you will as we speak, set down this newspaper and turn your glassy eyes over to a color television set and let your mind go blank.

Sun won't rise if Bush wins again

To the Editor:

If I were offered one, wish there is no doubt in my mind how I would spend it right now. I would ask the wand to be waved and my wish fulfilled: that Mike Marano, the author of the Bush-as-an-effective-leader article, be hoisted up by the shoulders, shaken and splashed with ice water. Really, Mike, get your head out of the clouds and smell the proverbial coffee. After suffering through your commentary (Sept. 18), one is compelled to ask, "Where have you been and why have you returned?"

Although I have many problems with your article's content or lack-of-content, I wish to take issue with your reference to restoring American jobs and restructuring the timber industry at the expense of the Spotted Owl habitat.

Last week, your person for the job, George Bush, went to the state of Washington to promise to amend the Endangered Species Act to make it less restrictive on workers and their families; In his words, "to put people in front of owls." This is yet another myth that has been perpetrated by the timber industry: it is not Spotted Owl protection that is eliminating jobs for loggers. On the contrary, it is preserving the environment that will provide sustainable jobs, while the timber industry kills its own through automation and relocations to the South.

In the last 10 years more logging jobs have been lost through automation than are purported to be sacrificed through owl habitat protection. Were logging to be resumed at pre-1990 levels, there would be no old-growth forests to cut within 15 years. What, Mike, would you tell the loggers then? Whom would you blame? This loss of forest would not only impact the timber industry but the recreation and tourism industries as well. These are industries that can and do create sustainable jobs; employment that will last.

Our current "environmental president" George Bush has adopted a policy that allows continued cutting while Clinton has suggested a reconciliation between environmental and economic needs. Although Clinton's record as an environmentalist was inconsistent in Arkansas, the governor has pledged to work with his running mate, Al Gore, to work for a solution.

I do believe I love this nation and what it is to in theory stand for; however, I do not concur with the image you see of the sun rising over the water. I see our country moving toward a future of which I want no part: it is a future of discrimination, elitism and righteousness.

I do not concur with your assertion that George Bush can lead us through a bright new day, for with the results of the 1988 election came a forecast of partly cloudy with some sun. Approaching the 1992 elections there is a tremendous chance of precipitation and with it will be all the feelings of resentment, frustration and disenfranchisement.

You ask what we as college students want in a president. Perhaps it would have been best if you had done the research or merely become educated to what was happening around you, instead of settling into your complacent existence within a state of ignorance.

Seniors need to smile despite future demands

By LAUREN WURST

With the advent of another school year strong emotions run rampant. Frustration, excitement, pressure, fun, hard work, time off, future, money, confusion, stress; the list goes on indefinitely.

I do not remember feeling so many things all at once. The only thing I can compare it with is the way I felt on the first day of kindergarten, when I reluctantly let go of my mother's warm hand and entered a room of strangers. I had a lot to look forward to, many things to do and basically a lot on my mind. But what is on my mind now is not what goodies my mother has packed me for snack time or what time we will take a nap. Instead, I'm worried about things like my future, a job, graduate school, graduation, exams, papers and who I am going to take to tonight's sorority function.

I'm feeling as though there are not enough hours in a day. One day I was in my room doing absolutely nothing when I noticed two hours had gone by and not one thing I wanted to accomplish had gotten done. A side of me wonders, how could I let this happen? Yet, still another side of me says, why not waste a little time, it's good to relax sometimes. I noticed things had gone quickly past when my fall schedule came in the mail. I was looking over it and noticed it said, "senior." My initial reaction was a mistake had been made, then the bomb dropped, I AM A SENIOR! Could I actually be getting old?

Still, I haven't received my calling. I assumed that one day, by divine inspiration, I would awake and all of my questions concerning my future career would be answered. NOT QUITE.

I then decided to take charge of things. I attended a seminar concerning on-campus recruiting. Needless to say, it made me more panic-stricken. The whole notion of resumes, interviews and deadlines came at me like a ton of bricks. Yes, I knew this day would eventually come, but not so soon!

The day I really will start to worry is the day I cannot get my lips to produce a smile.

Good thing I found out that there is help out there. Campus organizations exist to get things in motion, and there are people who can make sense of this chaos. However, I'm also receiving some mixed advice. I run into fellow classmates who are on top of things and think it is quite bizarre that I do not know exactly what I want to do after graduation. They send a rush of terror through my entire body. Then I bump into recent graduates who assure me things will eventually fall into place. They advise taking the fullest advantage of my senior year, go out every night and party all the time. Still, something tells me that will leave me with an empty wallet and a whopping headache. What to do?

It all brings me back to that warm hand that led me to my first day of kindergarten. What I remember my parents always encouraging is moderation; fun in moderation, eating and drinking in moderation, work in moderation, exercise in moderation. My mother used to say, as long as you're doing your best, doing what you think is right and trying your hardest, that is all you can ask of yourself.

But more than that, she would ask if I was happy. I used to think it was an average question, but it is really not. To say that I am happy means a lot. It means there is a balance in my life, a feeling of contentment because challenges have been overcome. Most importantly, a smile can come across my face.

This confusion will become clear, the stress will fade and will eventually get a job. The day I really will start to worry is the day I cannot get my lips to produce a smile.

Englishman reflects on cultural differences

By DAVID HOWELL

Across the big pond in the northern region of England exists a myriad of towns and cities. The jewel is Manchester, birthplace of the Industrial Revolution and student capital of Europe. The colleges there differ greatly from Villanova, and it is the intention of this brief article to try and articulate some of these contrasts.

Possibly some of the most significant differences are in the academic fields and the payment for education. In Britain, approximately 600,000 students attend the 80 universities plus numerous specialist colleges. In every case, tuition fees are paid by the government and around 70 percent of all undergraduates receive a living allowance to a maximum of $10,000. Obviously, this situation is vastly different from American institutions.

The length and content of degrees are also dissimilar. Most British degrees, except business and finance, are for three years, and grade classification is determined more by final exams than continuous course work. Instead of a two-semester academic year, British schools operate on a three term basis that have one month breaks in December and April. When you enroll in a course, it lasts the entire year, not simply one semester.

The professionalism, scale and capital injected into the athletic program in this country are light years away from the poor support of sports at British universities. The pursuit of sporting activity is not readily encouraged, as most institutions concentrate their meager finances on academics. Other than a select few, most schools do not take pride in having successful teams that act for the general benefit and enhancement of name and reputation.

The American example is far more healthy and positive, and the show of faith, spirit and pride in the institution you attend, should be applied. It is great to see fanatical support for your peers as they take on other schools in football and basketball. Also, the Villanova stadium and duPont Pavilion have a terrific atmosphere on gameday.

In contrast, when I played soccer for Manchester Polytechnic it was on a poorly-kept field with the odd stray dog watching on with little interest. Sadly, we always felt we were playing purely for our teammates and never for our school. 'Nova spirit is definitely the way it should be and British universities should look at their American counterparts with awe and jealousy.

The social life is remarkably different. All British schools have numerous bars on-campus and many have their own large night clubs. Socializing often concentrates on the student union building, which offers discounted drinks, concerts by famous bands and a place to meet and make friends. At Manchester, the three-floor complex has two bars that hold 1,500 people and a night club that holds another 900. The social life for the four universities in Manchester is also oriented around the plethora of pubs and night clubs in the city center. Over 30 clubs and discos specifically cater to students, including the most famous, the Hacienda.

While Bryn Mawr, Ardmore and Wayne have many bars, the peculiar British tradition of pub culture, dating back centuries has meant a proliferation of ale houses. As a result, every other store on any high street in all towns, will probably be a pub.

The legal drinking age in Britain is 18 and all freshmen can sample the delights of a pint of beer as soon as they enter college.

Another aspect that has been a strong factor in the Manchester scene since 1988 is the "rave culture" that takes as its life force techno, garage, acid house and impromptu warehouse parties. This scene has maintained its intensity, and Manchester students play a prominent part in its music, art and fashion. Despite police attempts to stamp out the substance excesses that have become connected to the city's night clubs and parties, raving remains a potent attraction for the region's young generation. Indeed, its popularity can be reinforced by the huge illegal parties that are held every weekend in unused buildings and fields that act as a magnet for over 25,000 people.

While life as a student in Manchester and Villanova is full of contrasts, they are both essentially great places to work and play and I feel very fortunate to have had the opportunity to attend both. Ultimately, it's a long way from Britain, but the people, the University and the community of Villanova have won the heart and mind of this Englishman abroad.

University disbands Resident Student Association

By BETSY DONOHUE
Staff Reporter

After serving students for approximately 10 years, Villanova's Resident Student Association (RSA) is officially no longer in existence.

The RSA was originally developed to facilitate the communication of problems or requests between the residents and the administration of Villanova, using students as the medium between the two.

Over the years, the RSA developed into an organization that focused on resident social and service aspects and began devoting its energy into programming for such needs.

For the past seven years, under the advisement of Dan Remley, assistant director of Residence Life for housing services, and Director of Student Activities Lucyna Gorski, the RSA has provided various services and social programs upon which residents have learned to rely. These include involvement in the Special Olympics and Sibling Weekend, van services to and from south and main campus, the refrigerator rental program, the Fall carpet sale, Lip-it and exam-time coffee and doughnuts.

The RSA lacked the members to volunteer for the student activities. With only a handful of members, the responsibilities became," too burdensome for the individuals, which ultimately lead to stagnation," said Remley.

The RSA's last program was its summer storage program, where residents were offered free storage for personal belongings until September.

"They were very helpful. They really pulled the program together — I didn't expect such immediate results," said Anne Robl, an on-campus resident.

"I miss the RSA ... but our students haven't lost ground," said Remley.

The functions and programs that the RSA have sponsored over the years are being re-allocated to other organizations in Villanova's community. The Villanova Emergency Medical Service (VEMS) has adopted the refrigerator rental program. The Fall carpet sale is now administered by the Student Programming Council (SPC). The Association of Commuting Students (ACS) is taking on the responsibility of Lip-it.

> I miss the RSA . . . but our students haven't lost ground.
> Dan Remley

Now that the RSA is defunct, only time will tell what the full impact of such an occurrence will have on our resident community.

"I didn't even know the RSA is no longer in operation. I really cannot see that it played a big part in dorm life," said senior Jennifer Lambert.

"I did not know the RSA was not even functioning — it's a shame. I haven't seen any effects in the first couple weeks of school, but I'm sure there will eventually be repercussions," said Robl.

Remley said he suggested to any group who would be interested in adopting the RSA's previous programs to get in touch with Gorski in Room 214 Dougherty Hall. Remley also suggested students contact their own House Councils or resident hall staff to address any resident-student concerns.

Wildcat football shows promise for a winning season.

Football scores goals at 'Nova

By TOM JOYCE
Staff Reporter

Surprise, Surprise! Though the popularity of Wildcat basketball often eclipses Villanova's other sports endeavors, 'Nova's football has demonstrated that the University does have more than one team to enjoy with pride. Contrary to popular belief, football at Villanova involves much more than tailgating. So to inform the uneducated, here is a lay student's guide to Villanova football.

Last year, not only did the Wildcats finish seventh in the United States, as ranked by the NCAA Division I-AA Top 20 Poll, but they were also the team with the most wins in the conference.

What exactly does this mean? Intercollegiate sports are divided into four divisions. Division I-AA houses the absolute best in a sport. While Villanova's football team is not quite ready to compete with schools such as Notre Dame and Miami, the Wildcats play in the next best grouping, Division I-AA. The two remaining divisions are Division II and III.

> After all, you don't have to be an informed sportscaster to be a loyal Wildcat fan.

A school's various sports teams can be classified under different divisions, dependent upon ability and standing in relationship to other schools. For example, Villanova basketball is Division I-A and Villanova Hockey is Division III.

Students stuck on velcro wall jumping

By SUSAN BURNS
Staff Reporter

It was a "sticky situation" in the Quad Sept. 18 when hundreds of students gathered for the Velcro Wall Jumping and Ice Cream Giveaway event sponsored by the Student Programming Coucnil (SPC). Approximately 85 students jumped at the chance to stick to the 8-by-10 wall of velcro, and over 250 students devoured the ice cream.

Students, wearing suits of velcro, bounced from a mini-trampoline onto the padded velcro wall, and landed horizontally, vertically or inverted, with the help of two employees of "The Party People," the wall's Philadelphia sponsor.

"It brings out the daredevil in all of us" sophomore Mike Dunn said, after trying four different jumps.

The idea was conceived six months ago, after students read about the wall in a magazine article and saw it on "Late Night with David Letterman," Rental of the wall cost $550 for the 11 a.m.-3 p.m. time span.

Taste ultimate Philly tradition and culture in cheese steaks

By KAREN CAMPBELL and MONTA MONACO
Features Editors

The cheese steak ... Such a simple, yet gastronomical, concept!

A hoagie roll, a few thin slabs of meat, some melted pasteurized-processed cheese sauce, maybe some onions and hot peppers bathed in grease — perfection. The question remains, why do steaks from Philly taste better than those made anywhere else?

Maybe it is the unquestionably sleazy atmosphere of most corner steak joints. Throughout the city, crowds flock to such cramped establishments to breathe the heady aroma of Philly's sizzling ambrosia. They mob the cluttered counters and sidewalk tables, each shouting out an order guaranteed to result in their own version of the ultimate steak sandwich.

It might be the strong Philadelphia accent of the person rudely taking your order that makes the drippy combination of cheese and steak taste so right, a true Philly tradition.

Or it could just be the same mystical phenomenon that makes hot dogs taste better at ball parks. Maybe it is the location that makes the experience special, not the actual meal.

The fact remains that Philadelphia knows cheese steaks. And every true cheese steak-lover, native Philadelphian or passerby, has a special cholesterol-clogged place in their heart for either Geno's or Pat's steaks.

These two restaurants are contenders going round-for-round in the prize fight to determine who can claim the reputation for the best cheese steak in Philly and the world.

> The fact remains that Philadelphia knows cheese steaks.

The funny thing about Geno's and Pat's is that they are right across the street from each other, a situation which challenges both eateries to compete more creatively. Mouth-watering smells and raucous crowds spill out of both establishments into the street to tempt hungry patrons and heighten the competition.

Culinary wars have been waged between die-hard steak fans. Loyal patrons of Geno's and loyal patrons of Pat's — Villanovans included — heatedly argue the strong points of their respective favorites. Those few gourmets with open minds and curious tastebuds who venture to the other side are viewed with pity and disdain.

The two establishments are very similar — it all boils down to a matter of taste. Pat's wins the title as far as we are concerned. The onions just seemed sweeter, the cheese more plentiful and less processed and the roll softer and more squeezable. But then again, it just could have been our imagination and the necessity for us to make a decision for the sake of this article.

In all actuality, you could probably take a blindfolded taste test and never be able to tell the difference between Geno's and Pat's. But we hold to our theory that it is easy to tell the difference between a Philly cheese steak and one made in, say ... Idaho. The grease just is not the same in the Mid-western states.

One last piece of advice: Be careful when driving into downtown Philly at 4 a.m., which is when most 'Nova students frequent these steak havens. Make sure you have a driver with a general idea of the city's direction. And don't get into any drunken brawls over which steak is better. If you clash with someone whose taste in steaks differs from your own, simply cross the street.

Bar provides change of pace

By JUDI MOBILIO and DIANE KELLY
Staff Reporters

While most 'Novans spend their Thursday nights at Kelly's and Barleycorn's, we ventured down to The River. The River, which gained its name from its view of the Schuylkill, is a bar and restaurant located in Manayunk, Pa. Although it is out of the way, it is well worth the trip.

In addition to being a far distance from most "Villanova bars," The River is also a far cry from the cramped atmosphere of Main Line hangouts. Complete with valet parking and dress code, this is the type of bar for a quiet drink, not an all-out beer blast.

The service was quick and courteous, and with six bars located within the establishment, there is never a fight to get a drink. The River's surroundings are as diverse as its drink list. Entering this seemingly old-fashioned brick building, we were surprised to find a nouveau-modern interior, complete with a dance floor and lights that far surpassed the light show during Villanova's own church dedication.

All of this made The River a watering hole well worth drinking from.

Poets to show talent at Borders

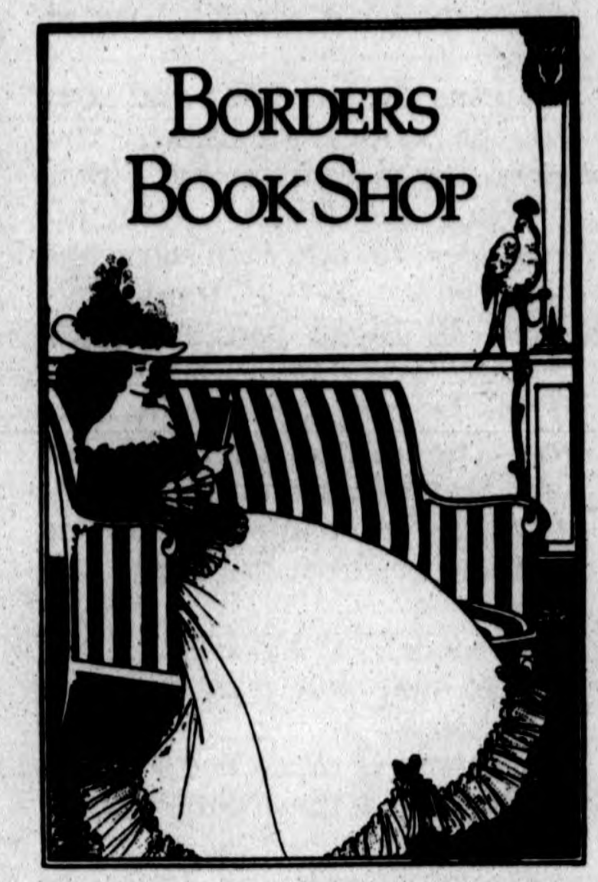
By CHRISTINE MULLER
Staff Reporter

Are you interested in "Celebrating the Literary Arts" with fellow young writers and an appreciative audience? Borders Bookshop will host an open-mike poetry and prose reading tonight to offer area talent an opportunity to present their original work.

The program, called Campus Writers' Night, will begin at 7:30 p.m. on the second floor of the bookstore in the Events Area. Those interested in reading must sign up at 7 p.m. on a "first-come, first-read basis," said the evening's host, Dan Szczesny, the bookshop's assistant publicist.

The idea for this event originated with Villanova's own Dr. Eli Goldblatt of the English department. "There is an old and venerable tradition of open readings," he said, adding that such readings helped his own writing while in college. Goldblatt feels public presentation is a "key to writing well," but opportunities in the area have been limited.

The most recent program was conducted annually by Dr. David Sager of the English department when he taught poetry writing. But it ended after he stopped teaching the course. So Goldblatt sought another forum that "really focused on writers" and the development of their skills.



The readings will be "strictly open-mike, strictly local beginners and amateur writers," said Szczesny. "We hope it will be an annual thing, that's certainly something we'd like to see. Depending on how many people show up, maybe even semi-annual."

The program also includes an opportunity for voter registration. Borders Bookshop is located in Bryn Mawr's Rosemont Square on Lancaster Avenue. Admission is free.

As a result, Goldblatt has originated the Campus Writers' open reading with Haverford and Bryn Mawr colleges at Borders Bookshop, a location picked specifically for its off-campus location. "For college writers, it's nice to have a writing scene not on campus and away from class," said Goldblatt. The bookshop will offer a more relaxed environment for writers — free of classroom associations with grade pressures. "We need more things [like this], not less things," he added.

The program is sponsored by Bryn Mawr and Haverford colleges and Villanova University in conjunction with the Bryn Mawr Business Association and Borders Bookshop. "Any and all students are welcome," as well as non-students, said Szczesny.

Wildcat football

Within divisions, schools are also divided into conferences. Villanova has been in the Yankee Conference, comprised of 12 schools, for four years. During that time the Wildcat football team has won two conference championships, placed second one year, and placed third another.

Another pertinent fact — Villanova's football program was canceled in 1981 due to poor attendance and lack of funds. Previously, the Wildcats were Division I-A. In 1985, Head Coach Andy Talley was given the task of rebuilding the program in Division I-AA.

Football illiterates may also wonder about the necessity of the costly turf recently laid in Villanova's Stadium.

"The old turf was laid in 1981," Talley said. "And it lasted until 1991. The stadium is used for intramurals as well as intercollegiate games, and the community also uses it."

Talley also said that grass was impractical with all of the maintenance fees that would be necessary. The current turf cost Villanova $1.2 million, he said.

Looking toward the future, Talley focused on his hopes that Villanova will win yet another Yankee Conference this year. The Oct. 17 home game against Delaware will prove to be the biggest hurdle to overcome, he said.

So there it is, Villanova football in a nutshell. So perhaps the next time you're faced with a field of Wildcats battling for possession of a football, you'll know enough to take time out from tailgating to cheer them on. After all, you don't have to be an informed sportscaster to be a loyal Wildcat fan.

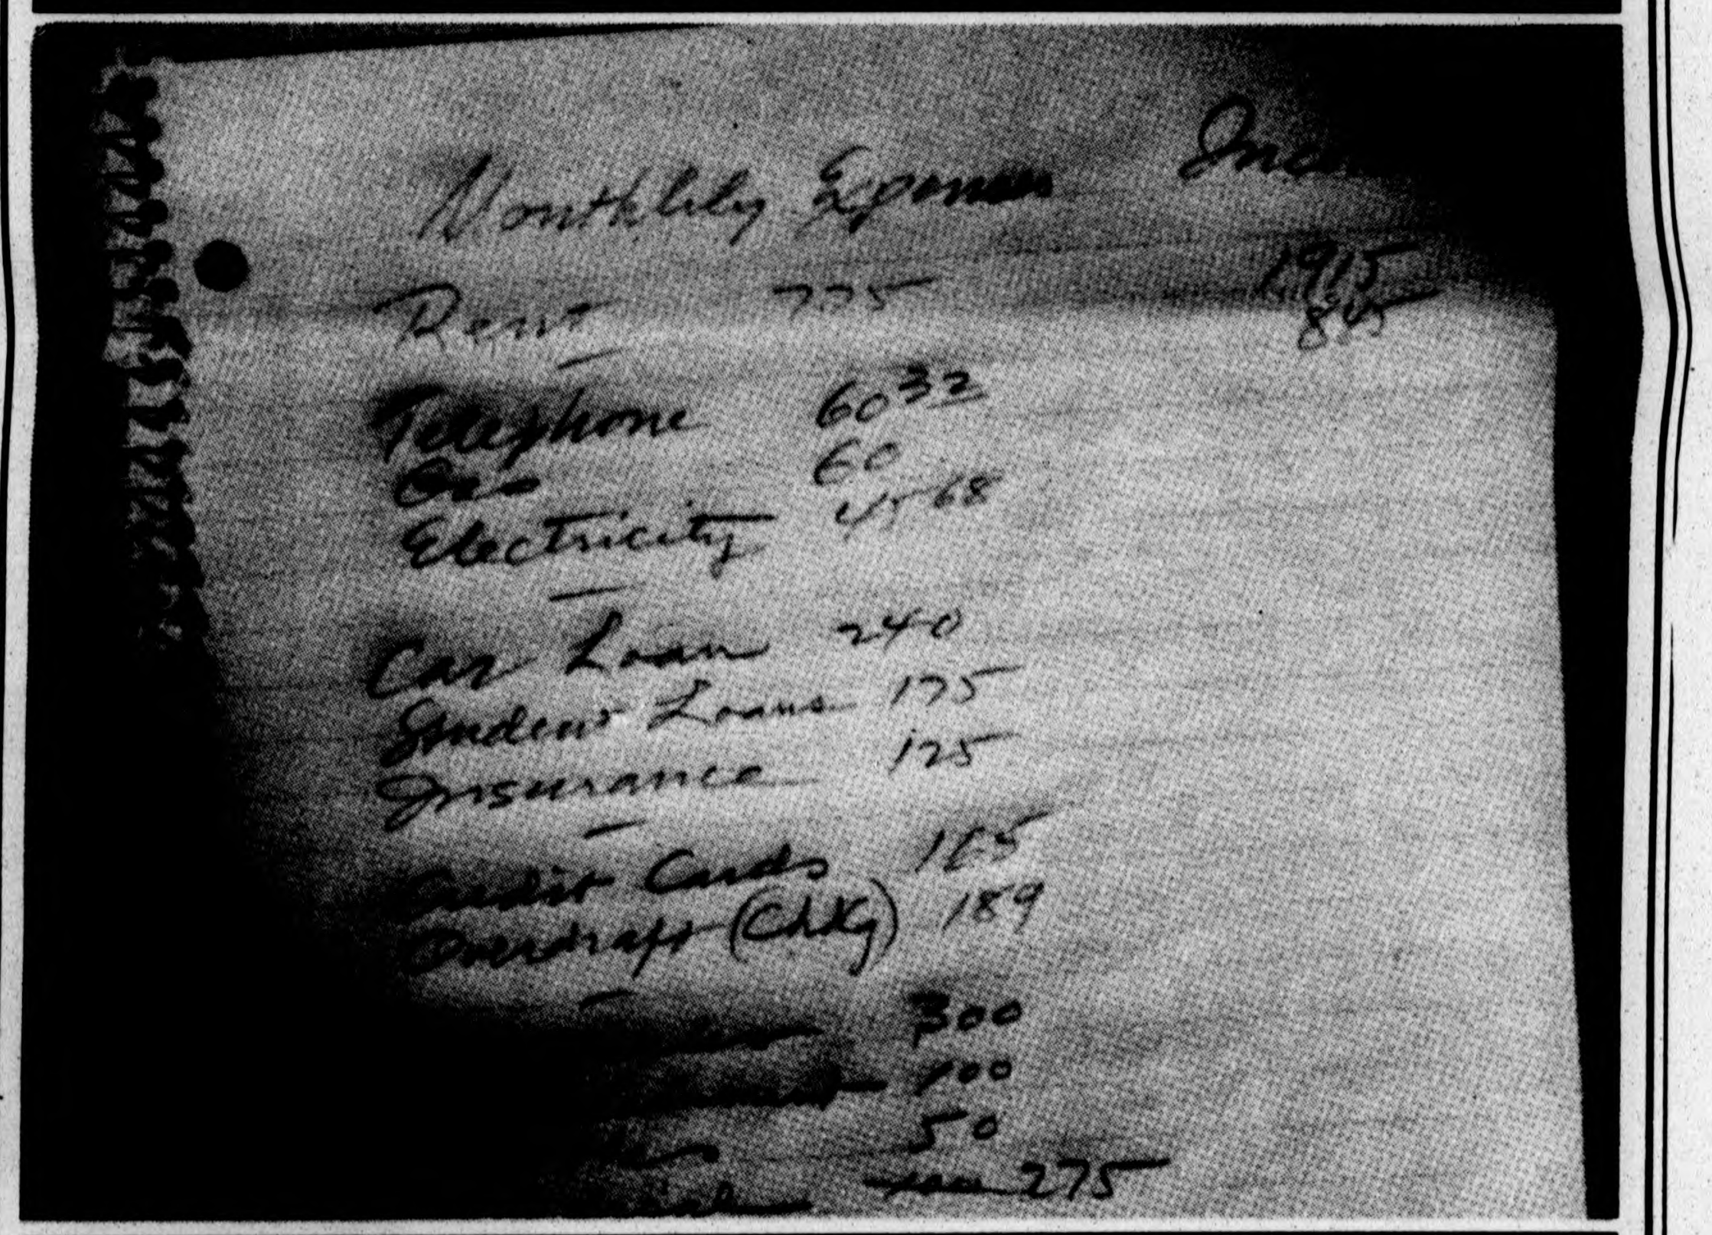
PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING



IRONICALLY, THE TIME TO START SAVING FOR RETIREMENT IS WHEN IT LOOKS LIKE YOU CAN LEAST AFFORD IT.

Can't afford to save for retirement? The truth is, you can't afford not to. Not when you realize that your retirement can last 20 to 30 years or more. You'll want to live at least as comfortably then as you do now. And that takes planning.

By starting to save now, you can take advantage of tax-deferral and give your money time to compound and grow. Consider this: set aside just $100 each month beginning at age 30 and you can accumulate over $192,539* by the time you reach age 65. But wait ten years and you'll have to budget $227 each month to reach the same goal.

Even if you're not counting the years to retirement, you can count on TIAA-CREF to help you build the future you deserve—with flexible retirement and tax-deferred annuity plans, a diverse portfolio of investment choices, and a record of personal service that spans 75 years.

Over a million people in education and research put TIAA-CREF at the top of their list for retirement planning. Why not join them?

'Nova reflects political change

By JOE SHEARER
Staff Reporter

In a year when political activity has been synonymous with corruption, scandal and discontent, it is no wonder that public support for the nation's leaders, especially among college-aged Americans, has been uninspired. A rising trend suggests that one possible way to dissipate this cloud of apathy is through potent political activity, or political activism.

During the 1980s Villanova seemed particularly politically devoid, said Dr. Michael Burke, director of the Honors Program, who considers the 1980s "a selfish time" for America.

The apathetic political atmosphere has also been triggered more recently by the constant conflict between the White House and Capitol Hill. Nothing ever seems to get through and people just don't seem to care; this was the prevailing temperament in the 1980s at Villanova, said Burke. Remarkably enough, though, Villanova had not always been as such.

During the late 1960s and early '70s the political atmosphere was somewhat more intense at Villanova but "relatively apathetic" compared to other colleges and universities at that time. Only about 10 to 15 percent of the students and a larger percentage of the faculty were visibly anti-war. The political activism of the time was less structured in that there were no political groups on campus as there are now, said Burke.

As evidenced by some of the articles that were printed in the Villanovan at that time, more students were concerned with the draft and how they could avoid it. Rather than having mass demonstrations against the draft, the Villanova student body manifested their concern in the form of a "silent protest." They wrote letters in the Villanovan and had discussions about the draft, but nothing very large-scale, said Burke.

Political activism in the Vietnam era at Villanova could also be seen in the presence of the R.O.T.C. programs, which received both support and rejection from members of the Villanova community. Those who opposed R.O.T.C. believed that it was the local presence of the "war machine."

Almost every week throughout the early 1970s, issues of the Villanovan contained editorials on the abolition of R.O.T.C. Villanova was one of the few schools in the country at that time which did not terminate their R.O.T.C. programs. Even amid this discontent, the number of students involved in the R.O.T.C. programs, especially in the Naval program, was large and increased every year.

THINGS THAT SUCK

THE THEME SONG

By ANTHONY RUBINO JR.
College Press Service

Sung to the tune of "My Favorite Things" from "The Sound of Music."

Biting on tin foil, dog farts and foot fungus, high impact aerobics, mosquitos that stung us,
paying the phone bill when its ninety bucks,
these are a few of the things I think suck.

Lyme ticks and Oprah and big oozing blisters, dandruff and back zits and pesky big sisters,
a life threatening bone crushing wreck with a truck,
these are a few of the things I think suck.

When hung-over, when the grades stink,
when I'm feeeeling saaaaad, I simply
remember some things that suck worse,
and then I don't feeeel sooo baaaad!

Burning your mouth on a hot piece of pizza,
calling her Nancy when her name is Lisa,
taking a gamble and having no luck,
these are a few of the things I think suck.

Hat head and bed head, a big wooden splinter, licking a pole in the middle of winter,
thinking of things that rhyme with the sound uck,
these are a few of the things I think suck.

When the car dies, when the pipes burst,
when I'm feeeeling saaaaad, I simply
remember some things that suck worse,
and then I don't feeeel soooooooooo baaaaaaaaaaaaad!!

Velcro jumping sparks interest

According to SPC's leisure arts coordinator, junior, accounting major John Redding, the group wanted to bring this unique entertainment to campus simply to have fun and boost school spirit. "A lot of times people lose sight of who they are with work and stress. They become stressed out . . . thus, the velcro wall," Redding said.

"Awesome!" was the response of sophomore Kerry Lucas. "Ever since I saw this down at the shore, I have wanted to try this. It wasn't even scary," she added.

The two jump spotters, David Hulme and Michael Salemo, stressed the safety of the concept. "Students must first sign a waiver releasing any outside parties from blame, but we make sure no one ever gets hurt."

Students had different reasons for having the wall. Junior accounting major Rich Hveem said, "You have to try pretty much everything once." While senior accounting major Pat McLaughlin "just did it under peer pressure."

Sophomore Steve Cullum said his jump was both a dare and a bet with his friends that he would stick the best because he weighs the least.

The peak times for the velcro wall jumping were during lunch and between class periods, but spectators surrounded the event all day, Redding said.

Sophomore Jill Callahan, who refused to try the jump, said, "I just don't have the time," but later admitted to several friends that she was uncertain how she would look velcroed to the wall in the middle of the quad.

For those spectators who did not choose to jump, SPC's Social Functions Committee dished out 36 gallons of vanilla, chocolate, coffee and chocolate chip ice cream.

The committee coordinator, sophomore Todd Sullivan, political science major, said "We usually hold our event later in the year, but this time we decided to do it early. The weather turned out perfect." He added that he ordered extra gallons of ice cream after hearing the weather forecast.

After taking full advantage of the events, sophomore Dave Roberts said, "I think the combination of wall-jumping and the ice cream giveaway was SPC's best event so far."

Political interests

The political activity on campus during the Vietnam era has yielded beneficial effects. One such positive effect was that the students became more aware of the world in which they lived. They began to concern themselves with the everyday happenings in the world, but more specifically, with what happened on campus. They demanded a larger voice in University politics. As a consequence of their ardent determination, the current University Senate was formed, which closed the gap between faculty and students.

In the Senate, the students, faculty and the administration can compromise on University policy. Yet the question and the dilemma stands. What are we doing today to promote and advocate political activism on campus and in the community?

It is fairly easy to discover why most students are turned off by politics. For some, it may be because they feel that the government has failed them and that politicians don't really care about their constituents. But many more feel it is due to political socialization. The media offers nothing but negative commentary on political activity, and most usually ascribe to our parents' political philosophies.

An informal, anonymous poll surveyed Villanovans about their extent of political activism and their beliefs on political activism on campus. One hundred percent of the students surveyed said that they were not politically active. They cited reasons ranging from being too lazy to want to do anything, to the fact that they did not have the time.

What is the problem here? The answer seems apparent. People must have an interest in something before they will commit some time to it. One way to accomplish this ideal here at Villanova is through the efforts of the different political groups on campus. Many believe these groups are exclusive, biased and too far to the right or left. But a closer look dispels these ideas.

There are two major political groups on campus: the College Republicans and the College Democrats. Their philosophies are based on the idea that each has something to offer every student, no matter what political ideology one ascribes to.

Frank Morgan, a sophomore political science major and president of the College Republicans, said that the group is very diverse. The group advocates a "conservative" outlook. They will definitely promote the Bush/Quayle ticket for the upcoming election. In order to get students more politically active this year, they will hold an information session with a speaker on Bosnia Herzenegovina. Also, they will distribute information about the presidential candidates on campus and possibly have some kind of coordinated debate on the important issues.

"People are looking for a positive outlet" from the overimposition of the media, said Morgan. He believes that the College Republicans can offer students this outlet.

The College Democrats are another group on campus that promotes political activity. Sophomore Patrick Kennedy, who is also a member of the Executive Cabinet of Student Government, is the president of this organization. Kennedy believes that the reason people are so apathetic to politics is because they are tired of the status quo and they want change, which never seems to come. Kennedy hopes to change this outlook through education.

The College Democrats plan to gather all of the smaller activity groups on campus and bring them together for information sessions about the candidates. They also plan to promote the Clinton/Gore ticket based on the issues and not on the negativity evident in the media.

The College Democrats currently have a voter registration table outside of Connelly to try and register more voters. "People don't think that their vote really means anything in the big picture of the election, said Kennedy. Not only do the College Democrats register students to vote, they insure that students do vote by providing busses on election day to transport sutdents to the polls. Through all of this, the College Democrats hope that they can help to change the current political atmosphere at Villanova.

Political activism cannot happen without interested, committed people. During the late 1960s and the early '70s the political atmosphere was potent enough to promote a new awareness among the student body and bring forth the formation of the powerful University Senate. Today, only about 5 percent of the student body are politically active on campus.

No Villanova student can give the excuse that there are no groups which support his or her own political philosophy. There are at Villanova at least two viable organizations ready to help channel the students into the future. All we need to do is decide what kind of future we want it to be and take that responsibility to make a political difference.

Elton John performs his greatest hits

By MAURA RURAK
Assistant Entertainment Editor

The legend returned for the 24th time Sept. 22 to play "Philadelphia Freedom" for the hometown crowd. A filled Spectrum welcomed Elton John, who began the evening by playing the classic "Don't Let The Sun Go Down On Me" to throngs of loyal followers both young and old.

The talent of Elton John captivated the audience as did the rare mix of songs he chose to perform. Realizing that many were veteran fans, Elton built the sets from his greatest hits including "Daniel," "Rocket Man," "Burn Down The Mission," "I Guess That's Why They Call It The Blues" and "Candle In The Wind." Only three songs from the new album The One appeared in the show with the highlight being his current hit song, "The One."

Once showy and dramatic, Elton has turned in his flashy outfits and outrageous wigs to produce a relatively sedate appearance. Adorned in a sequin jacket, Elton professed his affection for "the city of brotherly love" and pleased the crowd by coming out alone to end the show with "Your Song."

Not needing to rely on stage antics, Elton was joined by two background guitarists, one piano player and three backup singers to increase depth to his sound. The colored lights added emotion and flair to the presentation, but for the most part, Elton was the only focal point needed to make the show a success.

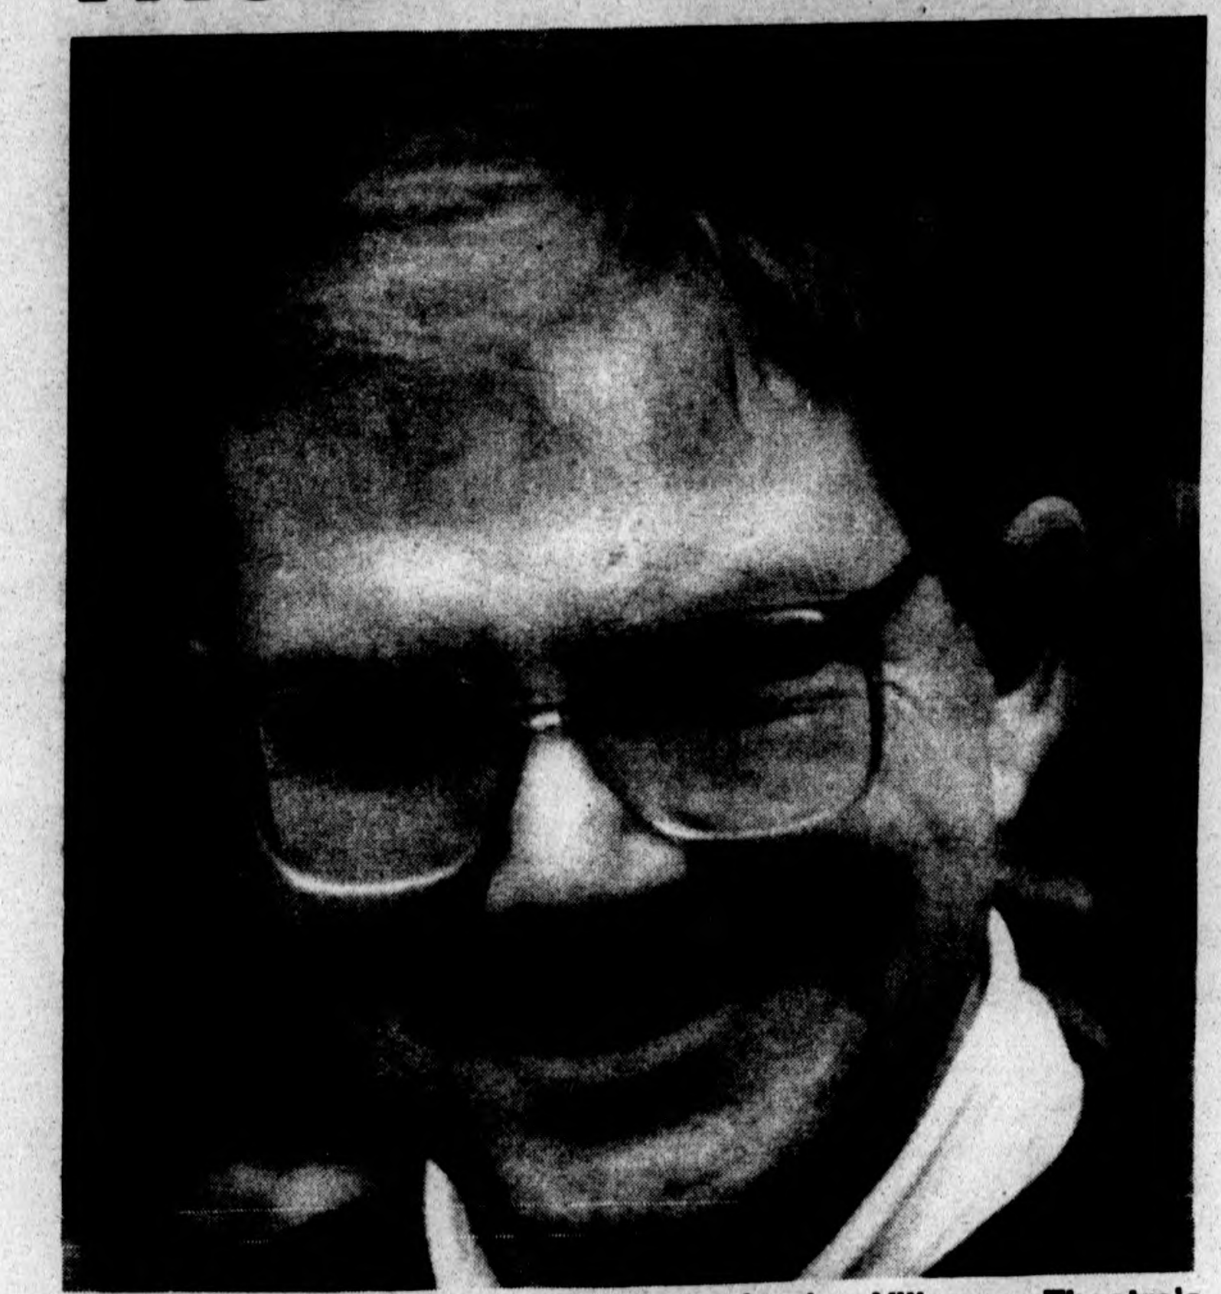
His love for performing was obvious as he stepped down from his elevated piano to wave to the crowd, bow, accept roses and even sign an autograph. Playing for two-and-a-half straight hours, Elton stopped only to make two costume changes and catch his breath.

The pace of the show was unique in the way that he mixed the songs. A gospel rendition of "Sad Songs Say So Much" immediately led into "Sorry Seems To Be The Hardest Word." A true performer and AIDS activist, Elton John dedicated a song to Freddie Mercury, who died last year from AIDS, and also performed the last cut from The One, which is about a son making peace with his father before dying from the disease.

Sensing the energy from the audience, Elton threw his legs over the piano and kicked back the bench during "Saturday Night's Alright For Fighting." It was this enthusiasm that made the show a complete evening. His sound is as pure as it is on his albums. Elton John is one of the few performers today who needs no computerized intervention to perfect his performance. True talent takes care of that.

The Spectrum rocked with the sounds of Elton John Sept. 22 and 23.

Theatre season honors 'Nova playwrights



Patrick McDaid, a Villanova graduate, begins Villanova Theatre's season with his play, 'Compassionate Leave.'

By ERIC CHEUNG
Staff Reporter

Beginning in early October, the Villanova Theatre will commence its year-long celebration of new plays by Villanova playwrights to coincide with the sesquicentennial anniversary. In the spirit of celebration, the program, "Nova: A Festival of New Plays by Villanova Playwrights," will feature four plays by distinguished playwrights and two presentations of upcoming productions as part of the "Plays in Process" series.

Since its 1958 inception, the Villanova Theatre has been a source of thespian inspirations and aspirations. It has broadened its dramatic base from popular pieces to experimental works. Female and minority influences have also been more apparent in recent years. Additionally, such acclaimed playwrights as David Rabe, whose film credits include "Casualties of War," and Leslie Lee, who received a Tony nomination for his "The First Breeze of Summer," started their careers at Villanova.

Among the talents spotlighted this year will be Lee, the off-Broadway bound team of Peter Mattaliano and Stephen Jankowski and locally-produced Marian Hammonds Warrington. The "Plays in Process" will include new workshop productions of plays by David Rabe, in the fall, and Bruce Graham, in the spring, as well as various other current students and alumni. The season starts with Patrick McDaid's "Compassionate Leave."

"Compassionate Leave" centers on an ex-soldier named Mick who returns home from war to reconcile differences with his father, an Irish immigrant. In his attempts to make peace with his culture, Mick finds spiritual well-being in himself. Much of McDaid's ideas for this production came from his own experiences. "The Irish people don't know how to talk about things," McDaid says. "They keep their feelings hidden. My father didn't say 100 words to me." For him, plays are be reflective of his own life, "A writer can't escape himself. Some things in the play are very close to the way things happened."

Born in Pennsylvania, McDaid, along with his wife and three children, has returned to his roots in Ireland many times, visiting the family farm. During the mid-'60s, after attaining experience in the Marine Corps and in college, McDaid began teaching at several high schools. McDaid's initial foray into directing convinced him to seek more experience and attend Northwestern University. He went on to study theater at Villanova under the guidance of Ernie Schier and received his M.A. in 1988.

"Compassionate Leave" is McDaid's first professional production. Even now he still continues to hone his skills and improve his work by making cuts in an effort to "dramatize the unspoken." Aside from this production McDaid continues his teaching career at Delaware County Community College. He is also a freelance writer and has made contributions to TV Guide and the Inquirer. When considering his current success McDaid confides, "I'm happier than I've ever been in my life."

"Compassionate Leave" airs Oct. 14-18, 28-31, and Nov. 1 at the Villanova Theatre in Vasey Hall.

Screaming Trees fall short on Oblivion

By JOHN KAZMIERCZAK
Staff Reporter

Out of the unruly throng of Seattle-based Nirvana wannabe bands emerges Screaming Trees, with their latest offering, Sweet Oblivion. The album, which delves into several styles, consists of Mark Lanegan on vocals, Gary Lee Connor on lead guitar, his brother Van playing bass and drummer Barnett Martin.

> Sweet Oblivion* is more of a learning experience for Screaming Trees than a final project.

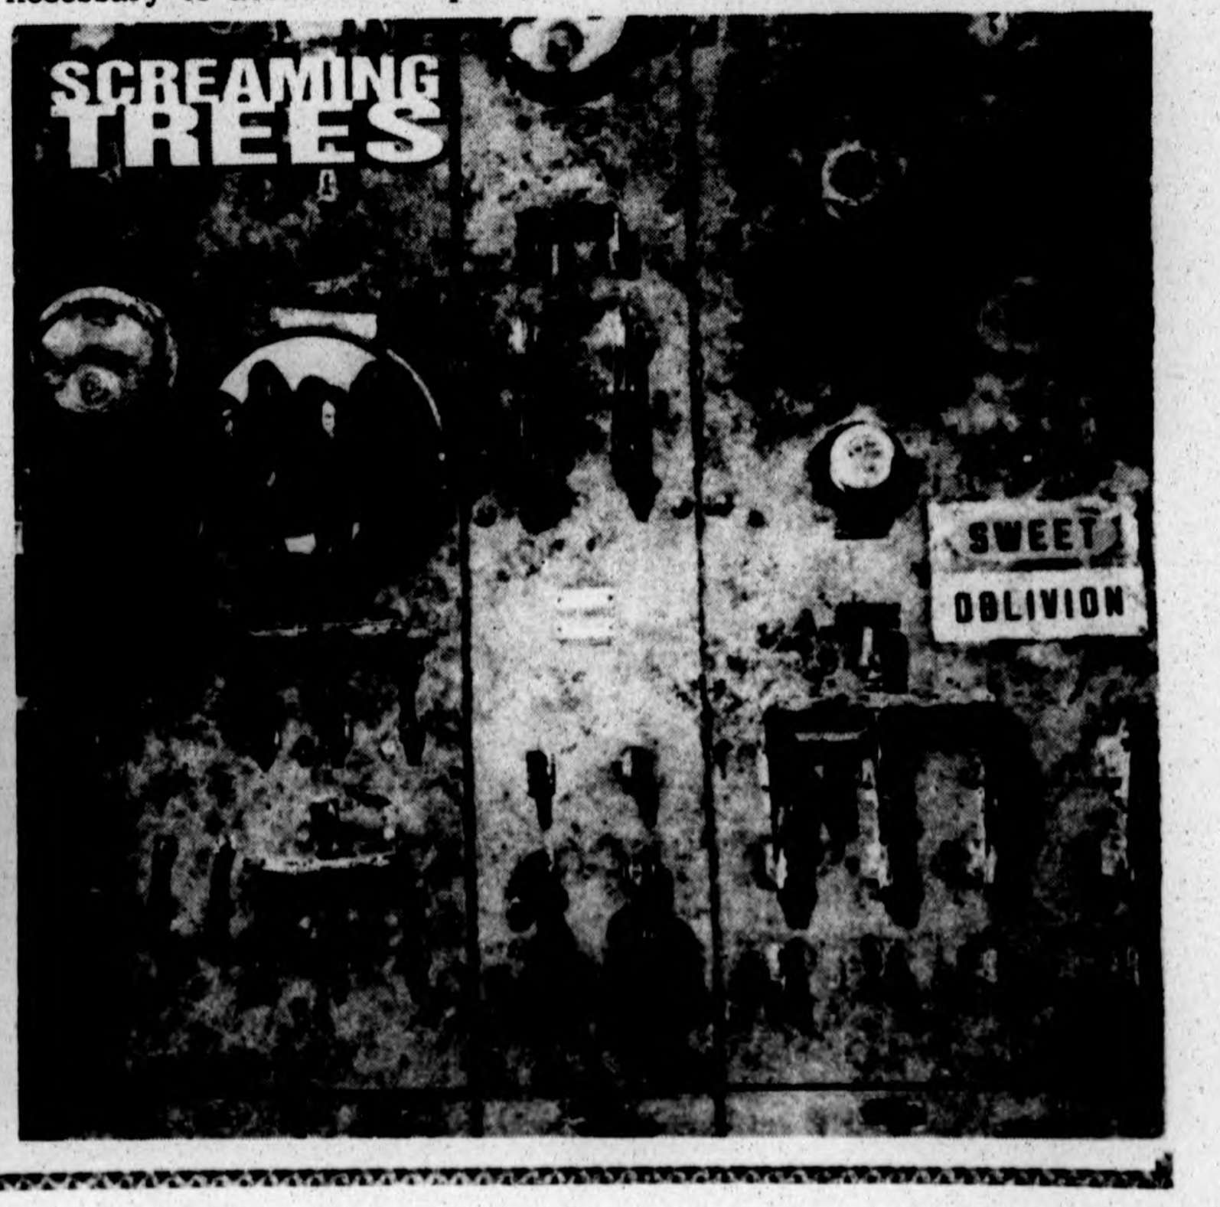
Ironically, this group, which dutifully performs its share of Nirvana ripoffs, was founded before its younger, more popular counterpart. Sweet Oblivion is Screaming Trees' second album, the first being Uncle Anesthesia, a more primitive, vibrant effort.

The single best asset to Sweet Oblivion is Connor's lead guitar. It consistently shines, song after song, alternately blaring on pieces such as "Shadow Of A Season," and strumming contentedly in "Nearly Lost You." Lanegan's vocals remained languid and limp through much of the album, perking up only occasionally. He does manage to achieve an interesting cross between Robbie Robertson and Lou Reed in "Troubled Times."

No matter the style, be it hard rock on "Julie Paradise," or the slower, melancholic "Nearly Lost You," the band never seems to be able to integrate all its members, and because of this, has an unpolished, loose sound that soon becomes tiresome. Considering the potential shown in Uncle Anesthesia, their latest effort is relatively disappointing.

Nobody ever billed this band as anything especially remarkable, and rightly so. The Seattle band scene is hot right now and music labels are falling all over themselves to sign these groups. Although Lanegan, Martin and the Connor brothers perform competently enough, the music has no real heart; it never touches or inspires the listener. Sweet Oblivion is more of a learning experience for Screaming Trees than a final product. When Screaming Trees matures sufficiently and achieves the cohesion necessary to actualize its potential, there is no doubt their albums will be sensational. Until then, however, Sweet Oblivion is an album that is pleasant to listen to a few times, and then will fall into (sweet) oblivion, probably where it deserves to be.



'Singles' captures love on Seattle scene

By THOM ARNO and MARK MCCREARY
Staff Reporters

Perhaps it is Cameron Crowe's impeccable writing and directorial style that makes his new movie, "Singles," a thoroughly entertaining flick. Maybe it is the vivid characters who perfectly portray the anxiety of the twenty-something generation. Or possibly it is the Seattle-based music and club scene that serves as the setting. The best guess would be a delicate combination of the three scenarios, cut with an intangible element that Crowe has added to his past efforts, "Fast Times at Ridgemont High" and "... Say Anything."

Crowe has spent the better half of the past decade creating memorable characters: Jeff Spicoli in "Fast Times" and Lloyd Dobler in "Say Anything." Crowe's unique writing style invited the viewer to empathize with the characters, and always allowed them to possess the qualities that we would look for in ourselves. Whether it be the slacker attitude of Spicoli or the nervous romantic desires of Dobler, it always related to our real experiences. It was those types of moments where Crowe worked his magic, and left the audience just feeling good. "Singles" is full of those types of moments, but instead of the audience just focusing on one personality, the viewer is offered a full cast to relate with throughout the movie.

Each of the characters was introduced through their own narration, successfully allowing the viewer to get a firm grasp on where the movie was going to take them. Janet, played by Bridget Fonda, opens the dialogue of the movie, describing the 'firm' relationship which she shares with Cliff, played by Matt Dillon (with a cheap Eddie Vedder wig). Janet worked in a coffee shop — a Seattle staple — and devoted the rest of her time to convincing herself that Cliff's love was something that it was not. Cliff, on the other hand, was the singer for the up and coming band, Citizen Dick (with Pearl Jam's Eddie Vedder, Stone Gossard, and Jeff Ament). According to Cliff, "The band is huge in Belgium," and soon to break into stardom in their native country. Cliff spends the rest of his time working odd jobs and being oblivious to Janet's love. That is their main problem.

> Music pulses in the background, yet is not afraid to perfectly color a pivotal scene.

Then comes Linda (Kyra Sedgwick) and Steve (Campbell Scott). Linda is the die-hard environmentalist who lives her life in and out of various relationships. It seems men can easily weave their way through her naivete, leaving her in a constant conflict with desire and hatred for the male species. Steve is the transportation advocate who does his best to win her affection. The problem here is: the two would-be lovers fall prey to the classic downfall of the dating scene, the scam. While trying to be as genuine as possible with this fledgling affair, both Steve and Linda end up stepping out of their true selves; therefore jeopardizing their fate together.

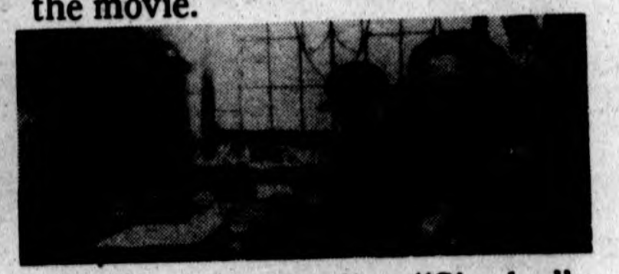
ORIGINAL MOTION PICTURE SOUNDTRACK
singles

The thoughts, feelings and scenarios of "Singles" guide the movie from its auspicious beginning to its perfect ending. By "perfect," it is not by any means predictable. The trick to predicting the ending, if you are so inclined, would be to familiarize yourself with the true desires of the characters. Do they truly believe their motto: "Be Happy — Stay Single," or do they wish for a future based around a relationship? Two hours after Janet introduces herself and initiates the movie, you'll find out.

The hype of "Singles" began a couple months ago with the release of its near flawless soundtrack. Motivated by new music from such bands as Pearl Jam, Alice in Chains and Smashing Pumpkins, Seattle music fans passed word of the movie around during the summer. To say, though, that the movie relied on the success of the soundtrack would be unfair. This is one of those rare films where the music pulses in the background, yet is not afraid to perfectly color a pivotal scene. "Would?" by Alice in Chains, the first single, is a slow-burning piece that is used prominently most notably in a live club scene. Soundgarden also appears live, performing their new song, "Birth Ritual." It seems Chris Cornell, singer for Soundgarden, has turned into a maverick of the Seattle image. He is perhaps the piece that ties together the sonic occurrences coming out of the Pacific Northwest. He also makes a cameo appearance in the movie.

Of the harder stuff on the album, Pearl Jam's two new songs, "Breath" and "State of Love and Trust," were both eagerly anticipated and satisfying. They are the band of the moment, and the emotional intensity and vivid lyrics that they have delivered in the past have surfaced again. "Overblown," by one of the founders of the Seattle sound, Mudhoney, serves as sharp sarcasm toward the attention recently focused on Seattle. "Everybody loves us/ Everybody loves our town ... It's so overblown," sings Mark Arm, rather convincingly.

"Drown," by Smashing Pumpkins, a band not from the area, could be the most appropriate song in the movie. "No matter where you are/ I can still hear you when you drown," may be a line central to the entire movie. Never before has a song's lyrics or even a line perfectly defined a situation. From the usage of these songs, it is easy to see how the music serves as a perfect backdrop throughout the movie.



As mentioned earlier, "Singles" does not rely on the strength of its soundtrack, the brilliance of its writer/director nor the talent of its performers. However, the ability for this movie to stand out above the others is the inter-reliability of the three seemingly separate parts. It is highly recommended to all, even if you only have interest in the music, the image, Bridget Fonda or Matt Dillon. Dillon's hair is a mess, though, and Fonda just rules. "Singles" captures our generation in engaging style.

CBS begins season strong with 'Hearts'

By CATHERINE C. GRAHAM
Staff Reporter

For all you couch potatoes out there, 34 new television series are going to be aired this fall: 10 of them on CBS (Channel 10). "Hearts Afire," "The Hat Squad," and "The Golden Palace," premiere on CBS this week.

"HEARTS AFIRE"

From the creator of "Designing Women" and "Evening Shade," Linda Bloodworth-Thomason wrote and produced the new comedy series "Hearts Afire." The show airs from 8:30-9 p.m. on Mondays.

John Ritter (Jack Tripper from "Three's Company") and Markie Post (Christina Sullivan from "Night Court") are experienced actors whose interesting characters make the show soar. Ritter plays John Hartman, an aide for a conservative Southern senator (George Gaynes). In the 60-minute debut, we learned Hartman's wife left him and moved in with another woman. He has two sons living with him and one, Eliot, worries about getting stung by bees and going to hell.

Post is Georgia Ann Lahti, a chain-smoker and Hartman's new press secretary. She has fallen on hard times after having a career as a journalist which led her to "date" Fidel Castro and dance with Mikhail Baryshnikov on top of a table. Georgia thought she hit rock-bottom after losing her job at the Tea Cup ride in Euro-Disney. It got worse when all of her clothes burned up in flames at the dry cleaners before she returned home.

Even with Ritter's and Post's conflicting personalities, by the end of the first episode we find them sharing his office, home, and even his bathtub — dressed, of course.

Supporting characters include the crass receptionist, Dee Dee Starr (Beth Broderick), husband and wife legislative aids (Billy Bob Thornton and Wendy Jo Sperber), and Lahti's nanny, Miss Lulah (Bea Richards). The leads, supporting characters, conflicts, and settings of the senator's Capitol Hill office and his home are all amusing.

"Hearts Afire" is timely for making fun of current politicans and may be particularly interesting if it keeps up with "Murphy Brown," which is the time slot following this new comedy series.

"THE HAT SQUAD"

Hats off to those of you who plan to watch the new series, "The Hat Squad." Broadcast from 8-9 p.m. on Wednesdays, this is the latest show written by veteran action producer, Stephen J. Cannell ("The A-Team," "Wiseguy"). The premise of this series, however, is mostly farfetched.

James Tolkan is Mike Ragland, a police captain and foster parent of three boys orphaned from three different sets of murdered parents. Shirley Douglas is the foster mother, Kitty Ragland. The three "brothers," Rafe Martinez (Nester Serrano), Matty Matheson (Billy Warlock), and Buddy Capatosa (Don Michael Paw) comprise a police team specializing in violent crimes.

Based on a Los Angeles squad from the 1940s, the young men wear fedoras and dusters. The 90-minute opener focuses on a murderer who has terrorized a young boy.

With the exception of their firm father, it is unclear who the squad reports to or how this case is determined. Parts of the first show were so confusing the viewer may not have understood what was happening. For those of you who like cop shows, there are plenty of chase scenes and slam-bang night action.

"THE GOLDEN PALACE"

"The Golden Palace," a sequel to "The Golden Girls" without Bea Arthur, airs regularly on Friday's from 8-8:30 p.m. In the debut show, the former "Golden Girls," Blanche (Rue McClanahan), Rose (Betty White), and Sophia (Estelle Getty) move from their old house in Miami Beach to Wisconsin where they are the new owners of an old hotel.

Upon the arrival to the hotel, the women meet an outspoken young manager (Don Cheadie), a tempermental chef (Cheech Marin), and a 12-year-old resident (Billy Sullivan) whose parents abandoned him. They learn the hotel has several shortcomings such as being understaffed and in debt. By the end of the show, the spunky women survive financially getting themselves out of debt after entertaining 50 travel agents.

Being a known commodity, "The Golden Palace" will keep the same viewers from "The Golden Girls" and probably even more with the new characters and theme of the show.

'Ties' examines bigotry

By AARON NICODEMUS
Entertainment Editor

Some say the difference between a good man and a great man is the amount he has endured. Yet is is the way in which he is different from those around him that dictates how much he must actually suffer. Ignorance breeds fear, bigotry and hatred. Such is the case in "School Ties," where harmless male bonding turns ugly.

Brendan Frazer ("Encino Man") stars as David Greene, a working-class Jewish kid from Scranton who is offered a scholarship to an elitist New England prep school. As he enters the austere campus of St. Matthew's as a new senior, he is daunted by its heritage, its prestige and its dress code. His handsome good looks and witty candor endears him to his classmates. He meets a girl and leads the team to victory over its fiercest rival. Yet his secret, the fact that he is Jewish, threatens to destroy his new-found happiness.

Characters react to the stressful atmosphere of the school in different ways. One has a nervous breakdown, where he recites his botched French poem over and over as he is taken away. Another feels compelled to cheat to live up to the unreasonable expectations of his parents. David reacts by lashing out — at classmates, teachers, administrators, the system and the school.

When the truth of David's identity is revealed, competitiveness and jealousies combine with anti-semitism to form a veritable tidal wave against David's social status. Even worse, when a teacher discovers a "cheat sheet" and the class must reveal its owner, David is immediately put on the spot. His so-called friends use his religion to condemn him, with a few weak objections. The clean-cut boys of St. Matthew's discover their seamy underside.

"School Ties" may seem like a "Dead Poet's Society" remake, and while the similarities are plentiful, the film stands on its own. There is the obvious element of the "new kid" disrupting the established social order and forcing one to confront prejudice head-on. "School Ties" also presents more of a social and economic commentary than "Poet's" in-depth view of boyish interaction. The outside world has entrenched itself firmly in St. Matthew's, and there is no cave to run off to and read Walt Whitman.

The film has a rather powerful message: that bigotry can be combatted by force of personality. The powers that be are relatively free of the prejudice which seems to consume their students. They see nothing wrong with his background, and support him faithfully. David sees through the charade for what it is: each uses the other to gain for themselves. Ultimately, that is the lesson that is learned. While "School Ties" lacks the comic enthusiasm of "Poet's," its dramatic action carries surprisingly well.

FAST FORWARD: A good salesman can sell anything,but with "Glengarry Glen Ross," its credentials help the film to sell itself. Director James Foley has collected a strong cast (Jack Lemmon, Al Pacino, Alan Arkin, Alec Baldwin and Ed Harris) in a story about a real-estate scam. Due in two weeks, "Glengarry Glen Ross" may be a modernized version of "Death of a Salesman."

Director John Landis ("An American Werewolf in London") has mixed comedy and gore in his new monster movie, "Innocent Blood." Starring French actress Anne Parillaud, "Innocent Blood" follows a Pittsburgh vampire with a hunger for bad guys. She attacks mobsters and criminals, with tender love bites reserved for those on the high road. "Innocent Blood" opens next week.

REWIND: "The Power of One" chronicles the life of P.K., an English boy in South Africa who ascends to legendary status. While the panoramic views are breathtaking and P.K. has a posse of venerable teachers (John Geilgud, Armin Mueller-Stahl and Morgan Freeman) "The Power of One" focuses on a great white hope in a film supposedly focusing on the black struggle against oppression. Spike Lee is probably not happy. Still, "The Power of One" tells a story worth hearing, and is due this week.

CLIPS: Villanova's Cultural Film Series this week offers the smash cultural hit, "Amadeus." The film traces the trials of the tormented musician as he battles his own personal demons while creating masterpieces. The film will be shown in the Connelly Center Cinema on Sat., Sept. 26 at 7 p.m.; Sun., Sept. 27 at 3 and 7 p.m.; and Mon., Sept. 28 at 7 p.m. Admission for undergraduates is $2.

R.E.M.'s mood is somber

By COLEEN KENIREY
Assistant Entertainment Editor

The politically correct band from Athens, Ga., who exploded onto the charts in 1991 with Out of Time is about to return to the limelight. R.E.M. will release Automatic for the People Oct. 9. The new songs are described by band members as weird, and the sound of the album does not depart as drastically from its predecessor as was previously expected. The pace is again slow, but the lyrics are not as lighthearted or optimistic as "Near Wild Heaven" or "Shiny Happy People." Themes are more serious as typified by "Try Not to Breathe," which addressed the somber inevitability of death. Even the first single, "Drive," maintains a leisurely speed and dark undertones.

There are a few exceptions to this album's pervasive mood including the more upbeat "The Sidewinder Sleeps Tonight" and "Ignoreland." The former track pushes Michael Stipe's vocal chords to new limits and the latter points an acerbic cannon of criticism at the Republican Government.

Not to be outdone by Out of Time's star power on backup vocals, Automatic for the People features a couple of heavy-hitting musicians. The Psychedelic Furs' Knox Chandler and legendary John Paul Jones of Led Zeppelin mapped out arrangements which intertwine diverse instruments from organs to acoustic guitars.

Produced by the band and Scott Litt, the majority of R.E.M.'s new material was written by Stipe with Bill Berry and Peter Buck in Athens. The recording process was completed in Crescent City's Kingsway Studio, Miami's Criteria Studios and Woodstock, N.Y.'s Bearsville Studios. Having traveled during much of the album's recording, the band is not planning to tour very soon.

Real R.E.M. fans can also listen to covers of their favorite band's hits on Surprise Your Pig-A Tribute to R.E.M. The creative impact of these Georgians-turned-college-radio gods is acknowledged by several of their alternative successors including King Missle, Just Say No, Gumball, Mr. T. Experience and Jawbox. The compila tion is put out by Texas independent label Staplegun Records. The tribute features earcatching remakes of "Radio Free Europe," "Can't Get There From Here," "Get Up," "Low," and "Don't Go Back To) Rockville." R.E.M.'s influential style is given well-deserved praise by some of the most credible underground musicians around.

John Wesley Harding has been at the forefront of alternative music for the past four years with his blend of folkish singing/storytelling and minimalist acoustic musical style. Harding is best known for his presence on Sire Music's Just Say Yes alternative collections. The singer's contributions to these albums are characteristically sarcastic and humorous. "Warning Parental Advisory" is the prelude to one album and it attacks the censorial premise behind the sticker on the album's cover. Harding co-wrote the song with Steve Wynn, formerly of Dream Syndicate, and a selection of the lyrics were published in Playboy. Another of Harding's unusual musical achievements was his duet with Kelly Hogan on a cover of the Osmond hit "A Little Bit Rock and Roll."

Harding's newest work is titled Why We Fight and has stripped-down-to-the-basics sound courtesy of producer Steve Berlin of Los Lobos. With the new album, Harding ended his exclusive working relationship with Andy Paley who produced the artist's first two endeavors, Here Comes the Groom and The Name Above the Title. Another one of Harding's traits is that he has no consistent back-up band. A band dubbed The Good Liars, consisting of Bruce and Pete Thomas (previously of Elvis Costello's The Attractions), played on Harding's first two albums. The current release offers a more soulful band including Berlin and Chris Cacavas.

Not a newcomer to the music world, Harding has toured with John Hiatt, The Mighty Lemon Drops, Hothouse Flowers, Michelle Shocked and The Ocean Blue. His music is more comparable to live sound than many over-edited songs from other bands. This less-is-more studio philosophy results in some excellent tunes that are rough around the edges but more suitable for Harding's amusing and satirical lyrics.

FRESH CUTS: Songs Of Freedom, a box set honoring reggae legend Bob Marley, will soon be available from Island Records. The collection will feature 78 songs spanning his career from 1962-1980 and will include some rare and previously unavailable material.

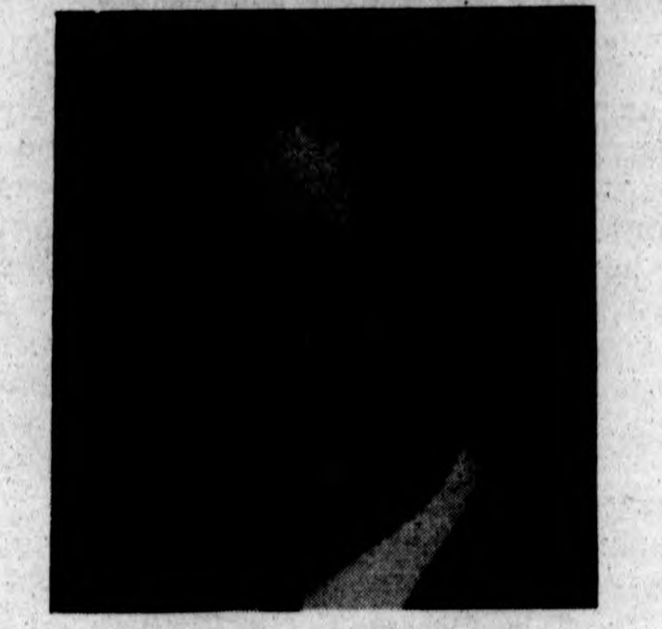
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK



Scott Donald

This week the Villanovan recognizes football player Scott Donald. A returning first-team All-American, Donald caught six passes for 107 yards and two touchdowns in 'Nova's 36-33 victory over the Richmond Spiders. Donald's performance earned him a place on the Yankee Conference Honor Roll for the week of Sept. 20.

A senior tight end, Donald has registered 99 career receptions for 1,159 yards, including 18 touchdowns, placing him fifth on the Cats' career reception list and sixth on the career yardage.

Lynch, Zajac pace cross country; Cats streak alive

By SEAN KELLY
Staff Reporter

The Villanova Wildcats paid a visit to Indiana University last weekend in what will more than likely be the first of two trips to Bloomington this season. Indiana happens to be the site of the NCAA Championships in late November. If this invitational is a precursor to the championships, the Cats are well on their way to an unprecedented fourth straight national title.

The Cats had no trouble at all putting to rest their opponent's hopes of putting an end to 'Nova's winning ways. 'Nova finished runners in five out of the top six places. Senior Nnenna Lynch and junior Carole Zajac placed in the first and second positions, respectively, with times of 16 minutes, 53.5 seconds and 16:55.3. Senior Cheri Goddard once again played a major role in the meet, finishing sixth with a time of 17:35.4.

The races of freshmen Jennifer Rhines and Megan Flowers turned out to be excellent showings for Villanova's top two recruits of the season. In the first race of both ladies' college careers, the two runners finished in the fourth and fifth positions. Rhines, the fourth-place finisher, completed the course at 17:29.1 with Flowers close behind with a time of 17:31.1.

Even though they are technically still freshmen, Head Coach Stern said, "They're really not freshmen anymore."

Once that first race is out of the way, many of the normal youthful anxieties are put at ease. Freshmen Stacy Robinson, whose 35th position was not counted in the final team score, also ran a very good race.

"Stacy showed a lot of talent out there and she is going to be a big factor for us down the road," Stern said.

The ladies' mentor believes the finishes were a "tremendous accomplishment for all of the freshmen."

Sophomore Becky Spies and senior Irene Ruopoli, two of the returning runners on the squad, finished 11th and 30th respectively. Their times were 17:59.9 for Spies and 18:38.3 for Ruopoli. Their improvements have been very pleasing to Stern, who hopes to see their strength continue.

This weekend's meet at the Boston College Invitational will contain nothing new as far as the competition goes. As usual, Villanova will be facing top opponents so that it does not have time to lose any of its focus on the national title. The meet's opponents include powerful Providence in addition to strong teams from both Boston College and Syracuse.

With this being the second meet of the season, do not be too surprised to see a perfect score of 15 from the 'Nova squad. A score of 18 in the last invitatioonal was close to perfection and that included some first-race jitters.

Volleyball trounces UPenn, La Salle

By MICHAEL MARANO
Staff Reporter

The traditional Big Five play began this week for the women's volleyball team with a convincing win over LaSalle last Wednesday night and an aggressive win over UPenn. The Cats are preparing for upcoming conference clashes against Pitt, Seton Hall, and Connecticut.

The LaSalle match, Sept. 16, was an overwhelming victory for the Cats. They won in straight games, (15-3, 15-9,, 15-2), in a relatively short match of 57 minutes. Becky Kulbago, a junior from Middleburg Heights, Ohio, led the smashing attack with eight kills.

The Cats journeyed to the Penn State Invitational Tournament Sept. 18. In their opening match against West Virginia, the Cats were defeated by an unyielding Mountaineer team in five games, (5-15, 15-9, 8-15, 15-9, 15-7). Kulbago once again led the Cats with 19 kills, and sophomore Mara Austrins added 15 kills. Returning All-Big East selection Vicky Dispenza contributed 52 assists.

The second day of the tournament did not become any easier. The Cats played two matches against nationally ranked teams. In the first match, the Cats lost in straight games to Brigham Young University-Hawaii, (16-14, 15-5, 15-11). Kulbago scored 12 kills and Pam Clifford, also a returning All-Big East selection, added 11 kills. Later that night, the Cats once again lost in straight games. This time they lost to the host Nittany Lions by the score of 15-5, 15-1, 15-2. No Cats registered double figures in kills against the No. 17-ranked team in Division I-A.

The Cats were pleased to return to the Philadelphia area for their Sept. 20 contest against UPenn at the Palestra. 'Nova defeated the host Quakers 13-15, 15-9, 15-10, 15-7. Mara Austrins had a season-high 24 kills and Dispenza registered 56 assists and two service aces. Kulbago had 17 kills and Clifford chipped in with 11 more. 'Nova raised its Big Five record to 2-0. The Cats have not lost to another Big Five team since the 1990 season.

The team has the first part of the week off, hoping to gain momentum for their match Friday night against defending Big East Conference champion Pitt. The Panthers have won the last four Big East titles. The match will be played tonight at 7 p.m. at Jake Nevin Field House

Cats beat rival UPenn; drop 2 in Big East

By BOB TRAVISANO
Staff Reporter

There seems to be a trend forming for the women's soccer team. The road trips are long and fruitless, and the in-state contests against hometown rivals produce victories.

Last week's trek up to New England proved to be ill-fated for the Cats, as 'Nova dropped both games to its northern foes Boston College and Providence College.

The Cats notched victory No. 2 on the season against UPenn, eeking past the Quakers 1-0. The highlight of the game was the sole score for 'Nova — "The most beautiful part of the game," said Head Coach Shelly Chamberlain.

The play originated deep in the Wildcat backfield. Sophomore Beth Parrish sent a pass to Lesile Coleman, who then crossed it to Sandy Ross. Ross headed the setup past the UPenn goalkeeper; it would prove to be the game-winner.

The defense was again solid.Goalie Danielle Fagan posted her first shutout of the season, recording six saves along the way.Coleman also stood out on the defensive end.

"(Leslie) marked one of their best players and made her ineffective," said Chamberlain.

The two games against B.C. and Providence were a different story, though.

> The defense is great, but they can't hold up forever. We need a force on attack generated from the midfield.
> Head Coach Shelly Chamberlain

Against the Lady Friars, 'Nova was beaten 5-1 by a P.C. team which made a majority of its shots on goal.

"Providence didn't take a lot of shots," said Chamberlain. "They just had a lot of high percentage shots."

P.C. wound up scoring five times on just eight shots, while the Cats produced one goal on five shots. Sarah Levandusky notched the lone goal off a Stacy Waller assist.

"I really thought we had a good chance to win, but we couldn't get any good shots over their very tall, powerful defense," said Chamberlain about the 2-0loss to B.C.

The 'Nova defense was also tough, knocking down 14 Eagle shots on net. One particular bright spot was Rose Miller who was inserted in the lineup.

"She proved to be a strong player, a dominant force whose skills were great," said Chamberlain.

Despite the slow start, Chamberlain remains optimistic. "It's not impossible to come back (with a winning season)," said Chamberlain. "The defense is great, but they can't hold up forever. We need a force on attack generated from the midfield."

The next games for the Cats are against Lafayette at home and at St. John's. Chamberlain views these games as attainable wins.

"We need 'em, we want 'em, we'll get 'em," he said.

Mahon, Quintana, Hartman lead X-Country

By LARRY LANZA
Staff Reporter

Three of the nation's giants fell all in one meet when the Villanova men's cross-country team surprised a strong field to win the Indiana Invitational Sept. 19 in Bloomington.

Led by an individual victory by senior Terrence Mahon, the Wildcats opened their season by outrunning East Tennessee State, Penn State, and Tennessee, who entered the race with respective NCAA Pre-Season Poll rankings of sixth, 15th, and 17th.

On the strength of Mahon's sixth cross-country win in his last seven races and an excellent team effort by the Cats, 'Nova has now forced some change in the polls. In the wake of their defeated opponents, Villanova now moves from 22nd to 12th, one position ahead of the Nittany Lions and five slots ahead of the Volunteers.

"We're back," said Head Coach Marty Stern of a Villanova team that once dominated the national scene for a number of different years during the late '60's, early and late '70's, and early '80's.

"After the meet, that's exactly what the East Tennessee St. coach came up to me and said, so I guess we're gaining a lot of respect against some of the best teams. At the same time, we're still so young."

In highlighting Villanova's youth, the Wildcats had two sophomores, Louie Quintana and Dave Hartman, finish third and eighth, respectively, and had a freshman, Matthew Lamourie, finish 21st to anchor down the team's important fifth and final scoring position. In between, junior Mike Going finished just behind Hartman in 10th.

None in the field were stronger over the 8000 meters (5 mi.) course than Mahon. Villanova's defending Big East and IC4A champion ran at the front along with Quintana and East Tennessee St.'s Seamus Power (2nd) until the final 1000 meters when he pulled away to win by eight seconds in 24 minutes, 21 seconds.

Finishing one second behind Power in 24:30 was Quintana, who out ran fourth place Fred Kieser of Miami and fifth place Bob Hamer of Penn St. by 15 seconds. Behind Quintana, Hartman finished in 25:13, Going in 25:21, and Lamourie in 25:43.

"Last week proved we'll be in the NCAAs; this week will show how we'll probably do there," said Stern.

Komansky leads golf team

BVy LESLIE KRAMER

As Villanova hosted many visitors Sept. 18-20 for Parents' Weekend, its golf team left campus for New Haven, Conn. to compete in the Yale Fall Intercollegiate Tournament. The Cats returned with an impressive seventh-place finish among 34 teams. Junior Greg Komansky, a transfer student from Purdue University, took sixth place with an average score of 75 for three rounds.

The preceding weekend the team played at Seton Hall University, where it placed fifth out of 15 competitors. This weekend it is competing in the Big East Championships at Avenal Country Club in Potomac, Maryland.

Head Coach Jim Spagnollo and team members have high expectations this season. According to junior Jason Cordes the team "is really young but a lot more competitive."

Freshmen Rob Collins and Chris Fiordalski along with Komansky are new this year, while veteran returnees include senior Chris Cox, junior Rob Booth, and sophomore Chad Wasserman.

This is Spagnollo's first year at Villanova after playing with the very successful University of Texas team and reigning as Philadelphia's National Champion.

Basketball looks to future under Steve Lappas played a defensive specialist at the end of close games. He sought team unity and was able to develop good team chemistry.

Thus far, Lappas has developed good chemistry at 'Nova as well.

"The adjustment's been very easy. I don't feel any different," Lappas said.

One thing that will be different is the Cats' style of play. Under Massimino, 'Nova employed a disciplined, often stagnant half-court offense. Fast breaks were about as frequent as tax reductions.

Lappas, however, emphasizes a much quicker pace.

"I'd like to be able to establish a different style — not necessarily use the word 'better,' but 'different,' " Lappas said. "I think establishing this new style is our main goal right now.

"It (the style) is more up-tempo. I don't think anyone's going to ever say that Steve Lappas is a run-and-gun type coach, but I think it will be more up-tempo and less structured. But I don't want 'less structured' to sound disorganized."

Lappas' system allows the players more freedom to create offensive opportunities. It calls for pressure man-to-man defense which should cause more turnovers and lead to easy transition baskets.

Most, if not all, of the players speak enthusiastically of this system.

"I think (Lappas' style) will definitely help the team," said senior forward Calvin Byrd. "My sophomore year we went to the up-tempo game, and we were 5-1 and ranked in the Top 25. But Coach Mass was kind of old-fashioned, so he didn't want to change his style. But Coach Lap, that's his style. I think we'll do real well with that up-tempo style."

Lappas' style can be viewed as an extension of his personality.

He describes himself as being 'a little hyper. I think I'm an excitable type person and I hope that's going to rub off to a degree on the team. I'm very picky. I'm also a perfectionist to a large degree. We want (the team) to play as perfect as they possibly can."

Lappas' strive for perfection is one reason for his successful record. In addition to resurrecting a Manhattan program that had won only 75 games in the eight seasons prior to his arrival, Lappas compiled a 91-31 record while coaching Harry S. Truman High School from 1980-1984. In the 1983-84 season, Lappas directed the Bronx, NY school to the New York City Championship as well as the New York State Class A Championship. He was twice named Coach of the Year by the New York Daily News (1981, 1984).

Having been raised in New York, Lappas is able to relate to the struggles of inner-city kids. When this factor is combined with his youth (he is only 38) and his up-tempo philosophy, Lappas is able to give many city players a favorable impression. This could be a crucial edge in recruiting wars for urban players.

"(Recruiting) is going good," Lappas said. "We're involved with the players we want to be involved with. Whether we get them or not ... If you come in second (recruiting), you might as well come in 72nd."

Lappas probably will not have to worry about finishing that poorly in any recruiting battle.

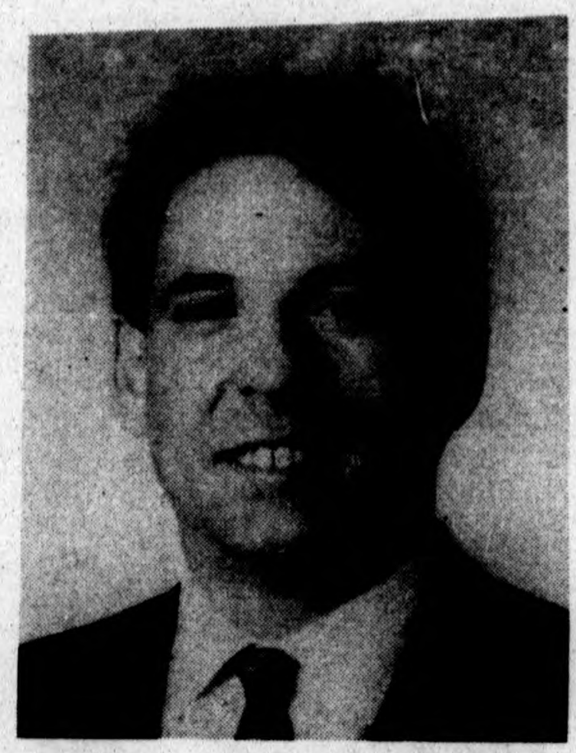
Following Massimino's departure, it was uncertain which, if any, of the current freshmen players would attend Villanova. Roscoe Harris, Eric Eberz and Kerry Kittles all signed letters of intent with the understanding that they would be playing for Massimino. Lappas, however, was able to convince them that Villanova was still the right school for them.

Only Lawrence Thomas slipped out of the picture when he reneged on a verbal commitment to attend Villanova and instead followed Massimino to UNLV.

The loss of Thomas was offset by the signing of Jamie Gregg, a 6-foot-9 forward from Leonia, N.J. Gregg made a verbal commitment with 'Nova after Lappas' appointment was official, which took place after the April signing date.

By salvaging the freshman class, Lappas immediately demonstrated his recruiting prowess.

"I had some trouble," said Lappas of convincing the recruits to attend 'Nova. "It was a tough situation, probably more so for Kerry (Kittles). He's from New Orleans and he had no idea who I was. But he's very happy right now. He's excited."



Head Coach Steve Lappas

"He mainly stood to the same values that Massimino told me," Kittles said of Lappas. "He assured me that I would get my education along with my basketball, and that he'd be there for me for four years."

The freshmen will blend with a core of four seniors to form an interesting combination of veterans and rookies. Lappas feels that the experience of his seniors and the guard play of Lance Miller and Jonathan Haynes will be the strengths of the team. Lappas, though, views the Cats' perimeter game as needing improvement.

The Cats will have the opportunity to polish their skills early in the season, as their schedule opens with games against American University, St. Mary's (CA), UPenn, Vermont, Lehigh and Columbia. After having one of the nation's toughest schedules over the last few years, it seems strange for 'Nova to play such a weak collection of non-conference opponents.

Lappas defends the schedule, pointing out that the Cats have two fewer weeks of practice time to learn a new system because of new NCAA regulations moving the first permitted practice date back to Nov. 1

"Of the four games we get to play around with (not including Big East or Big Five contests), four of them were basically already in," said Lappas. "I think for the first year it's a good schedule. I don't want to say December is a scrimmage schedule ... but at least we have some games in there that we think, even if we don't play well, we still might be able to win. I think it's important in developing a new system that the guys gain confidence."

Byrd agreed with Lappas' assessment of the schedule.

"It's going to be better because it's going to give the young guys confidence," said Byrd. "We have four freshmen and confidence is the main thing. Once you get the confidence rolling, everything else seems to fall in place."

Several players feel they can relate to Lappas better than they could to Massimino, particularly because of his youth. Lappas encourages the players to simply stop in and talk.

"He's a friendly guy," said Kittles. "He's down to earth."

Lappas does not have a specific goal for this season in terms of wins and losses. But he does know what type of team he wants to develop.

"I'd like them to be known as a great defensive team and a hard-playing team," said Lappas. "An emotional team that people will say, 'I hate to play those guys.' "

Lappas expressed optimism at 'Nova's chances in the Big East this season. "We at least have enough to be in there with anybody else," said Lappas. "I don't think it's a league with a dominant team."

It remains to be seen who will emerge as the "Beast of the East." But for now, fans cannot wait to see the Cats and Lappas in action.

Tennis to 5-4; Daley, Barnes lead way

By JENNIFER FAUSTMAN
Staff Reporter

The women's tennis team continues to keep us guessing while remaining over .500. On Sept. 14, 'Nova (5-4) lost to Big East rival, Seton Hall, 8-1. Kelly Barnes, Sept. 28 singles, was the only one to win her match, beating her opponent 6-0, 6-3.

The Cats turned things around Sept. 15th to crush Monmouth with an impressive shutout of 9-0. The Women won all of their singles action in straight sets and Carolyn Daley, No. 1 singles player, lost not a single game.

The tide turned once again, as Villanova lost to crosstown rival Temple 6-3. Once again, Barnes was victorious at singles. She and Daley rallied together to come back, and win in their doubles match, after losing the first set, 4-6.

The loss didn't set the women back as they shutout Textile 8-0, on Sept. 17th at St. Mary's Courts. No. 6 singles player Amy Santaniello had an impressive win, smashing her opponent 6-1, 6-0. The team's record improved to 5-4 after they gained a home win over Fairfield on Friday of Parents' Weekend. Kerry Dillon won her match in tight sets of 6-3, 6-4. Also contributing to the win was Barnes who currently has the best singles record of 8-1, losing only to Georgetown.

"I'm a little surprised," Kelly said of her success. "I haven't really had a bad match, and I'm playing a lot more consistent."

She thinks the team will improve having played most of its difficult matches. "I think coach Langran is happy too," added Barnes. "He lost three of his top singles players last year and I think he's happy with our results so far."

The team is heading to New York to tackle Queens College, St. John's and Concordia this weekend. The next home game will be Oct. 3 against Franklin and Marshall College at 1 p.m. at St. Mary's Courts.

Field hockey sticks it to Rider

By ALEX SCOFIELD
Staff Reporter

In the space of a single week, the Villanova stickwomen endured four intense games and returned from a three-game road trip with a 4-4 record. The high points of the week included a 3-2 come-from-behind victory over Rider and a 4-0 drubbing of Boston College.

The Cats wrapped up their season-opening homestand with a wild 3-2 victory over Rider College Sept. 15. 'Nova's assistant coach Karen Kohler described this as "a great win for us. We needed the spark."

Already down 2-0, 'Nova appeared to pull closer when sophomore JoAnn Brantuk netted a goal late in the first half. However, the referees held a lengthy meeting and declared Brantuk an ineligible player, and took away 'Nova's goal.

"The team got psyched at halftime," said Villanova Head Coach Jackie Gerzabek. "I said we could come back at a 2-0 deficit ... and that is what we did."

Indeed, the team played with extra intensity, and Rider looked helpless against the Villanova surge. Forward Barbara King scored from mid-range early in the half, and this goal stayed on the scoreboard. At 22:00 into the half, senior Krista Saponara charged and scored the game-tying goal. With 0:37 left on the clock, King completed the comeback with her third goal of the season.

Two days later, the Wildcats began a three-game road trip with a 2-1 loss to West Chester. The first half was all West Chester, as the Rams' Donine Renninger scored at 11:47 into the half. With 3:19 remaining in the period, Sarah Harris gave West Chester a 2-0 halftime advantage.

This game marked the debut in the cage for 'Nova goalie Marcie McGoldrick, After a trying first half, McGoldrick settled down to hold the Rams scoreless in the second half. By game's end she had contended with 14 West Chester penalty corners and notched 12 saves.

> The team got psyched at halftime. I said we could comeback at a 2-0 deficit . . . that is what we did.
> Head Coach Jackie Gerzabek

Saponara scored at 10:43 into the second period, which proved to be Villanova's lone goal of the game.

The Wildcats headed north on Saturday to face Providence College in their first Big East game of the season. Returning in goal, Villanova starter Chrissy Thomas described the contest as "the best game we've played so far."

Villanova was up for the challenge that the Lady Friars posed, holding them scoreless in the first half. The Cats took a 1-0 lead at 5:30 in the second when co-captain Melissa Rea drove a shot past PC's Gina Martiniello.

With time running short, Providence gained control of the game. Cathy Guden posted the game-tying goal with 10:25 left in the half, and with 2:35 remaining in the game, Patty Golden scored to put PC up 2-1.

It took the 'Nova stickwomen but one day to even their Big East record (1-1) against Boston College. Villanova's Bree Hawthorne scored an unassisted goal to put the Cats up 1-0 in the first half, but it was the second half in which the Wildcats truly poured it on.

Rea (4 goals, 3 assists) scored 'Nova's second goal, and combined with Hawthorne to set up Staci Verzera's goal on a direct corner which put the Wildcats up 3-0. King capped it off with a fourth goal with 9:34 remaining, and Villanova ended its road trip on a winning note.

Thomas, who recorded her first shutout of the season, said that "everything fell into place. We played our game, and as a team, everything was together."

The Wildcats will play their third Big East game of the season tomorrow at Villanova Stadium, where they face the UConn Huskies at 1 p.m.

Yankee Conference

By FRANK SCHNEIDER
Sports Editor

This week in the Yankee Conference, offense was the story as the winners averaged 34 points.

New Hampshire 28 Lehigh 14

Formerly ranked and last year's Yankee Conference tri-champion, New Hampshire captured its first win this season, a 28-14 victory over Lehigh. New Hampshire tailback Barry Bourassa rushed for 174 yards on 20 carries and two touchdowns (two and 45 yards).

Bourassa became the Yankee Conference's all-time all-purpose yardage leader with 5,302 yards, breaking Gary Pearson's (UMass, 1979-82) mark of 5,292. On defense, the Wildcats were spurred by defensive end Dwayne Gordon. He had 13 tackles and three-and-a-half quarterback sacks.

Delaware 31 Rhode Island 14

Delaware defeated Rhode Island 31-14 to raise its conference record to 2-0 on the season. The Blue Hens dominated the entire contest. Delaware defensive end Matt Morrill sparked a Blue Hens' defense that did not allow Rhode Island to score until midway through the fourth quarter. Morrill had two sacks and returned a blocked punt 26 yards for a touchdown.

Lanue Johnson carried the ball nine times for 79 yards and was a standout on Delaware's offense.

Rhode Island's top performers included quarterback Tony Squitieri, who was 25 for 48 passing with 307 yards and a touchdown. Rams' tight end Darren Rizzi caught 10 passes for 164 yards. He became the seventh player in URI history with 100 receptions and is now fifth in career receiving yardage with 1585.

Delaware has now scored 23 or more points in 17 consecutive games.

Massachusetts 7 Holy Cross 3

Massachusetts defeated Holy Cross 7-3 at Holy Cross. Holy Cross had its 26-game home winning streak and its 39-game winning streak against I-AA opponents snapped in the only defensive struggle of the week.

The only touchdown was scored by Yankee Conference Defensive Player of the Week Ben Albert. The Minutemen's defensive end had seven tackles, two sacks, a fumble recovery and UMass's only score on a 17-yard interception return. UMass is now 1-1 on the season.

Northeastern 47 Maine 36

Northeastern (1-1) upset home favorite Maine in an offensive shootout 47-36. Northeastern quarterback Ralph Barone set school records for the Huskies with 318 yards passing and six touchdowns. He had scoring strikes of 19, 28, 26, 25, 56 and one yards.

Maine middle linebacker Dan Girard had nine tackles and an interception return for a touchdown for the Black Bears, who fell to 2-1. This sloppy contest lasted three hours and 45 minutes and featured 238 yards in penalties.

William & Mary 31 Boston 21

William & Mary continued its rise to a I-AA powerhouse with a 31-21 win over Boston University. The Tribe rose to 2-0 for the first time since 1989 while the Terriers fell to 0-2. Boston University's Chris Helon returned a blocked punt for the only Terrier bright spot in the contest.

This was the first time the Terriers had returned a blocked punt for a touchdown since 1983. For the Tribe, freshman tailback Troy Keen rushed for 72 yards and two touchdowns. Senior linebacker Eric Lambert continued his excellent season with seven tackles and a 25-yard interception runback for a touchdown.

James Madison 38 Hofstra 6

JMU blew out Hofstra 38-6 to up its record to 1-2. The worst defense in the Yankee Conference the first two weeks, JMU held Hofstra to just six points. The Dukes were led by tailback Kenny Sims who had his second 100-yard rushing performance of the season (108 on 18 carries).

He averages 103 yards rushing per game. The Dukes better savor this victory. They travel to play I-AA Champion Youngstown State next week.

Water Polo drops 3; beats Eagles 9-6

By ERIC WARREN
Staff Reporter

The Villanova water polo team (1-3) opened its season this past weekend by playing four games at the Harvard Tournament. The matches gave coach Dan Sharidan an indication of the major strengths and weaknesses of the team. The tournament also showed that the Wildcats need to improve their endurance in order to survive the tough four-match weekend tournaments which comprise the water polo season.

Villanova came out strong against Boston College in the first match of the tournament. At halftime, the score was tied 5-5. The experience of the Wildcats was apparent in the second half as they played tough defense, allowing only one goal. Co-captains Peter Trout and Paul Cera scored two goals apiece and Mark Verotsky added another as 'Nova cruised to a 9-6 victory.

The second game of the tournament pitted the Cats against the host Harvard Crimson. A loud and unruly crowd combined with some questionable officiating helped the Crimson to a 6-3 halftime lead. 'Nova rallied several times in the second half, but were denied by Harvard's tough defense, losing by the score of 11-10.

"Outstanding goaltending by John O'Keefe kept us within striking distance throughout the game," Sharidan said.

Trout and Jim Floerchinger scored three goals apiece in an emotional and heartbreaking loss.

Having played two lengthy and strenuous games already during the day, national powerhouse Navy was the last team the Wildcats felt like playing. The Cats came out tired and exhausted in their third match of the day. Navy was able to open an insurmountable lead and tear through the Villanova defense en route to a 13-4 victory. Floerchinger scored two goals and Ryan Engstrom had three steals for 'Nova.

A potent Iona College squad was the Cats' fourth and final opponent of the tournament. Both teams came out strong, and Villanova led 6-5 at halftime.

"We opened up a three-goal lead in the second half, but Iona took full advantage of our mental mistakes," said Coach Sharidan.

Iona's offense was overpowering, scoring two goals in the final three minutes to win 11-9. Cera scored an impressive five goals and Trout added another two in the losing cause. John O'Keefe came up with 12 saves.

The Wildcats will have a four-game homestand this weekend as they host their annual Invitational Tournament. The first game matches Villanova against St. Francis College tonight at 7 p.m. at duPont Pavilion.

Parpan rescues Cats in costly win

By ANDY FITZPATRICK
Sports Editor

Any champion knows how much harder it is to defend a title. And if the No. 3-ranked Cats had not realized that yet, they sure did Sept. 19 against Richmond.

The defending Yankee Conferecne Champions were given all they could handle by a vastly improved Spider squad (1-1) gunning to dethrone the defending champions. Fortunately, for 'Nova (3-0), backup quarterback Bard Parpan came off the bench to rally the lackluster Cats to a 36-33 victory by hitting George Brown for the game-winning TD with 6:52 left to play in the Yankee opener. This wrapped up one of the most exciting games 'Nova has been a part of in recent memory, but it sure was not much fun for Head Coach Andy Talley.

"At least the fans got their money's worth," said Talley. "But this was not a good game for us. We're not known as a team that gives up a lot of big plays but we just lost total control of the game."

Talley is referring to the wild third quarter, when the teams combined to score four TD's in 43 seconds. The unbelievable sequence began innocently enough with a 32-yard TD pass from 'Nova's Tom Colombo to tight end Scott Donald to give the Cats a short-lived 22-14 lead. On Richmond's first play after the ensuing kickoff, quarterback Greg Lilly threw a 78-yard TD pass to Rod Boothes.

But the Cats were not done. On their next play, tailback Eric Hunt took the handoff and escaped up the middle for an 80-yard TD. Richmond's Boothes capped off the frenzy with an untouched 94-yard kickoff return for the score. At this point, the Cats still led 29-26.

> Brad came in and did a fabulous job. When the bell rang, he grabbed everyone by the throat and said 'let's go'.
> Head Coach Andy Talley

After another Richmond touchdown, the Cats found themselves trailing midway through the fourth quarter 33-29. And when 'Nova regained possession on their own 47, the Cats had a new quarterback on the field.

Parpan, replacing the ineffective Colombo, immediately hit Brown for 21 yards. After another first down, Parpan found a diving Brown again in the end zone on third-and-goal from the 15 to give the Cats the win.

"Brad came in and did a fabulous job," said Talley. "When the bell rang, he grabbed everyone by the throat and said 'let's go.' "

This does not necessarily mean, though, that Parpan is now the starter. Talley said he will make up his mind before the next game, squelching talk of a possible quarterback controversy.

The Cats, however, paid a heavy price for the win. All-Yankee safety Barry Alvis tore his anterior cruciate ligament on his left knee and will miss the entire season. Starting tailback Kevin Mosley is out six weeks with a broken left hand.

Fortunately, the team has this week off to prepare for Boston University Oct. 3. At 3-0, the Cats have the same record as last year at this point. But this team is not playing even close to the level attained last season, when all the pieces fell into place. It is too early to say that they won't this year but with uncertainty on offense, costly injuries, and a lack of intensity, this team has a long way to go.

NOTES: Villanova Stadium drew a crowd of 11,364 on Parents' Weekend, the last of a three-game homestand ... BU travels to UMass tomorrow looking for its first win of the year against two defeats. 'Nova beat the Terriers 56-6 last season ... Tight end Scott Donald not only had a big game (six catches, 107 yards) on the field, but also impressed a pair of scouts from the New York Jets. Linebacker Curtis Eller and defensive tackle Chris Grychowski also drew considerable praise ... The Delaware Watch: The Blue Hens (2-0) crushed Rhode Island 31-14 last week. This week they take on West Chester, a Division II team that the Cats beat 26-6. The anticipated Yankee Conference showdown between the potential unbeatens is Oct. 17 at Villanova Stadium.

Soccer beats G'town; now 5-1

By MICHEL DAVIES
Staff Reporter

It is often difficult to live up to expectations. But the Villanova men's soccer team has not had any problems fulfilling them thus far. With a 5-1 record, it seems as though the Wildcats are ready to surpass them.

Eric Hinds and Ken Santos led the team with two goals and one goal, respectively, as the Cats beat the Georgetown Hoyas 3-1 in 'Nova's Big East opener.

The Wildcats struck first. Georgetown was on the offensive when the play was broken up, and Hinds was able to control the ball at midfield. With the Hoya defenders playing close to the 50-yard line, Hinds needed merely to outrun them to the net. The lightning fast forward had no problem doing that. After the defenders were beaten, Hinds was able to lay the ball in the back of the net for his first goal of the game.

The Cats struck again later in the half. Santos received a great pass on the wing from defenseman Scott Dougherty, put a move on the defender and dribbled to the goal. With another fake, Santos dribbled by the goalie and scored the goal to stake 'Nova to a 2-0 lead.

"Kenny really made the goalie look stupid. He just dribbled right on by him," Hinds said.

After the Hoyas closed the gap to 2-1, Hinds sealed the victory with his second goal and the team's third. It was enough, and the Wildcats went on to beat Georgetown 3-1.

Other positive aspects were the performance of the defense and bench. Head Coach Larry Sullivan displayed great confidence in his bench by using six different players on defense. Freshman goalie Alecko Zeppos also played well.

"Zeppos played his best game of the season by far. There were a lot of shots on goal, and allowing one into the net was very impressive. He made it possible for us to win this game," Hinds said.

The fans seemed to appreciate the hard play of the team. There were nearly 500 on hand for the game.

The next Big East challenge for the team will be when the team plays Pitt Sunday. 'Nova is going to have to play well in order to beat the Panthers. But if the team plays as well as they did against the Hoyas, look for Sullivan's squad to go 2-0 in the Big East.

The men's soccer team opened with two wins in the Big East.

This Week: Ron Twomey, Volleyball

By RON TWOMEY
Head Coach

Despite a disappointing 3-7 start, we believe that our early experiences have prepared us to achieve our goals for the rest of the season and especially in the Big East. Playing a bunch of road matches against tough competition prepares us to take a good shot at winning the Big East.

Winning and losing are always the bottom line in sports, but there are many other important dimensions to college athletics, and we have had some great experiences this season. We played against No. 17-ranked Penn State, and the rallies were so spectacular that the 1500 fans sounded like the crowd at the Super Bowl. By the end of the match, many of the fans were rooting for Villanova because of the great effort our players made. The previous weekend, we just missed taking a game from a powerful San Diego State team, and everyone associated with our program was optimistic about how our team looked in that contest. We are 2-0 in Philadelphia area competition and hope to win the Big Five Championship for the third year in a row.

Thus far, we have faced every kind of adversity and the team is still excited about trying to win the Big East. We have played against tough competition and, at times, we suffered from a case of team jet-lag. We played nine matches in 10 days and only one of those matches was played at home. Roughly half of the team has been crippled by injury; for one match, we had only eight players available.

These experiences have inspired the team to work harder and we know that none of the teams in the Big East will be tougher than many of the opponents we have already faced. Returning All-Big East performers Vicky Dispenza (senior setter) and Pam Clifford (senior outside hitter) will be key players this season.

The team will continue to improve in the future with the help of five sophomores plus freshman setter Cari Clawson. Villanova graduates, Jonathan (Mo) Clough (1991) and Karen Conroy (1988) are doing exceptional work as new additions to the coaching staff.

Our quest for the Big East Championship begins Friday, Sept. 25 at 7 p.m. in the Jake Nevin Fieldhouse vs. Pittsburgh, a perennial conference power. Pitt, despite the loss of six seniors due to graduation, is ranked as the favorite to win the Big East by the preseason coaches poll. Seton Hall visits Wednesday, Sept. 30, 7:30 p.m.

The players have set a goal to work hard at playing together as a team and maintaining the kind of unified effort which is hard to beat. As a first year coach at Villanova, I have been very impressed by the "team spirit" expressed by everyone that I have met. I hope that spirit extends into the student body and that everyone will get a chance to check out a volleyball match. People who have not seen the sport will be pleasantly surprised at how exciting it is, and if we get good support, this team should be right at the top of the Big East and get a good national ranking. Admission is an unbeatable value — free! Come on out and have a good time watching your Villanova volleyball team.

Bush edges out opponents in poll

By LARISA EPATKO
News Editor

The Villanovan conducted a poll on students' opinions about the 1992 presidential elections. Most of the students are planning to vote, and the majority favor re-electing President George Bush and Vice President Dan Quayle.

Out of 168 responding students, 64 are voting Nov. 3 for the Bush/Quayle ticket, and 55 support Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton and Sen. Al Gore.

Some of the polled students wrote about Bush's experience and concern with Clinton's record as governor.

"I'm not so much voting for Bush as I am against Clinton. What has Clinton done for Arkansas that would mandate four years in the White House? Not much. At least with Bush we know what to expect," said Eric Begg, a sophomore mechanical engineering major.

"Foreign affairs are important at this point in history, and a president with no experience could jeopardize our standing while learning the ropes," said senior political science major Noelle Rasmussen. "Although I do like Clinton's domestic policies, they seem to be very expensive to implement on the scale he wants," she added.

Most support for Clinton seems to have arisen out of dissatisfaction with the present administration's actions and lack of action.

"Basically I feel that 12 years of unfulfilled promises are too much. Bill Clinton appears to be more understanding and realistic in his opinions," Kathleen Ottina, a senior general arts major, said.

"George Bush is like a mother who bakes cookies for all the other kids in the neighborhood and forgets about her own. Domestic issues need to be taken care of now before foreign policy is addressed," said senior Brian Goebel, a general arts major.

Both candidates' campaigns have been addressing the idea of change in the nation's present state, especially concerning the economy.

"[Bush] is truly committed to improving our country in the future. Our country needs to grow through business and not through government spending, which would only increase our national debt," said Ryan Fannon, a communications senior.

"I think that change is necessary and if the incumbent himself is speaking of change that just reaffirms the need," said junior Margaret Hughes, a history major.

The Career Planning and Placement office will host Career Day '92 in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center Oct. 6 from 11 a.m.-3 p.m.

Carol Lloyd, the on-campus recruiting coordinator, and Kathy Bracken, the assistant coordinator, have organized the event in which over 45 companies will participate.

"A variety of companies from technical fields, education, the non-profit sector, the government, the business industry, and the pharmaceutical industry will be present. We try to get a little bit of everything," said Lloyd.

A few well known companies scheduled to attend are Chase Manhattan Bank, the Drug Enforcement Administration, MCI, Northwestern Mutual Investments and State Farm Insurance.

Dobbin addresses University issues: rightsizing, west campus development

By ELIZABETH BARSZCZEWSKI
Assistant News Editor

The Villanovan interviewed the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, University president this past week.*

How do you think the Sesquicentennial celebration has progressed thus far?

"I am thoroughly delighted with how the events have gone so far. In fact I have a pile of letters from parents who were here this week for Parents' Weekend who have written beautiful letters about how they enjoyed the weekend and how classy all the events were. I was very pleased with all the events that led up to the official Sesquicentennial opening on Parents' Weekend, such as the Villanova garden, the historical exhibit and the scale model of the University. We had a nice turnout for those and a very positive reception by the Villanova community."

What is your response to criticism of the University for its financial management of the Sesquicentennial and allegations that the University is spending too much money on the Sesquicentennial?

"I have received one letter to that effect. But other than one letter, I have not heard that kind of criticism. There has been very positive reception from alumni around the country about the high quality of the materials that have been sent out. I think the overwhelming majority of Villanovans see that something as important as the Sesquicentennial should be presented with that type of class. I think this is an entirely positive moment in the life of the school. People have to realize that you need to spend money to raise money. The purpose of the Sesquicentennial is to make people more conscious of the school and its tradition. We've been very careful with the budget. We have not overspent at all. That budget was approved over a year ago by the Board of Trustees and was very carefully evaluated by the Board."

What is the Capital Campaign and what are its goals?

"The Capital Campaign was officially approved by the Board of Trustees last December. We are in the 'quiet phase' of the campaign. Before officially announcing the campaign the University solicits leadership gifts. The purpose of this is to have a nucleus gift fund so that when the campaign is announced you have a good idea of how much you'll realistically expect to raise. We plan to formally announce the campaign when we reach what we consider to be the half-way point of a reasonable Capital Campaign which we have estimated to be $100 million. The half-way point would therefore be $50 million. The campaign has been extremely successful so far."

Sexual assault policy formalized by committee

By JENNIFER CASTELLI
News Editor

A committee made up of administration and faculty members formalized a University policy on sexual assault over the summer, said the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of Students. The policy was distributed during Orientation to freshmen and pamphlets soon will be available for the entire Villanova community.

"We're trying to make an attempt to better educate people about [sexual assault]," said Stack.

The policy contains a definition of offenses which include rape, statutory rape, involuntary deviate sexual intercourse, voluntary deviate sexual intercourse, indecent assault and indecent exposure, according to the University pamphlet.

"Villanova University recognizes that campus sexual assault is a serious nationally occurring problem. The University makes a strong commitment to prevention, victim support, and imposition of serious sanctions against those who violate the policy," according to the pamphlet.

At the University during 1991, there were two rapes reported, compared to four reported cases in 1990, according to crime statistics released by Public Safety.

The University has never been lenient in dealing with sexual assault and students should be aware that this is unacceptable behavior, said Stack.

The policy states that anyone charged with sexual assault can be prosecuted under the Pennsylvania Crimes Code and disciplined by the University. "Even if criminal justice authorities choose not to prosecute, the University can and will pursue disciplinary action taking into account the wishes of the victim," according to the pamphlet.

The pamphlet also identifies University and community organizations that can be contacted for help if a sexual offense does occur. These organizations include the police department, Public Safety, the Dean of Students office, hospitals, resident assistants, the infirmary, the University Counseling Center, the Center for Alcohol and Drug Assistance, Campus Ministry or Women Organized Against Rape.

The code also sets forth that privacy and control is important to victims of sexual assault. The University takes into account the wishes of the victim when dealing with these incidences, according to the pamphlet.

Also, the policy does not only apply to University students but to the entire Villanova community. "Both rape and attempt at rape constitute the deepest affront to University standards, and will be treated accordingly," according to the pamphlet.

SALAHUDIN, Iraq

Opponents of Saddam Hussein met recently and proclaimed that they would create a federal government in Iraq while continuing to hold a united front against the Iraqi president. This meeting was the first where all major factions were present.

Hussein's opponents range from Islamic fundamentalists to communists. They wish to assure Western and regional powers that Iraq would not suffer or vanquish under post-Hussein conditions.

Many hoped that Hussein would be overthrown by a coup after the Persian Gulf War, but the leader crushed attempts by Kurdish and Shiite groups. Now, international sanctions against Iraq have weakened the country's economy, while a change in British and United States policy towards the opposition groups have helped the factions remain united against Hussein.

LOS ANGELES, Calif.

Tom Bradley, who became the first black mayor of Los Angeles, revealed that he will not bid for re-election after 19 years in office. Bradley will step down from his post this June after holding the job of mayor longer than anyone else in Los Angeles' history.

Bradley has been credited with creating a government which was representative of the ethnicity of the Los Angeles area by providing jobs for minorities as well as uniting the city as a whole.

During Bradley's administration Los Angeles grew as a center of commerce and culture, while housing, the environment, social programs and economic conditions continued to improve and develop.

Though Bradley has not publicly endorsed any possible successor, it has been heard through aides in his administration that City Councilman Michael Woo has been discussed as a possible candidate.

WASHINGTON, D.C.

The House voted to reverse President Bush's policy on nuclear weapons testing Sept. 24. The bill involved the underground nuclear explosions which the House wants to limit and eventually end completely in 1996.

Although the Bush administration had threatened to veto, initially, the White House suddenly accepted the restrictions due to the fact that they were attached to a bill which would provide funds for an experiment involving the "superconducting supercollider," project essential to Bush's possible re-election.

The White House administration wanted six tests a year in order to ensure the safety and workability of the nuclear weapons, while the House desired a nine-month delay of payments on tests, as well as strict conditions and eventual banning of tests occurring after October 1996.

ORLANDO, Fla.

The custody suit involving 12-year-old Gregory Kingsley, the young boy who wishes to "divorce" his parents, went to court this week in Florida. The child wants to be adopted by his foster family whom he has been living with for almost a year.

Though his natural father already relinquished paternal rights, his natural mother, Rachel Kingsley, wanted the boy to be returned to her care. Kingsley's other two sons, formerly in foster care, are now living with her again.

Accusations in the case involved abuse inflicted upon Kingsley by her live-in fiance, a convicted felon, as well as negligence, promiscuity and alcohol and drug abuse on the part of Kingsley. Gregory has said that he has "felt unwanted and unloved most of his life" and wishes to remain in a stable family environment.

This case could set a legal precedent shaping the way the courts and the country at-large view children. The case has brought national attention to the children's rights movement.

New campus computers ease student search for information

By KATHLEEN COONEY
Staff Reporter

A new computer has been made available to students who wish to look up information about themselves and their classes. The computer gives students easy access to information that pertains to them, said the Rev. William McGuire, O.S.A., dean of Enrollment Management.

Students may now look up their course list, GPA, rank, address or transfer credits very quickly and without trouble.

Before the new computers were installed, the process of looking up this information took longer. Each station is equipped with a printer, so that students may print up a copy of their schedule.

The concept for the computer was developed by UCIS, the University computing center, and by McGuire. Clete Rickert did the programming.

Three weeks ago, Rickert tested the computer in the St. Augustine Center for Liberal Arts for any problems, asking students to try it. Many students said they found the directions clear and the computers easy to use.

A computer also has been put in the engineering office. This week there will be computers installed in commerce and finance, nursing and the Registrar's office. Eventually, there will be computers at a number of other locations around campus.

The next step is to use the computers to look at the billing process, funds from financial aid and for a student to be able to change their address, said McGuire.

Joseph O'Brien, author of Boss of Bosses: The Fall of the Godfather — FBI and Paul Castellano gave a lecture Sept. 23 about his experiences working for the FBI against organized crime.

O'Brien was an FBI special agent in New York City for 19 years. Before becoming supervisor of the investigation against organized crime, he supervised the foreign spies division.

O'Brien was placed on the Paul Castellano case in late 1981. Castellano was the godfather of the Gambino crime family from 1976 to 1985.

O'Brien's book discusses Castellano's final years as the godfather and the events which led to his downfall.

O'Brien, as special agent on the investigation, made numerous discoveries concerning organized crime. In 1983, the FBI was able to plant a bug in the kitchen of Castellano's $3.5 million home on Toad Hill in Staten Island, N.Y. The kitchen where the bug was planted was the place where "Big Paul" held his "court," said O'Brien.

With the bug, the FBI was able to retrieve 600 hours of recorded business proceedings involving Castellano, which led to the indictment of many members of the Gambino crime family.

By investigating organized crime, O'Brien became an expert at counter-intelligence. After being placed on the case, O'Brien tried to develop a high-level informant who would give information on Castellano's actions.

O'Brien also interviewed mobsters and their associates. He once interviewed Frank Purdue, who admitted going to Castellano for a favor. O'Brien found he received better information from street confrontations, he said.

O'Brien also received some threats. He was threatened by Castellano's bodyguard Tommy Bilotti after following him, O'Brien said.

According to O'Brien, kinship ties bind the traditional mob. For this reason, there is often inbreeding involved in organized crime. The members of the five New York families: Gambino, Genovese, Colombo, Banano and Lucchesi, try to keep the power of the family in the family.

Castellano and Bilotti were gunned down outside New York City's Spark's Steakhouse by John Gotti's hitmen in 1985. After the Gotti hit, the FBI continued the investigation which eventually led to the arrest of many members of the Gambino crime family.

O'Brien received the Federal Law Enforcement Officer of the Year Award in 1991 for his work in the field. His book was nominated for the Edgar Allan Poe Award in the Fact Crime category.

Volleyball classic benefits charity

By BETSY DONOHUE
Staff Reporter

The second annual Main Line Volleyball Classic was hosted by Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity and Kappa Kappa Gamma Sorority Sept. 26 and 27.

"We came to do some serious jumpin'," said tournament participant William Bennett.

Fifty mens' teams and 20 womens' teams competed on the grounds between St. Thomas of Villanova Church and Dougherty Hall. This area gave the tournament more nets and playing area as opposed to last year's fewer and more expensive sand courts, said Tim Lederer, tournament chair.

"I was happy to be able to compete in this tournament and to get a taste of Villanova life. I hope I will have the same opportunity to play next year," said participant and area resident, Matt Benc.

"I think it's a good opportunity to make a lot of people look bad," said senior Matt Wrobleski.

The tournament winners, Rob Walsh, Brendan Ivory and Mark Gilrain were awarded a gift certificate to 21st Century Sound for the approximate cost of three feet of CDs. Other prizes were awarded through a tournament raffle.

The $1 ticket bought a chance for a gift certificate to the Villanova Diner, Marbles, Marita's Cantina, Gators, Chili's, Silk of Siam or Gullifty's.

The proceeds from the $30 team registration fees, T shirt sales and the raffle were donated to the Lupus Foundation of Philadelphia.

"It's a great opportunity for the whole campus, including alumni, freshmen and Greeks, to have fun playing a great sport and at the same time help support a worthwhile charity," said Lederer.

The tournament's donation goal of $3,000 was achieved.

BUILDINGS

Much of Villanova's beauty, and the memories that graduates have of college life, are owed to buildings which have grown up on campus over the decades. The oldest of these structures is the present Alumni Hall, begun in 1848 and designed in the Greek Revival style. In 1873-1874, Villanova added a center and west wing to the building. Known simply as the College Building for many years, it once housed the entire college, as well as an academy (or secondary school).

The next major undertaking was the St. Thomas of Villanova Church. Designed in the Victorian Gothic style by Edwin F. Durang and built between 1883 and 1887, its soaring twin spires have become a local landmark and a powerful symbol of Villanova. A dozen years later, in 1899, the college broke ground for a new monastery and Main College Hall. Designed by Durang in the Collegiate Gothic style, the structures extended end-to-end for nearly 500 feet along the crest of a ridge facing the Lancaster Pike. Main College Hall was gutted by fire in January 1928 and a new interior was built within the original walls. Today the rebuilt structure is known as Tolentine Hall. The monastery of 1899 was destroyed by fire in August 1932 and was replaced in the following year by the present monastery.

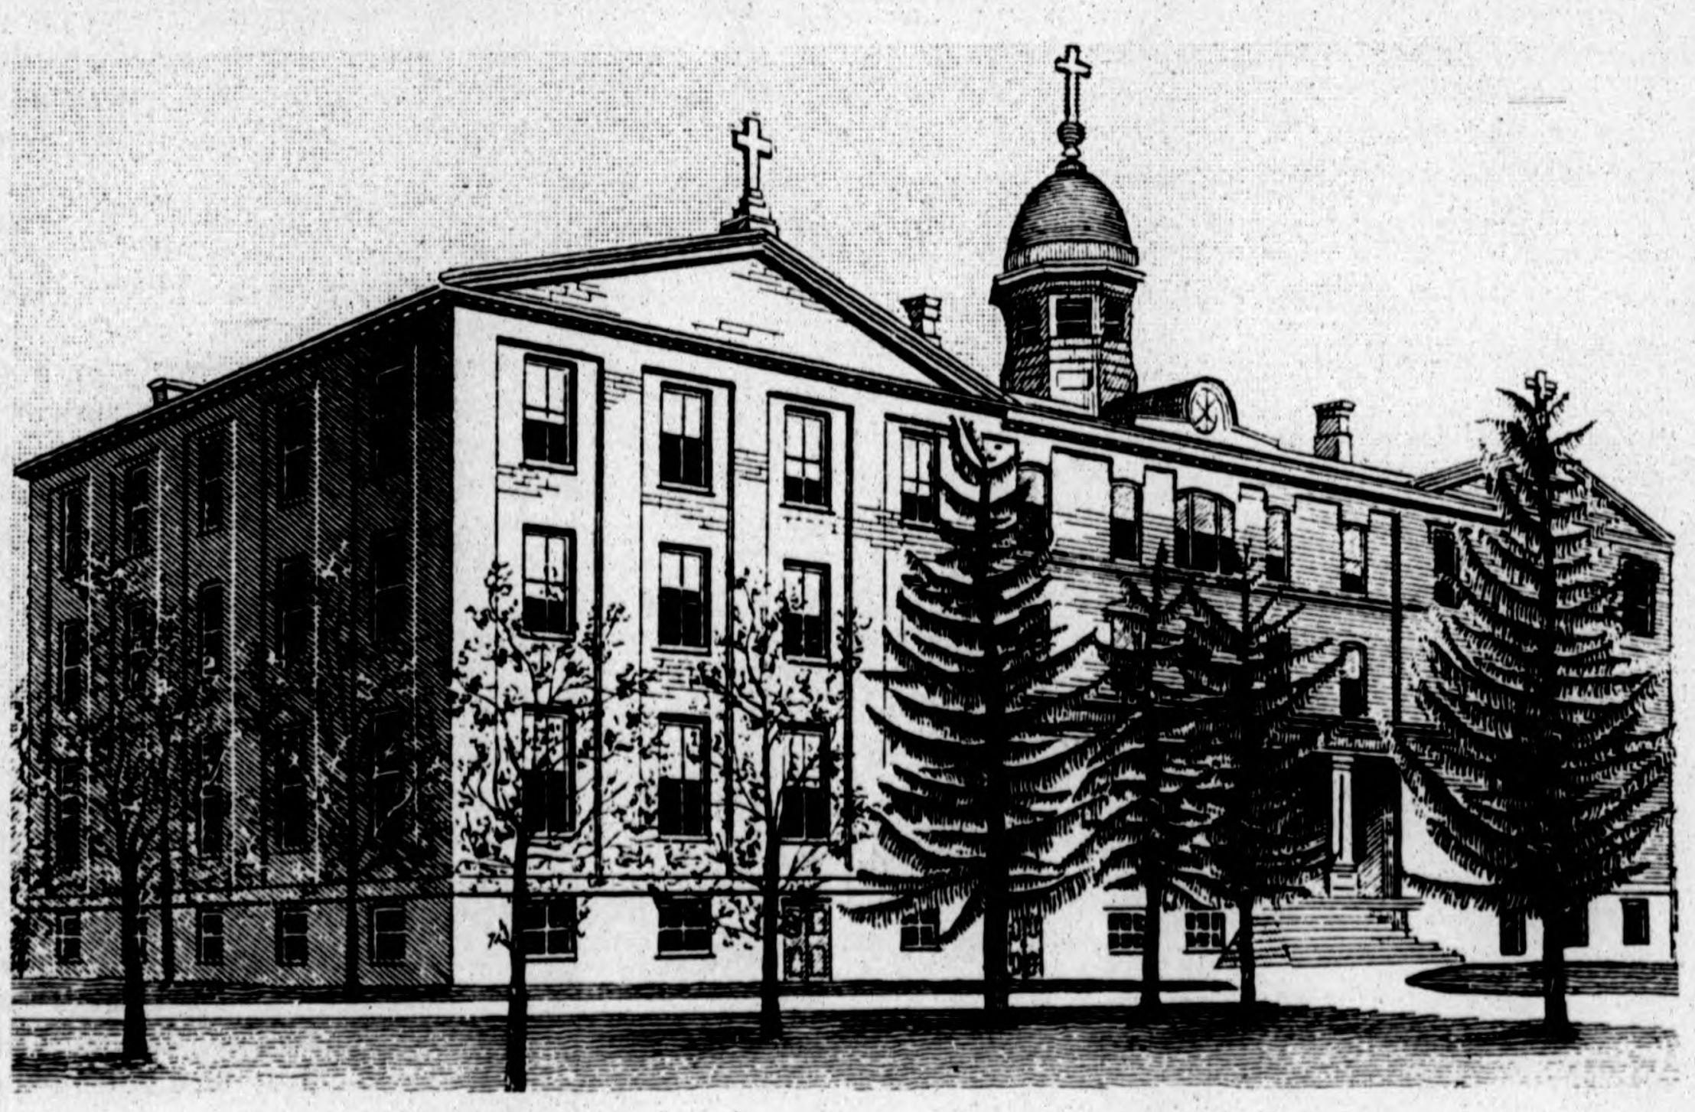
St. Rita's Hall arose from the ashes of yet another fire in January 1912. It destroyed the old Belle-Air mansion which the Augustinians had purchased in 1841 and which had been the first home of Villanova College. Designed by George F. Dobbin in plain Colonial Revival style, it was a departure from the series of Gothic Revival Structures that the college had begun with St. Thomas of Villanova Church in 1883.

The same year that St. Rita's was begun (1912), ground was broken for a new seminary building. Named for its donor, Bernard Corr, the edifice was designed, once again, by Durang. Rendered in a Gothic style, it fit well with the growing number of Gothic structures on campus.

Tremendous growth in enrollments at Villanova during the 1920s led to an ambitious building campaign. The college erected two new dormitories, Austin Hall (begun in 1923) and Fedigan Hall (begun in 1928). In 1930 it built a Finance and Commerce Building (now Vasey Hall) and dedicated the present Jake Nevin Field House in 1932. Plans for several more dormitories and a new library had to be abandoned because of the deepening economic depression of the 1930s.

The depression and then World War II produced a dearth of building which lasted for 15 years. Postwar prospertiy and returning servicemen, many of them taking advantage of educational benefits for veterans, touched off another building boom at Villanova. In 1947, the college broke ground for a new library (now Falvey Hall), a Navy ROTC building, and a Chemical engineering building. In the mid-1950s Villanova, now a university, erected two dormitories, Sullivan Hall (1954) and Sheehan Hall (1957), a new Commerce and Finance building called Bartley Hall (1956), and the law school, Garey Hall (1956). In 1960 a new science facility, Mendel Hall, began to take form and two years later St. Mary's Hall was begun.

The post-war baby boom continued to fuel enrollments and physical expansion. In 1968 the University opened a new wing to the library, by then known as the Falvey Memorial, as well as a bookstore and office building named Kennedy Hall. In 1974 a new wing for Chemical Engineering was opened, in 1980 the Connelly Center began serving the University family, and in 1986 the du Pont Pavilion was completed. At the beginning of the Sesquicentennial year, 1992, Villanova dedicated its latest structure, the St. Augustine Center for the Liberal Arts.



Columbus's discovery focus of Native American conference

University Press Release

Villanova University will present the Native American perspective of the Spanish discovery of America in a day-long conference, "The Voices of the Americas: North American Indians," sponsored by the Center for Peace and Justice Education Oct. 3 in Connelly Center.

"The conference presentations will relate a realistic portrayal of the Native Americans as a people who were quite highly sophisticated and civilized, in contrast to the frequently portrayed image of the savage," said Barbara Wall, O.P., director of the Center for Peace and Justice Education.

The Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., University president, will open the proceedings with a welcoming address at 9 a.m. Walter Echohawk, attorney for the Native American Rights Fund, will deliver the 9:15 a.m. keynote address. Talks by Native American scholars and professionals will follow on topics such as "Invisible Authority: The Impact of Colonization on the Rights of Native American Women" and "Land Sales of the Lenape: Reflections of their Life and Culture." An exhibit of American Indian arts, crafts and books will be on display. Registration is necessary through the Center for Peace and Justice Education.

The Center for Peace and Justice Education will present the play, "Death Songs: Columbus and the Conquest of Paradise," in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center Oct. 12 at 7:30 p.m.

For many Native Americans, the 500th anniversary of Columbus' discovery of the New World is a time of mourning, not celebration. This drama provides a hard look at the realities of the Spanish conquest under the command of Christopher Columbus from the viewpoint of the Taino Indians. Tickets are available to the public for $5.

Administrator demoted after releasing students' names to authorities

By College Press Service

The chancellor of New York's state university system apologized to students, faculty and staff at the State University College at Oneonta after an administrator gave a list of the school's black male students to police investigating an off-campus assault.

"I am saddened and disturbed over the action ... that singled out African-American male students," said D. Bruce Johnstone, chancellor of the State University of New York. "This was a serious and regrettable action. I extend my deepest apologies to those students as well as to all other students, faculty and citizens offended by this incident."

Leif Hartmark was suspended without pay for a month and demoted from vice president of administration to director of finance and administration after he gave police a list of the school's 125 black male students on Sept. 4.

A woman was assaulted off campus, and she told police she had been attacked by a black male.

Hartmark sent letters of apology to all the students on the list, school officials said. He was unavailable for comment.

Presidential candidates offer differing views on abortion

By College Press Service

If a single issue has deeply divided the country, split campuses, threatened friendships and fractured political parties, it is the issue of abortion rights.

"Pro-life" or "pro-choice," have become buzzwords this election year, peppering campaign speeches and churning up frenzied debate.

Some college students will be voting for the first time, many of them attracted to the polls because of personal convictions about abortion.

President Bush is the pro-life candidate, while Bill Clinton represents the pro-choice movement. Because more college-age women are affected by abortion than any other age group, both candidates have strong support on campuses throughout the nation.

President Bush supports a constitutional amendment that would outlaw abortion except in cases of rape, incest or when the mother's life is endangered.

"President Bush supports the right to life and believes it is a precious gift," said Darcey Campbell, assistant press secretary of the Bush-Quayle campaign. "He believes all humans have intrinsic dignity and worth. He is opposed to abortion except when the life of the wife or mother is threatened.

"The president clearly understands it is a difficult and painful decision for most Americans," she added.

Bush has vetoed legislation that would have overturned the "gag" rule, which bans abortion counseling by federally funded family-planning clinics.

> I will vote for somebody who will take a stand in defense of the unborn because that is the principal, compassionate stand to take.
> Christina Piaz, Texas Collegians for Life

Bush has angered abortion rights activists, including some within his own party, with his opposition to abortion.

This summer, hundreds of thousands of activists marched past the White House with signs that read "George, Are You Free to Baby-sit?" and "Free Barbara Bush." The demonstrators took to the streets when the Supreme Court, in a 5-4 decision, voted to uphold most provisions of a restrictive Pennsylvania abortion law, but stopped short of overturning Roe v. Wade, the decision that made abortion legal in 1973.

Clinton supports abortion rights, opposes the "gag" rule, supports federal funding for abortion for low-income women and opposes spousal consent laws.

As governor of Arkansas, Clinton signed a law providing for parental notification when minors seek abortions, but his campaign staff said he has revised his position.

"Initially, the governor did not think a young woman should have to go through a procedure like that alone," Max Parker, deputy press secretary, said about Clinton's original stand in favor of parental notification.

"Since that time, the governor has said he would feel comfortable with [the accompanying person] not being limited to the parent, but possibly a counselor, or a minister," she said.

"Bill Clinton believes that the most serious decision in a woman's life should be made by the woman and not by the government," said Ethan Zindler, assistant press secretary of the Clinton-Gore campaign in Little Rock, Ark.

Clinton's sentiments are popular with many college students, said Kirsten Shaw, a research assistant in Washington, D.C., and recent graduate of Ohio Wesleyan University.

Dobbin interviewed on campus issues

This year was the first year that Villanova began its plan of rightsizing. What was the motive behind the idea of rightsizing and how has the policy effected Villanova?

"We've overgrown our campus in our judgment. We have a choice. We have to raise money for our endowment. We had to decide what we are going to do with this money. We have decided that the endowment of the school is so important that we're going to make that a priority. We can't spend the money we're raising to build a lot more facilities. What we've decided to do is make the student body a little smaller and that will also have the byproduct of making the University a little more selective. At the same time it will give us the opportunity to refurbish space. The new liberal arts building has opened up a lot of space in Tolentine and Vasey. Next year there will be about 12 new classrooms in Vasey Hall. The word around here, as far as I'm concerned, is quality. I want every aspect of the school to have high quality. We consider 5,700 full-time undergraduates ideal for the size that Villanova should be."

What is the status of west campus development and when is construction expected to be complete?

"The real construction has not begun yet. Right now site work is being done. The area is being cleared for construction. If everything goes well we are planning the groundbreaking for February. We plan to have the dorms operational for Fall of 1994 which is when the current freshmen class will be juniors. So far everything is on target."

How is Dr. Helen Lafferty's new position of University vice president helping with the administration of Villanova?

"It's working out beautifully. Right now she's working on a lot of major projects for me. The important part of her job is cross functional issues. These are issues which come under the control of various vice presidents. I think what Dr. Lafferty's job will help us do is coordinatae the different issues which come under the control of different vice presidents. All the vice presidents have equal status but Dr. Lafferty's area of responsibility is essentially the same as mine, the whole University. Dr. Lafferty helps pull everything together."

Community college grads achieve equal rate of success

By College Press Service

Community college students are no less likely to succeed when they transfer to a four-year college than students who began their academic career at a four-year institution, a University of Michigan study said.

The report contradicts previous research findings that found students who attended a community college are at a "definite disadvantage" in earning a degree or going to graduate school.

"Having attended community college does not appear to lessen the likelihood of their graduating from college, enrolling in graduate school or aspiring to attend graduate school in the future," said Valerie Lee, an associate professor of education who conducted the study.

Lee tracked 422 students who entered community college and transferred to a four-year institution, and compared them with 1,899 students who went from high school directly to a four-year school. In both groups, 69 percent of the students either graduated or were ready to graduate from the four-year institution.

Career Day

needed to go about a job search," said Lloyd.

Career Day is a chance for seniors to make contacts and talk to people in the fields that interest them. Underclassmen can explore some career options, talk to different people about academic majors and begin planning for the future.

"We really would like to stress that Career Day is for all students. Underclassmen should really take advantage of the opportunity, especially if they are trying to decide on a particular career path. It will be helpful for them to talk to recruiters from different companies, and it's also a good opportunity to make contacts for summer employment and internships," said Lloyd.

Because of the tight job market this year, Career Day will be a valuable asset for many students. Students are encouraged to bring some copies of their resume with them to be handed out to recruiters.

One of the biggest advantages of Career Day is the chance for students to meet employers without the formality of a one-on-one interview.

"The students sometimes feel a little intimidated, which is understandable, but once they get over the initial fear of how they should begin their job search, they feel more comfortable about going out in the future and speaking to perspective employers," said Lloyd.

Students get a chance to talk to Villanova alumni and can give their resume to a number of companies in the field in which they are interested.

Past Career Days have been held for two consecutive days and were usually held in DuPont Pavilion. This year the career office decided to have two separate days, one in the fall and one in the spring.

"We planned the March Career Day this year because as much as we would like to believe that students are prepared and ready at the beginning of their senior year, many are not. So, we felt by the spring we are able to contact those students who are just beginning their search," said Lloyd.

The next Career Day will be held March 16 for those students who are not yet thinking about the job hunt.

Election

decided not to vote, saying they do not have enough information or do not like any of the candidates.

"I don't want to be responsible for putting one of those two in the White House," wrote one student.

Students who also expressed dissatisfaction with the two major candidates were the nine voting for Ross Perot if he re-enters the race.

"[Perot] will listen to people [and has] no set agenda so he can make policy as he goes along," said Brittany Speers, senior nursing major.

Perot said on Cable News Network's Larry King Live Sept. 28 that he would decide whether to re-enter the presidential race by the end of the week.

Twenty-eight of the students surveyed were undecided about which candidate to vote for in the elections.

"Each of them has strong and weak points, and I need more information before I decide," said Thomas Mooney, a senior accounting major.

Another issue brought to the forefront in this year's elections involves family values.

"George Bush is not only a man of great morals and principles, yet someone who will admit he has made some mistakes," said Fannon.

Abdallah Dawod, a sophomore biology major, said in support of Clinton, "it's time to bring in someone that has a vision as to how to improve America."

Rubber duckie race supports charity

University Press Release

Adopt a rubber duckie and benefit a worthy cause at "The Great Beta Theta Pi Rubber Duckie Race" at Villanova University Oct. 3, at 12:30 p.m. Rain or shine, some 1,500 rubber ducks will flock to the quadrangle between Sullivan and Sheehan halls on campus to compete in the mock olympic mallard meet of the season.

There will be 10 races of 150 ducks each. When the whistle blows signaling the start of each race, the ducks will funnel out of their pool and cruise onto specially erected strips of waterslides. After skimming the slides in neck-to-neck contest, the winners will sail to the finish line through a final funnel system designed to catch the fastest duck. A local fire company will provide the water force to speed the ducks along their course.

Participants can race a duck for a donation of $5, for which they also receive an official certificate of adoption. Prizes include a trip for two to the Bahamas, T shirts and more.

Proceeds will be donated to United Cerebral Palsy of Delaware County, who in conjunction with the Beta Theta Pi fraternity, is sponsoring the race.

The event is open to the public. Ducks can be adopted at the entrance of Connelly Center on campus from now until Oct. 3.

Historical exhibit displays 150 years

By LAUREN WURST
Staff Reporter

The College Bell rang in Connelly Center Sept. 17 signifying the opening of the historical exhibit that tells Villanova's story from the beginning. The display, called "Villanova College to University: 150 Years of Augustinian Tradition and Promise — 1842 to 1992" is comprised of over 300 artifacts that bring to life the University's past and extends to the future.

The project, which took over two years to complete, was led by the Rev. Dennis J. Gallagher, O.S.A., University archivist. With the help of David R. Contosta, part-time Villanova professor, and the exhibit committee, Gallagher compiled 15 display cases of unique artifacts that transport visitors through Villanova's history.

"History teaches us who we are because of where we've been," Contosta said. "We wanted to show how Villanova evolved over 150 years to become the institution of today, emphasizing the points of transition, important achievements and individuals," he added.

Gallagher hopes to "raise the consciousness of the University community. The whole story is told, through depression, war and uprisings in a politically correct way."

The exhibit contains such artifacts as the pennant taken by astronaut Andy Allen aboard Space Shuttle Atlantis, various medallions and an 1848 letter written by Hannah Quigg to her son John.

"It is apparent that close attention was taken in putting the display together. I'm impressed with how history is brought together through small artifacts, such as former students' ID cards or the Jug Book," said senior Amy McAndrews.

The project was organized by the 14 members of the Sesquicentennial Subcommittee of Historical Exhibits and Projects, who selected, identified and labeled all items. As stated in the introduction to the exhibit, "The exhibit committee ... drew upon the resources of the University and Augustinian Community archives, as well as upon the generosity of various university departments and individual donors."

The exhibit draws out themes of "connectedness, tradition, belonging and physical beauty," according to Contosta and Gallagher. This account of Villanova's history brings together the "academic, spiritual and social community" from the very beginning, added Gallagher.

News briefs from around the country

Oct. 1 Registration Day Planned

A nationwide student voter registration drive has been scheduled for Oct. 1 as students at 41 colleges and universities in 21 states take part in discussing political issues.

The National Student Voter Registration Day is sponsored by the Center for Policy Alternatives, the National Civic League and the Knight-Ridder Corp., and is endorsed by the United States Student Association and the League of Women Voters.

Historically, young people eligible to vote generally stay away from the polls. In the 1988 presidential election, only 36 percent of 18-24 year olds voted, and many blamed the difficulties of becoming registered to vote, according to the Center for Policy Alternatives, a non-partisan group that works to promote progressive state policy.

Professor Sues School Over Book

AMES, Iowa — An Iowa State University professor sued several school administrators and the Iowa Board of Regents after he was barred from using a book he wrote as a required text in a class.

John Strong, an associate professor in human development and family studies, claimed his First Amendment and academic rights were violated because he couldn't use his book, "Unlocking the Communication Puzzle," as a primary text in his course.

"[The professor] feels strongly that the university is interfering with his rights to select his own materials," Anthony Renzo, Strong's attorney, told the Iowa State Daily.

A student complaint in 1991 brought the matter to the attention of school administrators, and a department committee later voted that the book should not be used as the primary text. It was also determined the book contained no bibliography or cited scholars.

Beer Giveway Goes Down The Drain

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — A University of Florida student government plan to pass out cards for free beer was nixed by university officials.

The plan was that a student would get a card for one free beer a night at local bars after signing a pledge card promising that he or she would not drink and drive.

Pledge cards were to have been distributed to about 9,000 students of legal drinking age.

"At first we thought it was done as a spoof," said Art Sandeen, the university's student affairs vice president. "We thought it was a terrible idea."

Half-Tuition Students Stay In College

HARTFORD, Conn. — A program that offers local high school students a 50 percent discount on tuition at the University of Hartford is boasting a 91 percent retention rate, officials say.

The program, which started in 1990, offers talented graduates of Hartford city high schools a half-tuition plan for each year they attend the university.

Officials credit the program's mentoring system, in which faculty and staff members are assigned certain students to counsel and advise, for keeping the students in college.

Beresit II conference brings together different cultures

The Organizing Committee for Beresit II in the United States announces that Villanova University will host the Beresit II conference, Spain and the Americas: A Convergence of Cultures, in the Connelly Center from Oct. 8-10.

The conference, sponsored by the Cofradia Internacional de Investigadores (the Interntional Association of Scholars), will bring together international scholars from Spain, Italy, the Middle East and the United States to discuss various topics related to literature, science, engineering, business and theology as they have been affected by the cultural, political and social interaction between the old and new world.

The Cofradia was founded in 1984 in Toledo, Spain, to perpetuate scholarly research in the humanities, scientific and theological disciplines. The organization is fully subsidized by various business interests and the City Council of Toledo. It publishes a yearly journal, Beresit, and published two volumes of proceedings for its first conference in 1989, both of which are free to members. It will publish proceedings from this conference as well.

Its total membership of over 300 has been and will continue to be invited. There are no dues, but individuals in the mostly academic and sometimes business world are selected for their prominence in either area. Her Majesty, Queen Sofia, of Spain is the honorary president of the Cofradia.

Besides the majority membership from Spain, other members include scholars from England, France, Italy, Portugal, Morocco and the United States. The general membership includes research-oriented scholars from a broad range of academic and non-academic fields, administrators and a broad range of academic and non-academic fields, administrators and corporations.

The Rev. Kail Ellis, dean of Arts and Sciences, will give the welcome address Oct. 8 and be followed with a talk by Dr. Gustavo Villapalos, rector of Universidad Complutense de Madrid, entitled "Scientific Progress and Cultural Exchanges as Bridges for World Peace." The various panels will then take place from 11:30 a.m. until 5 p.m. with a break for a buffet lunch.

On the first evening from 5-7 p.m. there will be a cocktail reception in the President's Lounge of Connelly Center for all who attend. At 7 p.m. the Spanish Dance Society from Washington, D.C., will perform in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center. It is a free and open to the Villanova community.

The Oct. 9 sessions will begin at 8:30 a.m. and continue through 5 p.m. with a buffet luncheon break. At 12:30 p.m. the Auxiliary Bishop of Toledo, Spain and the Rev. D. Rafael Palmeros Ramos will present a keynote address on a topic to be announced later. A dinner for those attending will begin at 6:30 p.m. and be followed with a piano recital at 8 p.m. by Miguel Angel Scebba from Argentina in St. Mary's Chapel for all conference participants as well as for the Villanova University community. This recital is also free.

The closing ceremony on Oct. 10 will be highlighted by a procession of participants in their academic robes, a talk by the Rev. Edmund Dobbin, president of Villanova, and a closing talk by Dr. D. Luis Ortega, the vice-rector of Universidad Castilla — La Mancha, entitled "The Survival of Humanity: Toward a New World Order?" A buffet reception will follow.

That night there will be a gala dinner dance in Connelly's Villanova Room with dignitaries from the University, the Hispanic embassies, the mayors of Toledo, Spain, Joaquin Sanchez Garrido, and Philadelphia, Edward Rendell, the Cofradia and the Spanish community from the Circolo espanol de Filadefia.

For further information, please contact any one of the Organizing Committee: Mercedes Julia and Antonio Roman of the modern languages department or Thomas Martinez of the English department.

Miguel Angel Scebba will give a piano recital Oct. 9 at 8 p.m. at St. Mary's Chapel.

Scebba to play piano at recital

In conjunction with Villanova's Sesquicentennial celebration and the Beresit II conference on Spain and the Americas, Miguel Angel Scebba from Argentina will give a piano recital at St. Mary's Chapel at 8 p.m. Oct. 9. The performance is open to the Villanova Community and is free of charge.

His selections will include a variety of pieces from Spain, Argentina and Cuba. The first section of the program lists Sonatas by Soler and Gales, two Goyescas by Granados and "Navarra" by Albeniz. The second part is devoted to Latin-American music: six Cuban dances by Ignacio Cervantes, three tangos by the Argentinian Piazzola and the Sonata #1 by Gianastera, also from Argentina.

Scebba is presently a professor of piano at the University of San Juan in Argentina. He has performed throughout Europe and South America during the last 10 years. He played with the Tubingen Philharmonic in 1986 and toured Germany from then until 1988, and returned again in 1990. He performed in Paris in 1981 and won a piano competition.

Villapalos to keynote ceremony with opening address

Dr. Gustavo Villapalos Salas will give the opening address for the Beresit II conference in the Connelly Center Cinema on Oct. 8 at 10 a.m.

Villapalos is currently the rector of the Universidad Complutense de Madrid, Spain, and is active and world renowned in many areas of education and politics. His academic background includes a doctorate in geography and history in 1973, after which he taught those subjects and served as the director of the history department (1980-1984) at the Universidad Complutense in Madrid. In 1984 he became dean of the faculty and in 1987 the university's rector, the post he currently holds.

For his scholarly work and his achievements in education, Villapalos has earned the Roman Riaza Prize in 1981, the Fastenratch Prize in 1986 and has been elected to the Real Academia de Jurisprudencia y Legislacion. He has also been granted honorary degrees by the University of Paris Sud — XI, the Nacional Autonoma de Mexico y La Plata in Argentina and St. Louis University of Missouri.

Over the last 10 years Villapalos has been an instrumental force in Middle Eastern affairs. He has played a strong role in bringing factions in the Middle East to the bargaining table for peace talks. He was extremely influential with discussions concerning freeing the hostages. More recently Salman Rushdie, the author of The Satanic Verses, which placed him under a death sentence by the Ayatollah Khoumeni of Iran, held a press conference to reveal that he has asked Villapalos to intervene on his behalf to relieve him from that sentence.

Appropriately, Villapalos' talk will focus on world peace. It is titled in Spanish, "Progreso Cientifico y Encuentro de Culturas Como Vehiculos Para la Paz Mundial." In English this translates to "Scientific Progress and Cultural Exchanges as Bridges Toward World Peace."

Spanish dancers to perform

The Spanish Dance Society, under Artistic Director Dame Marina Keet, will perform in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center Oct. 8 at 7 p.m. The society's performance is free of charge and open to the Villanova Community as part of the Beresit II conference week and the events of the Sesquicentennial celebration.

The program will include classic and folkloric dances from Spain and Latin-America. Seguidillas from Madrid, Jotas from Madrid and Asturias, Boleros from the Balearic Isles and Zamora, Fandangos from Andalusia, a Flamenco from a Zarzuela light opera, a Mexican Tilingolingo, Tangos, Zapateados, Rapsodias and Galops will highlight this exhibition of the music and dancing from the old Spanish world and the new Latin-American world.

The group will include two singers, Carmen de Perignat and Coco Sevilla; a guitarist, Michael Perez; a bagpiper Erik Rice-Johnston; and 11 dancers, Marla Bush, Jaime Coronado, Lourdes Elias, Nancy Heller, Danielle Polen, Antonio Saldana, Nancy Sedgwick, Mary Ann Shelton, Helson Sitton, Ziva Cohen and Triana d'Orazio.

The Spanish Dance Society of Washington, D.C., a non-profit organization which promotes Spanish dance through excellence in presentation, execution and instruction, is celebrating its 10th anniversary. It receives financial support from the Cultural Office of the Embassy of Spain, the D.C. Commission on the Arts, the NEA and other corporate sponsors and private individuals. It further supports itself with performances at the Kennedy Center in Washington, colleges and cultural stages in the D.C. area. The society also offers shows for Hispanic events and various causes, including the homeless and the fight against racial discrimination.

Apology extended for comment

We have learned a great deal in our roles as college journalists and editors. Sometimes we mediate debates. Sometimes we take stands on issues. And, unfortunately, sometimes we make mistakes.

Specifically, we apologize to the College Republicans for the "Aryan youth" comment that appeared in last week's "Who Knows, Who Cares" piece. Although presented in a section reserved for humor and satire, the implications of the equation were not considered fully by either the author or editors.

As stated repeatedly, the Villanovan seeks to be a forum for campus opinions and issues. We reserve our right, of course, to articulate positions in our editorial column. You need not agree with our position, and we ask that you respond with a letter or commentary. However, the "Who Knows, Who Cares" comment undermined our commitment to open debate, and we regret its publication.

Journalistic firepower is a valuable, yet dangerous, tool. Sometimes, if employed thoughtfully, it can raise serious questions. Our overall intent in criticizing the College Republicans was not malicious. In our editorial section we sought instead to take issue with their poster.

And now, as our journalistic education continues, we find ourselves on the other side of the fence. We hope that the College Republicans will continue to raise debate in these pages. We, too, will continue to scrutinize statements — including our own.

Career Day offers opportunity

Villanova students, seniors in particular, need to make the most of Oct. 6. For the first of only two times this school year, the Career Planning and Placement Center will host Career Day and provide students a chance to find a job, or at least lay the groundwork. With the present economic recession and possible entry-level jobs minimal, it is all the more important to "network" and develop contacts for possible future employment. Do not pass up this opportunity.

Over 45 companies will participate in the day, which will be held from 11 a.m.-3 p.m. in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center. According to Carl Lloyd, the on-campus recruiting coordinator, companies from various fields (business, technical, pharmaceutical, educational, etc.) will be represented. It is a chance for the companies to get to know you. But more importantly, it is your chance to see all the different employment opportunities available to you.

Seniors, you enter the last semester-and-a-half of your career at Villanova. The future is staring you right in the face. Career Day is one way to answer any remaining questions.

This opportunity is too important to miss. Be prepared to hand out resumes and impress possible employers. Find out as much as you can. It is your future.

Betz's proposal challenged

To the Editor:

Joseph Betz's commentary, "What if the DSA and Villanovans for Life merged?" (Sept. 25 issue), misrepresents the position of DSA and contains an analysis of the abortion issue that is both highly sexist and inaccurate.

Betz seems to claim that "sexual responsibility" rests solely upon the female members of our society. Even if one were to make the wild assumption that many abortions are the result of personal irresponsibility, the "childish college woman" is hardly the sole party to be held to accountability. One could easily extract from Betz's piece that men may go about making whatever sexual demands they wish, but that the ultimate responsibility for any unintended results of intercourse rests with the woman, who should have just said "no." This sounds like the equivalent of saying, "She wanted it. Otherwise she would have made him stop. Now it's time to face the consequences."

Betz also misunderstands the vision of a socialist society offered by DSA. DSA does not believe that it is necessary, or even especially desirable, for a child to have "two parents." In addition, the "family values" espoused by DSA that Betz appears to be so fond of, include the support of marriages between same-sex partners, and the recognition that gay and lesbian families can serve as positive role models for their children. If DSA were to merge into a group that is "certifiably Catholic," would it be allowed to retain these family values? If statements made by the Vatican recently are any indication, one would suppose not.

It is unfortunate that Betz is under the impression that DSA invited him to speak to the group in recognition for his assurance that its "endorsement of abortion was no necessary part of socialism." Betz was asked to give a talk on socialist movements in Central America despite his comments at an earlier meeting, not because of them.

In closing, DSA (in theory) does not place the blame for the often wretched conditions faced by millions in this country today on "defective government," but on a capitalist political economy that is predicated upon the exploitation of many for the profit of a few. The racism, sexism, unemployment, violence and despair generated by this system will not disappear with the institution of a stronger welfare state, and they will certainly not disappear with increased levels of personal responsibility. Capitalism must be overthrown in order for all to have life "more abundantly."

The abortion issue is peripherals to the larger issues of oppression and exploitation that are the backbone of capitalism; we would all do well to focus our energy on matters of more substantive importance.

To the Editor:

Being one of those persons involved in last spring's "quarrel" over the posting of the "March for Women's Lives" advertisement, I read with interest Joseph Betz's editorial last week. I know Dr. Betz and sense that his suggestion that the Democratic Socialists of America (DSA) and Villanovans for Life (VFL) merge to form a new Democratic Villanovans for Socialist Life (DVFSL) was motivated by nothing but the best intentions. I must confess, however, that I felt bewildered and even angered that someone so actively involved should have such a profound misunderstanding of last spring's "quarrel."

As one of the four people who met with various administrators — including, on two separate occasions, the Rev. Edmund Dobbin, O.S.A. — I feel I can say with certainty that last spring's administrative snafu was not a question of "antipathy between two groups." The issues that were, and still are, at stake loom much larger than that. Villanovans For Life is a group of thoughtful, energetic individuals committed to certain ideals; so too are the Democratic Socialists of America.

I am a member of neither, but became involved last spring because I believed that the freedom to open academic and political discourse that I had expected of a major university was being threatened, indeed violated. And I do not suggest that VFL was singlehandedly muffling the voice of DSA; rather it is the administrative policy of this university that prevents a truly open and challenging discussion of vital issues.

Dr. Betz, you wrong both DSA and VFL when you suggest that either should compromise their intellectual and moral values so that they may learn to play nice and quit rocking the boat. As I said before, the issues at stake — academic discourse and the future of American abortion legislation — are far too important for that. What is needed is not compromise, but a willingness to listen and an eagerness to debate. Also an administration that will allow such an open and passionate exchange.

Even after meeting with the Board of Trustees to share our concerns that free speech and academic rigor were being threatened here at Villanova, I have found no satisfactory resolve. But that resolve would not be obtained through Dr. Betz's proposed merging of DSA and VFL. It will only arrive with a change in administrative policy.

COMMENTARY

Paper charged with left-wing bias

To the Editor:

It appears that the Villanovan is trying to become the most closed-minded newspaper on the Main Line. It is unfortunate that the Villanovan, unlike the rest of the student body, does not know how to take a joke. In no way whatsoever did we intend for our posting of the "Friends Don't Let Friends Vote Democrat" flyers to be persuasive or offensive. Its only purpose was to serve as a light-hearted advertisement for our next meeting.

We find it most disturbing that the Villanovan has once again launched unsubstantiated attacks on the College Republicans. To bring up an event that occurred over a year ago just goes to show that the Villanovan has nothing to support their arguments, further illustrating their incompetency in their journalistic endeavors.

Although the flyer was meant to serve only as an advertisement for our next meeting, it does bring about a good point. Would a "friend" let a friend vote for a Democrat who has intentions of carrying out a platform that entails: $154 billion in new taxes and increased spending by $220 billion, abortion on demand, decimating America's defense program and who himself is nothing more than a failed governor from a small state. In no way are we saying that a person should not vote for a candidate as such, we are merely suggesting that a more viable alternative is to be found in the Republican Party. Perhaps this whole episode about the recently posted flyers is nothing more than a manifestation of the Democrats/Newspaper's lack of confidence in their candidate.

In addition, we have to question the Villanovan for labeling us "intolerant." Is it not the Villanovan itself that is intolerant for continually feeling so threatened by our views that instead of attacking us on the issues, they have to resort to attacking us as an organization. The "Aryan youth" comment and the cartoon were totally offensive. A simple apology for a wholly inappropriate attack can answer the question of whether or not the Villanovan strives for journalistic excellence or for second-rate smut expected from the pages of The National Enquirer.

To the Editor:

In the lead editorial of last week's issue, the goal of the newspaper was stated. That stated belief is "to be neither a liberal nor conservative medium." It is obvious that the Villanovan failed to meet that goal.

It is quite easy to see that the Villanovan is not a bi-partisan publication. The Sept. 25 edition exposes the slant to the political left. Every political piece in that issue was either pro-Democrat or anti-Republican.

A journalist should strive to inform the public of all sides of an issue regardless of his own beliefs. What appeared in the Election '92 section of the Villanovan was an abuse of journalist power. Your writers used the paper as a vehicle to express their political beliefs. These beliefs favored the Democratic party.

I was appalled at the cartoon that appeared in your paper that depicted a College Republican holding a chain around the neck of an African-American. The paper loses all journalistic worth when it blatantly accuses a group of racism without evidence to back it up.

In a critical election year the Villanovan should be an important voice in our school. However, the paper should not print biased material. The newspaper would better serve the school community by presenting fair articles on the presidential candidates. Regardless of the Villanovan's opinion of a certain group, it must remain fair to all sides.

Bobby Nashak

To the Editor:

Well, it seems as if we have our first controversy at Villanova this year. After reading last week's issue of the Villanovan, we have concluded that it is this paper's editorial staff, and not the College Republicans, that is truly "the most laughable organization on the Villanova campus." This unsolicited tirade against nothing more than a noble organization's recruitment of new members has to be one of the funniest experiences we have encountered in our three years here at school.

The College Republicans' flyer, "Friends Don't Let Friends Vote Democrat," appears to have touched a nerve with the editors of the Villanovan. Why is it that a flier whose sole purpose was to inform students of a College Republicans meeting has sparked such an interest that an editorial was needed to respond? Perhaps the Villanovan's left-wing editors feel threatened by the presence of the College Republicans on campus.

Isn't it ironic that the editorial staff of the Villanovan, which has tested the limits of its freedom of speech on many occasions, is suddenly intent on denying that same freedom to the College Republicans, an organization with considerably less influence and power? The fact that the College Republicans present views and beliefs which seem to differ from those of the editorial staff is no reason to deny them their right to present their views. It seems that the editors of the Villanovan are truly "intolerant of opposing views and beliefs," not the College Republicans.

Villanova sets high standards in admitting its students; everyone here should be capable of thinking on his or her own. Therefore, we seriously doubt that there is a single person on this campus who is fragile enough to be pressured into doing something against his or her own will, merely because a poster says so. Likewise, very few people, we are sure, have changed their opinion of the College Republicans as a result of your narrow-minded editorial.

As College Republicans, we agree that voting for someone just because one's friend does is unfortunate. However, if that friend justifies his or her position and you agree, why should you not vote your friend's way? This action should not be considered peer pressure. Rather, discussing one's political views with another person, whether Republican or Democrat, can be an enlightening experience for all parties.

Editor defends the Villanovan's right to criticize

By THOMAS J. COLLINS JR.

For the first time since I began my term as editor-in-chief of the Villanovan, I find it necessary to write a commentary. This opinion is not the Villanovan's, only mine.

Since we ran an editorial about the College Republican flyer that stated "Friends Don't Let Friends Vote Democrat," the members of that organization have written letters and voiced their opinions concerning their flyer and the Villanovan's beliefs and competency to voice them. They attempt to portray the editorial board as liberal, incompetent, intolerant and not allowing freedom of speech. We are none of the above.

For some reason unbeknownst to me, "liberal" is a feared word in America. I do not know why, but it has taken on the meaning of radical and left-wing. As a result, people, namely Republicans, label others as "left-wing" and "liberal" when they possess differing views.

When someone resides in either extreme, liberal or conservative, they tend to lose sight of reality. We have not lost sight of reality, only probed it and questioned it.

Pete Bartok and Matt Kohnke, members of the Class of 1993 and College Republicans, ask, "Isn't it ironic that the editorial staff of the Villanovan, which has tested the limits of its freedom of speech on many occasions, is suddenly intent on denying that same freedom to the College Republicans?" Give me an example, Mr. Bartok and Mr. Kohnke.

Because the Villanovan has tackled abortion, multiculturalism and DSA from both sides of the issues? Because we published an advertisement last year from your organization that questioned multicultural intents? Because we published your letters? Or was it because you did not agree with what we said?

We did not rip down your flyers, only questioned them. We did not say the flyers or your organization should have been banned, but disagreed with their content. We support your freedom to publish them, but we retain the freedom to criticize their intent.

If you will recall, Mr. Bartok and Mr. Kohnke, we criticized both the right and the left in the editorial concerning multiculturalism last year (Nov. 22 issue). We do not lean towards either the left or the right. We express our beliefs.

Intolerance means close-mindedness and inability to look at both sides of an issue. We did nothing of the kind concerning your flyer. Rather, we looked at the issue and gave our opinion, whether it was considered left or right, liberal or conservative.

Bobby Nashak, Class of 1996, questioned our Sept. 25 editorial that stated our goal, as a newspaper, is "to be neither liberal nor conservative." We are blatantly Democratic, he said. He points to the Election '92 section and the two commentaries of that particular issue. Both supported Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton for president.

Open your eyes, Mr. Nashak. Look at the Sept. 18 issue. In the Election '92, there are three pro-Bush articles, no pro-Clinton articles. Republicans, 3, Democrats 2, if you really want to keep score.

We do not publish letters or commentaries based on our beliefs. Rather, the op-ed section is the reader's chance to voice their concerns. "Your writers used the paper as a vehicle to express their political beliefs," and the "Election '92 section was an abuse of journalist power," Mr. Nashak wrote.

Before you accuse us of abusing our power, Mr. Nashak, let us set the facts straight. The op-eds are not written by members of the paper's staff, but are submitted by readers. The whole purpose of the editorial section is debate. Opinions are not an abuse of journalistic power. They are, to my knowledge, a part of freedom of speech and thought.

We publish letters from College Republicans, DSA members, professors, alumni and students. Anyone with an opinion.

The greatest fear in journalism, in my opinion, is misrepresentation. Some may say we misrepresented the College Republicans. I say wrong. We explained, word for word, what the flyer said. We only, as stated before, questioned their intent. Unfortunately, some of the College Republicans misconstrued and misrepresented the Villanovan in their letters to the editor. Brian Collie, Kevin Hartman, David Macchia and Thomas Convery said, "Perhaps this whole episode about the recently posted flyers is nothing more than a manifestation of the Democrats/newspaper's lack of confidence in their candidate."

Please do not be hypocritical. Do not say we launched "unsubstantiated attacks" on your organization and then put words in our mouth. We have not supported Clinton or proclaimed him "our" candidate. We have never proclaimed party allegiance, Republican or Democrat. In fact, we said, "Just because a candidate is Republican (or Democrat) does not make him/her the better choice."

If the College Democrats posted a flyer, "Friends Don't Let Friends Vote Republican," we would have reacted the same way. We are not intolerant of beliefs or values, only ignorance and promoted ignorance.

We stand by our beliefs in criticizing the College Republican flyer. We also believe in the cartoon published, which discussed oppression.

The cartoon was in no way meant to label College Republicans as racist, as Mr. Nashak suggested. The design was a representation of the "Free South Africa" logo. The figures were not meant to be seen as black and white, but as members of two groups with diametrically opposed views. The idea the creator hoped to convey was not an accusation of racism, but a message about the atrocity of subjugation, namely the oppression of free political thought.

The chain represented our interpretation of the College Republicans "Friends" flyer, and the black figure symbolized the need to fight against the pressure to conform to others' politics — the need to "Free Student Minds."

We reserve the right to express our beliefs, whether of the majority or minority, the privileged or the deprived. The whole basis for our country and the press is freedom. Our mission is to uphold it. Anything less would be intolerable.

Student says, "No promises, no disappointments"

By PETE SHAUGER

The phones have been ringing off the hook and the mailboxes have been filling up with letters from readers asking me when I am going to write about something relevant. When am I going to write about the election. Fans, the time is now.

Rather than just endorsing a candidate, I will give you my opinion of how the candidates should be running their campaigns by asking myself the question, "What would I say if I were running for president and how would I say it." From this exposition, you will be able to see exactly where I stand regarding the candidates and their issues, or if I stand for anything at all.

First and foremost there would be no mud slinging. The one thing I cannot stand is a campaign based on the exposition of other people's sex lives when I don't even have one. I could not have come up with a better way to display Bill Clinton's masculinity than by exposing his extra-marital love affair with Gennifer "spelled with a G" Flowers. If President George Bush would have mentioned just one extra-marital love affair of his own or something, I'm sure he would be crushing Clinton in the polls. (Of course, if I had a sex life, I'd be the first to let the public know. However since this is not the case, I think I'll just keep it to myself.)

Another political no-no I would live by — I would never mention my past. Some candidates like to showcase their achievements for the public as if they were in the backyard on the swing saying "Look ma, no hands." I don't know about you, but my dad has a video tape of me falling off the swing set shortly after I said that to my mother. I could just see that tape appearing on television with a narrator in the background saying, " ... And this guy wants to be president?" Sure, by drudging up the past a lot of good things can be presented, but frankly, there are too many skeletons in my closet. Like I always say, it is better to throw out the good cheese with the bad cheese than to eat a piece of moldy cheese (skeletons in closet equal moldy cheese ... get it?).

> Like I always say, it is better to throw out the good cheese with the bad cheese than to eat a piece of moldy cheese

Also, I would never attack any person or organization that I think is smarter than me. Also, I would have plenty of people working for me who are not as smart as me, making me feel as superior as possible when in reality I, along with most presidential candidates, am nothing of the sort. And if by some remote possibility someone had the gaul to make a fool of me publicly, I would just go out and make an even bigger fool of myself, proving that two people can play the game, but I can play it much better.

Most importantly, though, I would make it strict policy not only for me, but for all my publicists to make me appear as vague and hazy as possible. Under no circumstances would I come directly out and say what I mean. Some people think that candidates should take stands on the various issues, but that just makes things more confusing both for the candidate and also for the voters. People would lose sight of the qualities we should really be looking for in a president — the ability to fool the masses, the ability to fool himself (or herself, though I don't know why a woman would want this, by definition, inferior position), the ability to grow nice hair well into his seventies, the ability to play saxophone on live television, and of course, the ability to leap tall buildings in a single bound.

My campaign slogan would be to the point, and yet at the same time, would be pointless. Something like, "No promises, no dissapointments." At no time would I make a promise that I could not fulfill. Actually, I would not be making any promises in the first place. However, if I slipped up and accidentally blurted out some sort of vague and hazy promise, I could rest assured that no one would understand what it was that I said.

Lastly, and I will try to step out of character and be as brief and to the point as possible on the subject, I would omit the letter "G" from the word "campaign" and also from the name "Gennifer" for obvious reasons. I mean there is just no room in this world for excess unnecessary G's.

But back to the campain, without the G. If any of the current candidates for the presidency have fit into my highly polished political shoes, I will endorse him and possibly even vote for him. However, if you feel that I am the only person that fits my shoes (size 11, narrow), instead of not voting at all, I suggest that where it says "other" on the ballot, fill in "Student Says For Prez." (Paid for by the committee to elect Student Says and his mother.)

RSA evolves into Campus Council

To the Editor:

In regard to Betsy Donohue's article about the disbandment of the Resident Student Association (RSA), we, former executive board members of the RSA, would like to add the following.

As Donohue states, "The RSA was originally developed to facilitate the communication of problems ... between the residents and the administration." However, over the years, the RSA developed into an organization whose primary function was to serve the resident students. Some of these services included renting refrigerators, selling carpets and selling coffee and doughnuts during exam week.

In its attempt to better serve the resident students, the RSA began to parallel the programs of other student organizations. This overlap was one of the factors which led to the decision to eliminate the RSA.

With regard to its original purpose, the RSA also functioned as an advisor to the house councils. Every week, the RSA met with the presidents of each house council. This grass-roots forum, called the Campus Council, provided an ideal way for students to communicate their concerns and complaints.

However, the advisor to the RSA was employed by the Office for Residence Life; for this reason, complaints brought up in the Campus Council meetings put the advisor in an awkward position. More importantly, these complaints usually involved University policy which was beyond the control of both the RSA and its advisor.

Disbanding the RSA was a step in the right direction. It could not act on the students' concerns, and it paralleled other organizations in its programming functions. Our only hope is that Student Government utilizes the Campus Council to address resident students' concerns in ways that the RSA could not.

ELECTIONS '92

Vote according to your beliefs

By LAINI CURTO

Okay, so I registered to vote. Now what? How would the typically average, socially and politically aware student decide which candidate's campaign targets the most important issues? Who has the best and most effective methods to counter poverty, illiteracy, disease, and control post-cold war diplomacy ... ?

Frankly, I don't know!

The truth is ... (a phrase commonly distorted by politicians, and not often related to elections) ... I am basically a normal college freshman whose main concerns lie within academic success, newspaper deadlines and basic "college life." I might even go so far as to consider myself "up" on the latest current events, such as the "movie of the week," or where the best party will be this weekend.

Beyond that plethora of information, however, my knowledge of the world around me could barely get me past the first round of Trivial Pursuit — Junior Edition. If I am alone in this honest self-evaluation, please disregard the rest of this article and vote for whomever you wish.

But, if you are like me in wondering who to vote for, stay tuned. This is a critical year in determining our future. The best way I can think of to reach an answer is to decide what issues affect me — the student. Abortion, social security, taxes, civil service reform, financial aid to college students and possibly even the discouraging reality of unemployment in a slow-moving market are all areas in which the federal government plays a key role.

These issues alone cannot be the only basis for our decision, as we have excluded foreign policy and a variety of other concerns, but they should be looked at more closely in order for us, as students, to make a choice.

To this point, I have made no mention of Democrat or Republican, Bush or Clinton, or either candidate's position on any one issue. Rather, it is my intention to make you aware why we must look at the issues and decide. It is crucial that we vote for our beliefs because our futures depend upon it.

The real decisions of college life must be those concerning our futures, not only as juniors and seniors, but as members of the "real world."

They say that college is what you make it. Well, this November, make it the place where you take control of your future and the future of our country.

Women candidates must establish higher standards

By ELLEN GOODMAN

When women activists first learned that Geraldine Ferraro and Elizabeth Holtzman were going to run for the Senate, they shared a prolonged, collective groan. This was the year to energize the women's vote, not to split it.

Here were two strong women, both identified with the women's movement, both former members of Congress. And both eager to win the Democratic nomination for the Senate race against Republican Al D'Amato.

But these supporters looked deep into the feminist handbook, and read the rule that says: Thou Shalt Not Prohibit Two Women From Running Against Each Other. They came up with the politically correct description of this situation to recite in public. They repeatedly called the candidacy of the two women "an embarrassment of riches."

Now, an embarrassment of riches has turned into a plain old embarrassment. In the final days of this four-way primary, the fight turned personal, nasty, negative to the hilt.

Much of the sludge was hurled by Holtzman at Ferraro, who watched her lead wither under attacks on her family and character. The debates turned into an ugly free-for-all that had a moderator pleading, "Ladies, ladies." And the winner who emerged was the least-sullied: Attorney General Robert Abrams.

This was not the way it was supposed to be. The Year-of-the-Woman script after all identifies women with change. The Year-of-the-Woman success story is supposed to read like Patty Murray's Tuesday victory. This "mom in tennis shoes" won the Democratic primary for the Senate in Washington state on the new theorem: I am a woman, therefore an outsider, therefore a different breed of politician.

It is pretty clear that the voters of 1992 are attracted to women candidates when, and because, they offer something fresh. It is clear from the New York primary that women may suffer, lose the patina of "difference," when they take the low road or when they are taken down that road.

But the question for the rest of this political season is not just whether women will win, but how they will run. Can most of them hold to a different campaign or will they inevitably — by the inexorable laws of political gravity — get as down and dirty and disappointing as the New York primary. It is a question that will have a special resonance as the senate campaigns in states like Illinois and Pennsylvania get tighter and tougher.

In some ways, this is a political variation on a theme that has tracked women as they moved up in every field. On the one hand, many of us believe that women should have a fair shot at the corner office or the Oval office on the simple grounds of fairness and equity. We say they should be judged the same as men. No special virtue required.

On the other hand, we also promote women on the grounds that they are different. We promise they will bring another set of life experiences and priorities to governing. We promote change ... for the better.

Our expectations, then, for women candidates are enormous. We expect them to succeed in the one existing system, and we expect them to change that system.

Ellen Malcolm of EMILY's List, which supported Ferraro, says that "The real dilemma a woman candidate faces is that we want someone who is not politics-as-usual and we want women candidates who can participate effectively."

Malcoim confesses to hating negative campaigns, but adds, "Sometimes to be effective a woman has to go negative. There is no doubt in my mind that a woman has to be able to defend herself. Those are the hard realities of politics."

A case in point is Ann Richards, who has made a signifcant difference for women as a governor of Texas. But only after "fighting like a man" to win. A Texas man.

Nevertheless, it is important for women candidates who regard themselves as part of a movement for change, to establish a higher standard of campaigning. To be held to it and to hold men to it.

This may add another women's burden to the political quest. But unless we raise such a standard, women could become partners in a political system that's in full, cynical, collapse.

Arkansas resident says no to Clinton

By JARED A. LEWIS

As a resident of Arkansas the past 10 years, I would like to share a few facts about Gov. Bill Clinton with those of you who have conceded to false impression.

Before accepting Mr. Clinton and his platform as a campaign of change that will turn the country around, you should first take a look at the job he has done in Arkansas.

After 12 years, look at the chart I compiled to see how Clinton's economic plan for the state has worked.

As you can see, Clinton has failed miserably to provide Arkansas with adequate economic, educational and health-care plans. How does he expect these plans to work for the country if they do not even work in his own state?

Clinton's plan for the U.S. economy includes $154 billion in new taxes, almost twice as much as Mondale and Dukakis proposed combined, and his health-care scheme would cost 712,740 jobs. How can we afford higher taxes and job cuts while we are in a recession?

Yes, Clinton will provide change in the government, the economy, the health-care system and the education system. But if his performance as governor of Arkansas is any indication of how he will lead our country, take it from me, a citizen of Arkansas, these changes did not work in Arkansas, nor will they work for our country.

Bill Clinton's Record

Seniors — Expect to Graduate???

Full-time undergraduates who expect to receive degrees in December 1992 or May 1993 should complete prospective graduate cards in the Registrar's Office. These cards tell the Registrar how names should appear on diplomas. Students who have not yet returned their cards should stop in Tolentine 202, the Registrar's Office, as soon as possible.

Tour Philly for free: College Day on the Parkway

Are you feeling a bit culturally deprived? Have the Tiny Toon adventures suddenly lost their appeal? If you have found yourself recently staring at the dust bunnies under your bed for hours on end, struggling to find meaning in their haphazard design, take heart. The Student Programming Council (SPC) has a cure.

This Saturday, Oct. 3, Villanova's SPC invites students and friends to join other area students for the "College Day on the Parkway" celebration in Philadelphia. Throughout the day, students with college ID will receive the opportunity to visit six of Philly's finest museums and attractions free of charge. SPC will provide free transportation into the city to facilitate the day's events.

The Academy of Natural Sciences, the nation's oldest natural history museum, is located on Logan Square at the intersection of 19th Street and the Ben Franklin Parkway. The Academy offers interactive exhibits that provide hands-on experience with mummies, historic wildlife habitats, gems, minerals and live animals.

Also on Logan Square, at the intersection of 20th Street and the Ben Franklin Parkway, is The Franklin Institute Science Museum. With eight exhibits covering topics ranging from historic discoveries to futuristic potentials, The Institute enlightens as it entertains.

The Paley and Levy galleries at Moore College of Art and Design are located on Logan Square as well. Art works showcasing the talents of Philadelphia artists abound in the Levy Gallery, while The Goldie Paley Gallery displays artistic views of current controversies evoking powerful opinions.

The Museum of the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts can be found at the intersection of Broad and Cherry streets. This museum is the oldest of its kind in the nation. It reaches back into the country's history to showcase three centuries of American artistry. The works of great masters such as Thomas Eakins, Mary Cassatt, Horace Pippin and Richard Diebenkorn abound.

The Philadelphia Museum of Art delves even further into the heritage of fine art. The world's artistic treasures of the past two millennia can be found here, along with more modern works. The Art Museum houses over 300,000 works of art in one of Philadelphia's most familiar landmarks, located at the intersection of 26th Street and the Ben Franklin Parkway.

Finally, the Rodin Museum completes the 'Novan's tour of Philly culture. Also on the Parkway, at 22nd Street, The Rodin Museum contains the largest collection of works by Auguste Rodin to be found outside of Paris. The sculptor's works are displayed within rooms decorated to reflect a 19th century French influence.

Students desiring to take advantage of this culturally-enlightening opportunity can sign up in the SPC office in Con-nely Center. Buses will leave the duPont Parking lot at 9:30 a.m. Saturday and the attractions will extend free admission to all college students from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Come out and join other area universities and colleges for a day of fun in Philadelphia.

Would you believe that you could trek through Antarctica, explore a tropical forest, pilot a fighter plane and pop in on Ben Franklin all in one day?

The Franklin Institute Science Museum offers such opportunities and many more, allowing visitors to experience the world hands-on without ever leaving Philadelphia.

It sounds like a giant science lab from hell, right? Fear not, the Franklin Institute is really fun, and there are no pop quizzes. If anything, the exhibits let those of us cursed with non-scientific minds glimpse the elements of our world which fascinate scientists.

For example, it is one thing to gaze into space as your biology professor traces the circulatory system in infinite, and infinitely boring, detail.

But it is an entirely different experience to become a blood cell yourself and climb through the Franklin Institute's giant model of a human heart. We still want to know why the colored lights inside were not working, though. Hopefully, they will be fixed by the time you go.

The Franklin Institute Science Museum

The Mandell Futures Center offers a computer that projects an image of how you will look up to 25 years from now. Personally, we used it to see what we will look like when we are really 21.

A fighter plane hangs in the rafters of the aviation room. We ejected a few kids from the pilot's seat in hopes that Tom Cruise might appear. Being women, it is probably the closest we will ever get to flying an F14. So we strapped ourselves in and let our imaginations take us to a time when we might be flying these babies for real.

The Tuttleman Omniverse Theater is quite a sensory experience. A four-story screen stretches 180 degrees and, with the help of 56 powerful speakers, immerses you into a virtual realm of imagery and sound.

Until Nov. 12 the theater lets you travel to Antarctica, swooping through icy crags and dark valleys while bonding with some penguins along the way.

Also, you can experience an on-stage and behind-the-scenes view of the 1989 Rolling Stones Steel Wheel/Urban Jungle tour. A larger-than-life experience, sure,

Get culture at Art Museum

By HILLARY FIELD

"I went to the Museum to name all the untitled paintings. 'Woman on Horse,' 'Boy with Bucket,' 'Kitten on Fire,'" — Steven Wright.

A visit to the Philadelphia Museum of Art can be an array of excitement and good times, making you forget you are seeing historical, priceless works of art just inches from your face.

If you are one who does not patronize museums, there is a deal waiting for you. Admission is free every Sunday for those born art skeptics. Open 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. there is eight hours of opportunity for serenity after an intense Saturday night.

> Just go there and find something you like, something you hate, on thing that stirs a hint of emotion in you.

You don't have to be cerebral to get into what's going on here. You pick and choose what excites you. Every collection, every painting has an affect all its own.

The Arms and Armory Collection, with its spears and jewels and ornate armor, was amazing, yet I would not suggest being there with a prison tour group.

Head for the European collections if you want to see nudity, but surely all you Villanova Catholics will stick to the English periods where there are mostly portraits.

Many times you will stand there thinking, "this doesn't do anything for me." They all can not be winners. But those that do make you remember them are worth the entire trip, especially all the paintings by Manet, Matisse, Monet, Van Gogh, and Degas. I highly recommend staying in that collection a little longer.

While you enjoy the scenery, you can have fun with it as well. The common museum game is 'Siskel and Ebert,' where you and a friend use your wit and knowledge to verbally destroy the work in front of you:

"Here in the Renaissance section of the museum we find George Stubbs' contribution Stag and Dog, just another Old Yeller gone mad. Some would say it is entirely the Stag who is at fault, but I would disagree. The Stag has his lower body grounded while the dog is lunging, as is evident in the severe brushstrokes and color patterns."

"Here we find Pablo Picasso's Female Nude in cubes. Does he like body parts that resemble Legos? This is a man who is obviously in fear of women and intimacy, his lack of emotion further exemplifies his detachment from the female form. I'm at ends."

On the other side is a tougher version of 'Siskel and Ebert' called 'Siskel and Ebert Gone Mad' where you must tear apart the painting piece by artistic piece:

"Oh, yes, it's Peter Paul Rubens' untitled painting. Can't you see the texture in the sea, the vivid use of darkness. Rubens always used the strong texture as a way to overshadow plain color. His strokes were sweeping as to not crease the lines he used. After all, the crease is so evident in paintings with centered focus. A genius, yes, but I feel his vision lacked totality."

There is no work of art that is totally exempt from criticism.

Also, notice every painting has a celebrity attached or a movie correlation or a mad remark sure to make the older women patrons blush. If that fails you, there is the essential 'Nude, Face, Death, Landscape, Values.' This game requires you to name the category in which each painting falls.

September is over? Already? But wait, school just started. There are still shorts to wear, tans to flaunt, summer exploits to share, work to blow off. And you haven't even cracked the binding on half of your textbooks yet. What do you mean... MID-TERMS?

Alright, so maybe autumn has not caught all of us so off-guard. There may be a select few out there who attempt to ward off such unpleasant surprises with organizers and daily planners. But is there anyone out there who has not experienced the least bit of pressure at the thought of suffocating workloads and impending all-nighters? Are you searching for an outlet, a release from the world of academia closing in around you? Here is an unlikely but effective option; try the Philadelphia Zoo.

Yes, it is true, the Zoo is not just for kids anymore. It offers the perfect hiding place for students seeking an escape from the stress-induced effects of collegiate life. And if you leave grown-up respectability at the door and assume a more juvenile demeanor, there is a great chance you will have some pure, unadulterated fun.

The Philadelphia Zoo is open every day except for major holidays, though opening and closing hours vary from season to season. The price for general admission is $7, but Mondays are free from December through February as an added enticement, a perfect bargain for the anxiety-ridden Villanovan.

The Zoo offers a variety of attractions, catering to all tastes, from the most mature to the childish.

Buildings house the ever-popular zoo essentials: lions, tigers, swimming polar bears, gorillas, elephants and reptiles. Bats, deer, giraffes, rhinos and birds can be found throughout the park. Rare animals also abound at the Philly Zoo, although there was no sign of the uncommon Villanova grey squirrel.

The Children's Zoo is home to a variety of attractions for those with a desire for a hands-on zoo

South Street offers a wide array of stores, restaurants, and bars.

Experience the unique: South Street

You are a prisoner of your dorm room. You are shut off from the rest of the world. You wear the same clothes, listen to the same music and you even eat the same food at the same table every night at your dining hall. It is not too late. It is time to escape.

Drive a car or hop the next train for the hippest, hottest place to be on a Friday or Saturday night — South Street, where different worlds and lives collide.

Shops, bars, cafes and clubs line South Street and are crowded with people from all walks of life.

"A lot of people who come here are just looking for something different," said Ben Lerman, of the famous Zipperhead Store, where shoppers can buy bizarre shoes, T-shirts, jewelry, posters and interesting leather wear and accessories.

"South Street used to be a big hippie joint. [Its popularity] is an age-old thing," Lerman said.

Other stores offer occult and spiritual supplies, including skulls, candles and crystals, trendy "skin head" wear, second-hand clothes, incense and environmental paraphernalia. Palmistry services and tarot card reading are readily available.

Shops, bars, cafes and clubs line South Street, and are crowded with all walks of life.

One store, "The Inferno," displays an entire wall of strange and artistic postcards and sells "used Levi jeans" in all lengths and sizes for $5 and $10.

For the more tame visitors, South Street offers the Gap, a two story Tower Records, and book, movie and party stores.

However, it seems most people do not flock to South Street to shop. They come to eat and drink. There are no fast food chain restaurants along this strip.

Dock at Penn's Landing

By BRIAN GILLIN
Staff Reporter

Several elementary history courses begin with one rather elementary question: "What happened in 1492?"

The answers, in contrast, are far from elementary and rather diverse. The common response holds that Christopher Columbus discovered America, albeit accidentally. But controversy rages over whether he was the first to do so or the 100th. Nonetheless, in Philadelphia, Penn's Landing is planning a celebration to laud the simple fact that America does exist.

The Great Plaza of Penn's Landing will be the site of a gala commemoration of the 500th anniversary of the arrival of the Nina, Pinta and Santa Maria. "Land Ho, Philadelphia!" will take place Oct. 10-12 and will feature a round-trip parade, a two-day festival on the waterfront and a spectacular fireworks display.

There will be a grand festival on the Delaware River where people can celebrate the best of the old and new worlds, including two stages set up for entertainers, an international crafts marketplace and an international foods festival. The festival will take place Oct. 11-12 from 12-7 p.m., and admission is free.

World-renowned opera singer Luciano Pavarotti will be the grand marshal of the parade, which will kick off Oct. 12 at 1:30 p.m. The parade's theme will be "A Tribute to Exploration, Transportation and Travel." The parade route will both begin and end at City Hall, traveling on the Ben Franklin Parkway and circling in front of the Philadelphia Museum of Art.

A thrilling fireworks display will add a stunning finale to the weekend, Oct. 12 at 7:30 p.m. The musically choreographed display will use specialized, European-style fireworks and fill the skies over the Delaware River and surrounding areas.

Penn's Landing is a hot spot of entertainment throughout the year, providing a wide array of musical guests for aficionados of all tastes. Located at the end of South Street in Philadelphia with a stunning view of the Delaware River, Penn's Landing has the makings of an attraction suited for everyone.

To reach Penn's Landing from Villanova via mass transit, take the R5 Regional Rail Line to Suburban Station in Center City, then transfer to the Market-Frankford Line (eastbound) to 2nd Street. From there, walk eastward to Penn's Landing.

For those with cars, plenty of parking will be available at Penn's Landing, in parking garages and in the surrounding areas.

For more information about these events and others in the Philadelphia area, call the Philadelphia Visitor's Center at (215) 636-1666.

Activism pervades history

By KRISTIN BERNARDYN

How has the Villanova student's political activism and social awareness evolved over the past 20 years? The Rev. Ray Jackson, O.S.A., who joined the Villanova community 20 years ago, has seen many changes in the attitudes of the Villanovans of today compared to those of our counterparts of yesterday.

"In terms of the type of student in 1972, they were more active and more inclined to protest," said Jackson.

Although these protests were not on a radical scale, as may have been the case at other universities at the time, for Villanova parents and the administration, they were considered a rebellion against tradition, Jackson said.

One cause of protest was Villanova's policy on intervisitation. The belief was that "if you allow coeds to be together in a room alone you are subverting the moral order of the University," said Jackson.

There are numerous student organizations on campus geared toward social and political awareness and activism.

The school's policy on intervisitation followed its belief that the school must act in the place of the parents.

For two years the students of Villanova fought to establish a policy of parietals, which would mean that the Board of Trustees would not make fundamental school policies alone. Rather, student government would be given a voice in determining what is best for the students.

In the late 1960s the University saw evidence of student discontent in the forms of panty raids, streaking and "cat calls."

The early '70s were a time of student activism with the goal of changing the strict visitation policy. Jackson recalls a sit-in in Tolentine Hall, outside of the office of the President of the University, the Rev. Edward J. McCarthy, O.S.A., in 1971.

The punishment for violating visitation policy at the time was removal of the resident student from the dormitories, but McCarthy had expelled 10 students over visitation because they refused to leave after curfew.

After these incidents, there were civil rights arguments and the students retained lawyers. But McCarthy had much support and even received a check for $25,000 said Jackson.

American Indian presentation highlights weekend

Walter Echo-Hawk, a Pawnee Indian, will speak at "The Voices of the Americas" conference Saturday.

Assistant Features Editors

Who "discovered" America? Christopher Columbus, who sailed here in 1492, or the Indians who had lived here for thousands of years?

If you chose the former, then catch up on your history at the American Indian presentation Saturday at Villanova.

If you chose the latter, then come to celebrate this example of the rejuvenation of Indian life and culture after 500 years of oppression under American society.

Entitled "The Voices of the Americas: North American Indians," the conference will consist of a series of lectures and presentations by people dedicated to the study of the Indian tradition.

Walter Echo-Hawk, a Pawnee Indian and an attorney for the Native American Rights Fund (NARF), will lead the day-long conference with a lecture on "American Indian Religious Freedom: Need for Federal Legislation."

The other keynote speakers are Dagmar Thorpe, of the Sac and Fox tribes, who will speak on "Women's Issues from a Native American Perspective," and Sr. Jose Hobday, of the Seneca Iroquois, who will discuss "The Religious Traditions and Spirituality of Native Americans."

Echo-Hawk, since his graduation from the University of New Mexico School of Law in 1973, has actively pursued rights issues involving native people through NARF.

Echo-Hawk was a national leader in the 1989-90 Indian campaign to obtain passage of the Native American Grave Protection and Repatriation Act, considered the most important human rights law for native people ever passed by Congress.

On Oct. 12 Echo-Hawk will receive, on behalf of NARF, the Adela Dwyer St. Thomas of Villanova Peace Award presented by the Villanova University Center for Peace and Justice Education.

According to Dr. Barbara Wall, O.P., NARF is being recognized for its "22 years of working for the betterment of lives of Indian communities, and for justice through tribal claims."

Although there are 504 federally-recognized Indian tribes in the United States, only 24 tribal colleges are in existence. These are located in Montana, North Dakota and South Dakota, and one in Michigan.

Wall stressed the importance of the tribal colleges, noting how they enabled Indian people to retain their identity while teaching them the skills needed to be productive members of society.

Unfortunately, the colleges operate on very low budgets, and therefore are poorly equipped and in need of much improvement. Our Center for Peace and Justice Education is working to alleviate this problem through a used book drive on campus.

The Villanova community is encouraged to bring old books of any kind to the center, where they will be sent to where they are most needed. As yet, Villanova has donated a total of 15,000 books to the libraries of the tribal colleges.

November has been declared "American Indian Heritage Month" by President Bush. Villanova is continuously sponsoring various presentations to commemorate the Indian tradition. For more information on this issue and the corresponding events, contact the Center for Peace and Justice Education.

Museum takes you back

There is not a painting in this Museum that does not fall into one of these categories.

The beauty of this game comes when someone sees the Jesus crucifixion as a Nude or a Georgia O'Keefe flower painting as a Nude or an American Revolution battle scene as a Nude. Generally, someone in your group will insist every painting is a nude.

The most fitting painting that belongs in this article, that I have personally dubbed the Villanova Piece, is Edouard Manet's 'Le Bon Bock' or 'Good Beer.' This is a big, round, boisterous-looking guy with a cup of brew in his hand. Happy to have a famous painter paint him, happy to be in a bar, happy to have a beer.

If all else fails there is The Museum Shop. Shop to buy a print to hang in your dorm so that you can have everyone think you are cerebral when you're not.

On the way there beware of the one Hell's Point of the Museum, the Andy Warhol painting of Jackie Kennedy (thank God there is only one). Please, for your own sake, look away.

experience. Agrarian experts instruct on the art of cow milking and ponies patiently await young riders. If ponies are too typical for your tastes, try a camel ride or take a picture of yourself upon an elephant, two services also provided by the Zoo.

Two new exhibits have become instant successes at the Philly Zoo, the Carnivore Kingdom and the TREEHOUSE. The Carnivore Kingdom leads patrons through the simulated environment of some of the animal kingdom's more dangerous predators. The TREEHOUSE is available for an additional $1 and provides larger-than-life models of many habitats in the animal world. 'Novans who so desire can hatch from an egg, crawl through a bee-hive or curl up in a rabbit burrow and pretend school work just does not exist.

When you have had about as much stress-relief therapy as you can handle at the Zoo, there is also an opportunity to give back a bit of what you have gained. The Philly Zoo has a program through which patrons can adopt an animal and receive the satisfaction of knowing that the animal is being well-provided for. The Zoo instituted this program to cut down on the $3,000 grocery bills which sapped funds better used for health care and other projects.

times a year and always stops in for cheese steaks, hoagies or other sandwiches. Other such restaurants offer this type of fine cuisine.

For the older set, bars provide something to do. According to Jim Johnson, bartender of Mont Serrat, the coolest places to be are the CopaBanana Cabana, Tijuana Yacht Club, Fat Tuesdays, Manny Brown's and Mako's, a retired surfer bar complete with nautical decor and pool tables.

While he admitted that the prices at Mont Serrat are somewhat higher than the rest, Johnson said, "A lot of students [from area schools] stop here and have a couple of drinks or somethong to eat. It's fun to sit at the cafe and people-watch."

Sophomore Meg Valenteen said she strolls South Street to look at its interesting characters. "The strangest thing I ever saw there was a man who had pierced his nose 17 times," she said. "I love to shop there, too. And if you want good greasy food, go to South Street."

In addition to this form of entertainment, The Theater of the Living Arts offers national and local musical talent, such as Del Amitri and Jimmy Scott, while Funny Bones is the home of comedians.

While it brings together students from all area schools, the safety of South Street is a concern for some. Sophomore Carrie Dunn suggested, "If you're going into the city, make sure you travel with a lot of your friends." However, one, two or three police and public safety officers stand at each corner and patrol the area.

Traveling by train, students should take the R5 to the Market East Station and then walk about 10 blocks along Market Street East. The round trip cost is $7.50. By car, drivers take 476 North to Route 76 to Philadelphia and get off at exit 40 (South Street).

Students' political interest wanes since Vietnam

Although student activism was in sizeable numbers and highly visible, McCarthy said that protests and petitions would not influence the Board of Trustees' decision on visitation.

A year later the problem remained and students continued to insist on a more relaxed visitation policy. A gathering of approximately 100 students protested in the Quad. After growing to about 300 students, the group moved to the intersection of Lancaster and Ithan avenues, causing Radnor police to re-route traffic.

The protest did not end there; from Lancaster Avenue the group went to Good Counsel Hall, where some students rushed into the dorm and others threw snowballs, resulting in some broken windows. Two male students were arrested after the incident at Good Counsel Hall.

Villanovans were also involved in protests concerning the Vietnam War. Ted Glick, an activist who served a prison sentence for participating in draft board raids in Philadelphia and Rochester, spoke to Villanova students on Oct. 13, 1971.

There were several hundred demonstrators at an anti-war rally which took place at Bryn Mawr Commons. Two hundred and fifty of these protestors were Villanova students who marched up Lancaster Avenue to the rally to commemorate the massive Vietnam Moratorium of two years before and to show that the anti-war movement was still alive. An anti-war protest occurred again in April of the next year.

Not everybody participated in these protests. Obviously, there are always people who like the status quo, and there are those who dislike it, but who are not moved enough to publicly challenge it. Such has been the case at Villanova over the past 20 years.

The students today are "unbelievably passive compared to their 1970s counterparts," said Jackson. One reason which he thinks is responsible for decreased activism and social awareness is television. "The kids of today have been raised on television, which requires no action and only passive receptivity," said Jackson.

"The consequence of a lifestyle which is dominated by sitting back and watching things happen instead of making things happen is that when there is a problem, we are more likely to avoid confrontation than to try to solve it," Jackson said.

Jackson mentioned other reasons for student passivity, including a sense of being submerged in a world of unending problems and a lack of motivational leaders.

"People feel overwhelmed by the enormity of the problems they face. We have tried so many things, yet we still have the same problems, such as the depletion of the ozone, pollution, racism," he said. "What kinds of hero figures and role models do we have today? The people of yesterday who gave us hope (e.g., J.F. Kennedy, M.L. King) were murdered," said Jackson.

"From a Catholic priest's point of view, there is more uncertainty about the faith of people today," Jackson said. This results in an immature outward thrust of faith, or lack of confidence in the efficiency of social action programs.

There is some hope. Jackson cited some of the fruits of Villanova student activism, which appears more visible than involvement of students at other schools.

For example, this year marks the 20th Annual Hunger Awareness Week (Nov. 15-20), in which student participation through fasting at lunch has remained a constant 80 percent.

Also, over the past 20 years students have helped to raise over $500,000 dollars for Peace and Justice charities.

Although today we have been fortunate not to have had cause to see massive student protests, we have been able to see the positive roles in social awareness our fellow students and faculty have kept alive on campus.

Some of these activities include Hunger Awareness Week, Balloon Day, Respect Life Week, Special Olympics, Project Sunshine, Villanova Committee for the Philadelphia Homeless, Volunteer trips and, this year, AIDS Awareness Week.

There are numerous student organizations on campus geared toward social and political awareness and activism. All they need is the student body of today to demonstrate the concern and determination it did 20 years ago.

but maybe some things, like Mick Jagger's lips, should be left as they are. Life-sized is bad enough.

There is something for all tastes at the Franklin Institute. On alternate Thursdays, the Fels Planetarium hosts "Jazz Under the Stars" at 8 p.m. The best of local jazz bands play to accompany special effects of the night sky that are projected upon the Planetarium's domed ceiling.

The near-future at The Franklin Institute is as fantastic as the future worlds some of their exhibits predict. Beginning today and running until Jan. 3, 1993, "Backyard Monsters" crawl onto the scene. Fifteen-foot robotic insects created by the makers of E.T. at the Universal Studios theme parks will bring us face-to-face with the world beneath our feet and present a bug's-eye view of the world.

And if you thought Nintendo was the route to Nirvana, try the "Hot Circuits" exhibit, appearing at the Institute between Feb. 12 and May 14, 1993. Delve back into the history of video arcades and games — Space Invaders, Pac-Man and Tron. And peer into the future of video game entertainment with state-of-the-art "virtual reality" games.

Whether your tastes run toward the historic, the artistic, the environmental, the mechanical or the futuristic, there is an exhibit waiting for you at The Franklin Institute Science Museum. For general information, call (215) 448-1200 for hours and admission rates.

Morrissey creates show from Arsenal

By DANIELLE SANTUCCI
Staff Reporter

The cold, first full day of fall marked Morrissey's return to the Philadelphia area at the Mann Music Center Sept. 23. He emerged on stage to a deafening roar and a shower of gladiolas from the crowd.

There was no technical wizardry, just a simple banner of two women in the background, when Morrissey and a band of four burst on stage singing "Someone On Your Side" from his new album Your Arsenal.

Morrissey, former lead singer of The Smiths, is currently on a 20-stop North American tour to promote his new album. Your Arsenal is Morrissey's fourth solo release. It continues his tradition of introspective, heartfelt lyrics, but adds a heavier guitar sound to his classical Manchester beat.

Morrissey concentrated heavily on songs from Your Arsenal. Singles from this album such as "We Hate It When Our Friends Become Successful," and "Tomorrow" captivated the audience, but "Suedehead" from Viva Hate, his first solo album, whipped them into a frenzy.

Morrissey whirled his microphone cable and danced around stage to his upbeat songs.

Full of energy, Morrissey whirled his microphone cable and danced around stage to his upbeat songs. When he slowed it down for "He Knows I'd Love To See Him," and "Seasick, Yet Still Docked" he laid down on stage and crooned to the crowd.

After a short, but definitely not disappointing 45 minutes, Morrissey left the stage and returned for a powerful encore. "Everyday Is Like Sunday" and "The National Front Disco" ignited the Mann.

Morrissey emerged on stage to a deafening roar and a shower of gladiolas from the Mann Music Center crowd.

One female fan found her way on stage and would not let go of Morrissey. Both were dragged back stage, but only he returned. The concert ended with smoke, strobe lights, a picture of Elvis in the background and an extended instrumental jam.

Set List: "Your're Gonna Need Someone On Your Side," "Glamorous Glue," "The Girl Least Likely To," "November Spawned A Monster," "Certain People I Know," "Sister I'm A Poet," "Such A Little Thing Makes A Big Difference," "Tomorrow," "We'll Let You Know," "Suedehead," "He Knows I'd Love To See Him," "You're The One For Me, Fatty," "Seasick, Yet Still Docked," "Alastian Cousin," "We Hate It When Our Friends Become Successful." Encore: "Everyday Is Like Sunday," "The National Front Disco."

Sinead breaks away from haunting sounds

Sinead O'Connor

By MAURA RURAK
Assistant Entertainment Editor

Sinead O'Connor takes a dramatic turn on Am I Not Your Girl? Following her highly successful I Do Not Want What I Haven't Got, Sinead breaks away from her own original sound by doing an album of cover songs. The quiet, wispy, haunting voice that has become her trademark is traded in for strong, sensuous and sometimes flirty sounds that coincide with the "big band" era, a dominating factor on the CD.

Done with style and flair, this new album is a rare venture. The Betty Boop-inspired "I Want To Be Loved By You" is childlike and cute. "Bewitched, Bothered and Bewildered" takes on a gospel-like quality while Evita's "Don't Cry For Me Argentina" fades in comparison to Patti Lupone. A k.d. Lang clone of "Black Coffee" emerges by Sinead and a heavy "Success Has Made a Failure Of Our Home" drags the CD to a dead end.

Sinead turns to 'big band' sound for her follow-up album.

The "Big Band" concept of Am I Not Your Girl? is unique but unbelievable from an artist as introspective as Sinead. Defined as a tribute to those who inspired her career, the CD gives special thanks and respect to legends such as Ella Fitzgerald, Doris Day, Sarah Vaughan, Marilyn Monroe and Alison Moyet. However misplaced, her talent shines throughout the CD.

Since the lyrics are unable to make a political statement, Sinead uses the inside cover for that purpose. The CD is dedicated specially to the homeless people of New York City, "most especially to the people I met in St. Marks Place. Not forgetting blitzo the lovely rat and to the angel Peter Gabriel." Her social awareness ramblings go something like this: "... leading to FEAR of feeling of acting on feeling of not feeling of anger of saying no of taking what's 'mine' fear of saying yes fear of people fear of living fear of dying ..."

Always one to take chances and surprise, Am I Not Your Girl? is a wonderful album that breaks down the barriers for contemporary artists. O'Connor pays tributes to her heroes and by doing so brings back the legends to young minds. Full of blaring trumpets and a strong brass section, Sinead combines jazz, soul and gospel to make a worthwhile third album.

NIN rips with hard techno sound on CD 3

By THOM ARNO
and MARK McCREARY
Staff Reporter

The first thing you realize about Nine Inch Nails' disc is that the case looks like an X-Wing fighter. Then a small envelope, with a dyslexic 'n' emblazed upon it, falls out and hits you on the foot. It is not difficult to realize that Nine Inch Nails' previous album, Pretty Hate Machine was one of the most incredible albums of its kind, if not the best. One man, Trent Reznor, is NIN (Nine Inch Nails), and Trent is a man who is good at the music he creates. But it was 1989 when his first LP came out, and fans have been waiting patiently, actually, very impatiently, for something new.

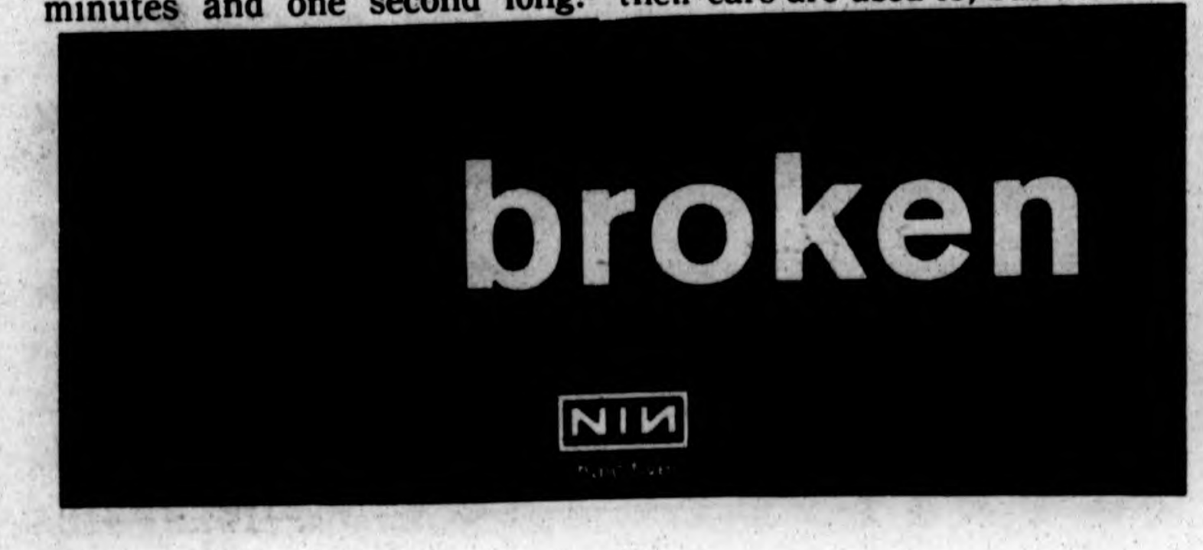
Broken is the new CD, but there is one complaint: the CD is 21 minutes and one second long! What? Six songs, a nifty triple-folding cardboard case, and a bonus two-track CD3 (a 3" CD with ten minutes of music, included with Broken) is how far our $13 carries us?

If you liked "Head Like a Hole" and "Kinda I Want To" from Pretty, then Broken is the same hard style, with a kind of techno-sound. What Trent has done is abandoned (for the time being) the softer side (if there is such a thing) of his music, and created intense, busy, and wonderful songs filled with anger and despair. But if you are a true NIN fan, then you know what to expect, and you are not disappointed. For the non-NIN fan, either you'll love it, or you'll hate it. The closest artist is probably Ministry, but that is still an unfair comparison.

Broken rips open with "Pinion," immediately embellishing the listener with more music than their ears are used to, but that is what makes NIN so special. It seems that the only song that slows down is "Help Me I am in Hell," but there are no lyrics to this song, and you are immediately flung back into the coliseum of sound with "Happiness Is Slavery." The CD ends with "Gave Up," possibly the most listenable song, but don't let that fool you; this is NIN, after all.

The CD3 put in the package is an addition unseen by listeners before, but still greatly appreciated. It does seem that it would have just been easier to put the two songs on the five-inch disc, but it really is a creative little addition. Both songs are without listed titles and new to both of us. The copyright on song one is 1980, and credited to A. Ant (Possibly Adam Ant — it was his age), and is probably the best song, but not as forceful as the other songs. The second song ("Sweeter Than the Sun?") has a 1991 copyright, given to Reznor/Pigface, and reminds us the most of Pretty.

Look, the best way to put it is this: This is a great CD, although short, expensive, and long-awaited. But it seems that the avid NIN fan will get the most out of it, and others will find it too hard and be put off. A quick test: If you went to Lollapalooza, and Ministry upset you, then there is probably a good chance that you will be put off by this CD. That is a hard call to make, so the suggestion is to give it a try. It is not the same NIN, nor is it bad NIN. It's like NNIN (New Nine Inch Nails). The only thing to do now is hope that this is a small project preempting a major release.



Crystal directs and stars on big screen

By CARRIE KORNOKOVICH
Staff Reporter

"Mr. Saturday Night," the new movie starring and directed by Billy Crystal, has been praised by many critics, but does it live up to these reviews?

The underlying theme of the movie is the struggle between family loyalty and personal achievements. It is about the relationship between two brothers, Buddy and Stan, as one reaches stardom as a comic while the other spends his life behind the scenes. As young Jewish boys, the brothers entertained the family with their jokes and impressions of their older relatives.

When they finally got the chance to perform in public, Stan backed out. He could not handle the pressure of being in front of a group of strangers, outside the security of his living room. Buddy took the stage and was a complete success, thus launching his career in show biz.

The brothers stayed together throughout their lives — Buddy as the performer and Stan as his manager. Buddy reached the peak of his career when he landed his own comedy television show where he received the nickname "Mr. Saturday Night."

> It is old-fashioned comedy geared more towards an older audience than college students.

When the show ended, Buddy found his popularity dropping. As do most aging performers, Buddy became bitter and cynical towards the comic scene. Resentful that his career could not successfully continue, Buddy struggled to deal with reality. In the end, he was able to face his situation and begin to enjoy doing smaller shows at nursing homes or condominium complexes.

The character of Buddy Young Jr. took almost 10 years for Billy Crystal to create. Buddy first appeared on the HBO comedy special "A Comic's Line" and later appeared on "Saturday Night Live." Also starring in the movie are David Paymer ("City Slickers," "Howard the Duck") as Stan, Julie Warner ("Doc Hollywood) as Buddy's wife Elaine, and Helen Hunt ("The Waterdance," "Project X") as Buddy's young talent agent, Annie.

Although the film is filled with many funny lines, it is old-fashioned comedy geared more towards an older audience than college students. When Buddy is not performing, the tone of the movie is very serious and deep. Most of the movie takes place during the later years of Buddy's life. These years are filled with death, family tension and lost dreams.

"Mr. Saturday Night" is a good movie, but it is not the lively, hysterical comedy that the ads portray it as. Wait until it comes out on video.

Cabaret Corner

Phrases like "The New Ice Age" and "The Late Bronze Age" relate more to an anthropology class than last Friday's guest at the 23 East Cabaret in Ardmore. Col. Bruce Hampton and The Aquarium Rescue Unit unveiled their unique sound to a small but enthusiastic audience.

Col. Bruce Hampton, an extraordinary individual, has been involved in music since the mid-1960s. A true cult figure in the South, Hampton's style was a refreshing break from the norms of the blues and R & B. Critics placed his music ina whole different category. In the formation of his latest effort, The Aquarium Rescue Unit, Hampton gathered four Atlanta musicians with the same basic philosophy and spontaneity as himself.

Bass player Oteil Burbridge showed tremendous talent with his solid bass lines and jazzy solos. Also, his scat vocal style complemented Hampton's lead. Drummer Apt. Q258 (yes, that is his name) held the band together whether the beat was slow and melodic or high speed. The playing of guitarist Jimmy Herring was characterized by velocity and volume as his fingers moved effortlessly on the finger board. Herring's riffs were echoed by Matt Mundy and his electric mandolin.

The overall sound created by Col. Bruce Hampton and The Aquarium Rescue Unit contained a blending of musical genre. Some tracks displayed a fundamental blues groove in the mold of Booker T. and Johnny Lee Hooker. Others contained an uptempo feel, with elements of Southern rock, jazz, country, and soul while placing a large emphasis on rhythm. Hampton's songs also exhibited lyrical substance in dealing with subject matter that ranged from politics to personal fears.

The patrons at 23 East Cabaret were clearly entertained by Hampton's freestyle nature. Those who approached the band with an open mind were able to overcome their initial feelings of shock that these unconventional performers produced. To put in further perspective, Col. Bruce Hampton and The Aquarium Rescue Unit redefined the word "jam" while giving validity to this definition through their intensity and musical innovation.

'Mohicans' blazes trail

By AARON NICODEMUS
Entertainment Editor

Nic's Picks

"Ethnic cleansing." The phrase itself brings to mind horrible images of the brutal slaughter of innocents to serve the twisted purposes of a conquering people. What is happening today in Yugoslavia and just a generation ago in Nazi-controlled Europe happened here in America, and its victims were Native Americans. "Last of the Mohicans" brings James Fenimore Cooper's novel to the screen in grand form.

The film opens with Hawkeye (Daniel Day-Lewis) running through the woods in Indian garb with two long-barrelled rifles in each hand. Born to a poor frontiersman in what is now New York, he was raised by a Mohican elder after his family fell victim to a Huron war party. Fluent in Mohican and English, Hawkeye serves as a valuable asset to his tribe and his race.

The film is set in 1757 during the French and Indian War and the English and the French are cajoling various tribes to join them in battle. The Mohicans side with the English, while the more warlike Hurons back the French. Magua, a fierce warrior, is picked by the English to lead a small regiment to Fort Henry. Madeleine Stowe plays Cora, daughter of the fort's commander, who makes the journey with her sister. Instead of a safe passage, Magua leads them into a Huron ambush. Before the women are slaughtered, however, Hawkeye and his Mohican friends save them from certain death.

Hawkeye is constantly roving around finding souls to save with an accurate rifle and an uncanny ability to find those in danger. He is the ultimate All-American frontier boy — he can walk like an Indian and fight like a tiger. Fiercely independent and stoic, Hawkeye hardly shows emotion beyond a battle cry. When he and Cora fall in love, their romance is hard to believe. His impassioned speeches look forced, and seem created more for the film's previews than for the film itself.

What makes "Last of the Mohicans" stand out is not its love story, but its grand scenery and brilliant historical detail. The battle scenes leap off the screen in vibrant color. Fought mostly in woodland areas, the film gives an accurate and still electrifying portrayal of the conflict.

Daniel Day-Lewis and Madeleine Stowe perform admirably, but surprisingly, their characters are not the focus. Wes Sudi, who portrays the Huron warrior who is consumed by his hatred of the "greyhairs," gives an incredibly powerful performance. Not once was the anger buried in his heart not captured in the lines of his face.

"Last of the Mohicans" is the season's first epic film, and will spawn a host of copycats. While some might find more success with their individual characters, few will top the film's grandeur. More than a remake of a famous novel, "Last of the Mohicans" brings history to life.

FAST FORWARD: "Consenting Adults" stars Kevin Kline and Mary Elizabeth Mastrantonio in yet another dark adult drama. A popular current theme of adultery and adult relationships (a la "Husbands and Wives"), the film traces the path of two couples intertwined in a web of lust. "Consenting Adults" opens in mid-October.

Steven Seagal brings his sock 'em, kick 'em, blow 'em up style to his latest endeavor, "Under Siege." Seagal portrays a Naval officer stranded on a sabotaged battleship, surrounded and attacked by modern pirates after nuclear warheads. Tommy Lee Jones plays the big bad pirate leader. The film opens Oct. 9.

REWIND: Joe Pesci has gone from a two-bit comic actor to a major box office draw. Take a film like "My Cousin Vinny," a thin comedy about a Brooklyn attorney who defends his cousin (Ralph Macchio) on a trumped-up murder charge. Spitting and swearing his way through his first real lead role, Pesci makes this movie worth a look. His on-screen personality more than compensates for weak writing. "My Cousin Vinny" should be relatively hard to find during its first week on video store shelves.

CLIPS: Villanova's Cultural Film Series offers yet another cinematic classic. Marlon Brando stars as Stanley Kowalski in the role that made him famous in "A Streetcar Named Desire." Tennessee Williams' famous play will be shown in the Connelly Center Cinema on Sat., Oct. 3 at 7 p.m., Sun., Oct. 4 at 3 and 7 p.m., and Mon., Oct. 5 at 7 p.m. Admission for undergraduates is $2.

New labels find talent

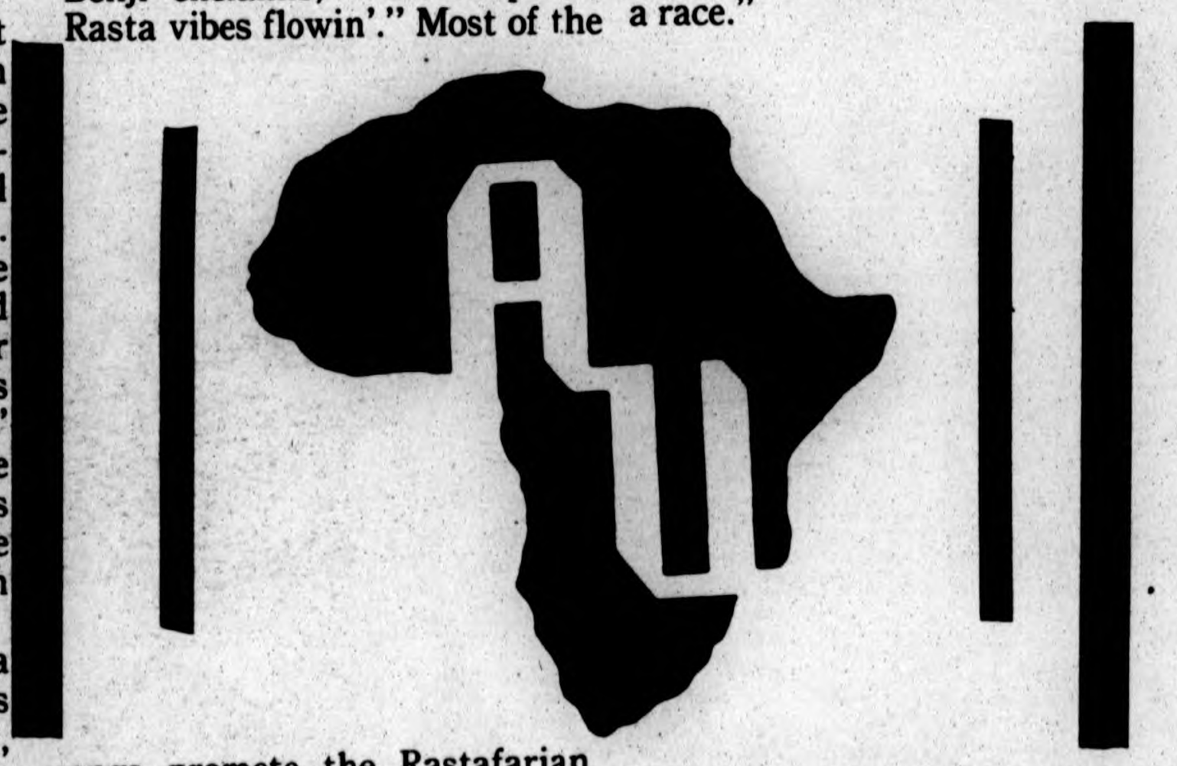
By COLEEN KENIREY
Assistant Entertainment Editor

The Cutting Edge

Alternative music labels currently produce some of the best music available. Recordings from these smaller labels may have reduced sound quality by technical standards, but they treat real fans to unique musical gems. These albums tend to have rougher edges and venture beyond the realm of the glossy, consumer magnets decorating the windows of Record World. These "indie" label owners can also afford to be more adventurous in the bands they sign because they are free from corporate constraints on artistic expression.

Alternative Tentacles is such a label. Although tribute albums have become a trend recently, Virus 100 manages to put a new spin on this formula. This project honors the punk icons, Dead Kennedys. This innovative band never made the crossover to the mainstream, but they did manage to influence a wide variety of other musicians. Of the 16 artists doing Kennedys' covers, the group with the most commercial notoriety is Faith No More, who offer their version of "Let's Lynch the Landlord." Alice Donut redefines "Halloween," Disposable Heroes of Hiphoprisy mix Kennedys' samples into a new mix of "California Uber Alles," and NoMeansNo sing "Forward to Death."

Another company which delivers a wide spectrum of talent is Zoo Entertainment. Zoo recently released the debut work of African Unity, a rap foursome from South Central Los Angeles. Their first album, appropriately titled The Book of African Unity Vol. 1 — Out of the Flames, blends echoes of various musical styles. "Promised Land" has a reggae base and initially evokes Maxi Priest and later transforms into a L.L. Cool J style rap. This song indicates the major tenet of The Book, when Jef Benji exclaims, "... keep the Rasta vibes flowin'." Most of the songs promote the Rastafarian philosophy followed by the late Bob Marley.



"Cold, Cold World" contains hip-hop backbeats and faint James Brown guttural sounds. D.J. Alywood, Jef Levi, Bro Nephti and Jef Benji are described by Zoo as part of a "new West Coast rap style with lyrics that are Afrocentric in attitude but universal in scope." This new style is reflected in others such as Ice-T who attempt to convey the realities of L.A. while trying to persuade teenagers to avoid drugs and to stay out of jail. African Unity uses their lyrics to call for an end to environmental pollution, drug dealing and "trigger happy cops."

These Rastafarians have a deep loyalty to the Bible's teachings of peace. Alywood summarizes African Unity's guiding principle by saying "We're not preaching divisiveness in our music. When we talk about African unity, we're saying that there should be a rejuvenation. By connecting with our past, we connect with our future and have a clear understanding of mankind's unity. After all, we're all of African descent ... Africa is a place — not a race."

FRESH CUTS: The 1987 charity album, A Very Special Christmas featured such musical stars as U2, The Pretenders, Run D.M.C. and Whitney Houston singing their yuletide favorites. This year, just in time for the holiday shopping season, a second edition will be available. The proceeds will again be donated to Special Olympics and the A Very Special Christmas 2 will feature Bonnie Raitt, Luther Vandross, Sinead O'Connor, Aretha Franklin, Extreme, Randy Travis and Jon Bon Jovi. The merry collection will hit record stores Oct. 20.

Kay and Steppenwolf visit the Main Lion

By MONICA LEAHY
Staff Reporter

From Virginia to New Jersey, fans drove in to see lead vocalist John Kay and the rest of Steppenwolf for a Saturday night show. Approximately 500 to 600 people showed up at the Main Lion in Wayne to watch Steppenwolf put on a crowd-pleasing performance Sept. 26.

The Main Lion drew a much more diverse crowd than the usual crew. Many of the locals refrained from their usual Saturday night "hang out" and let the Steppenwolf longtime fans take over.

The crowd consisted of young and old followers of different backgrounds, but all there to see and enjoy the same music. "My husband drove me all the way up from Baltimore to see this concert. I love it," said a Steppenwolf fan with six grandchildren. She was ready, along with the rest of the crowd, for a taste of the good 'ol days. One concert goer, Kim Carter of Villanova, said, "I feel like I'm caught in a time warp. What year is this, 1972?"

"We're glad to see you tonight, and now we're ready to rock!" Kay bellowed to the audience, who survived a late start (12:30 rather than 12 a.m.). Luckily the crowd was engrossed by the opening band, Great Train Robbery! This southern rock band from Maryland played a wide variety of hits.

> It was in 1968 that Steppenwolf got their first chart hit, "Born To Be Wild."

The audience was calm throughout the whole performance until "Magic Carpet Ride" was played. Every table and chair was empty by this time, and not only were fans dancing, but "crowd control" was also cutting a rug. Kay seemed very amused by the enthusiasm raging from the fans.

Upon leaving the Main Lion, many of the fans seemed very impressed with the concert. Leia Stobart of Ardmore said, "Surprisingly, they sound even better in concert!" The manager of the Main Lion also was very impressed with vast turnout. John Kay let loose all his energies into singing. The fans never kept quiet for more than a minute, screams of excitement rang.

The entire concert lasted approximately one hour and 15 minutes. Kay ended the show with three favorites, "Magic Carpet Ride," "Born to be Wild" and then anchored with "The Pusher." The selection of songs chosen were fantastic, some from the past and also a few from their most present album, Rise and Shine.

In addition to Kay, Steppenwolf consists of three other musicians: Rocket Ritchotte (lead guitar, vocals), Michael Wilk (keyboards, programming), and Ron Hurst (drums). The four together put on an entertaining show.

The music itself provided a strong classic rock beat that turned back the years. The music was thunderous and sharp. Kay put on a fascinating show that not only captivated myself but a vast majority of the audience. Attending a Steppenwolf concert wasn't number one on my list, but after leaving the concert I thought it was probably one of the most exciting concerts I've been to in a long time.

John Kay and Steppenwolf brought down the Main Lion Sept. 25.

Waits grinds and screams on Machine

By PETE SHAUGER
Staff Reporter

Tom Waits has a grungy, grimy, gritty voice. When he sings a happy song, it sounds angry. When he sings a sad song, he sounds angry. Cynical songs, love songs, blues songs and country songs all have a certain degree of anger in them. You could say there is some sort of running theme in his music.

His new album Bone Machine, is full of the styles of music mentioned above, though they were hardly produced in a conventional manner. First off, nearly all of the album was recorded in a shed, but not because he could not afford a studio. Well, maybe he could not, but the main reason is that Waits is constantly pushing himself in new directions.

One sound he excessively tampers with on this album is the percussion. Waits, claiming not to like "the sound of a traditional drum set," bangs on anything he can find, and it blends well with the muddy, bloody, cruddy flavor of Bone Machine.

> Waits bangs on anything he can find, and it blends well with the music.

Though Tom Waits has been producing music for roughly 20 years, I had never listened to a Tom Waits' album and was pleasantly set on edge by his music. Many of his new songs are about death and other assorted dark things, with self-explanatory titles such as "The Earth Died Screaming," "The Ocean Doesn't Want Me Today," "Murder in the Red Barn," "Dirt in the Ground," "All Stripped Down" and "A Little Rain." It sounds like scary poetry set to music.

The music itself is very sparse, adding to the cold and goose-bumpy texture of the album. Most of the songs do not have more than three instruments playing together, including the percussion. Still, Waits' melodies come off natural and smooth, harshly balanced by a voice that could make scratching fingernails on a chalk board seem like a peaceful sound.

My favorite track on the album is "She's Such a Scream." It is basically a love song to his wife Kathleen Brennan, who co-writes many of the new songs, but it is not your everyday love song. It is love with a vengeance, complete with saxophones and a catchy beat.

This latest venture by Tom Waits is as unconventional and spontaneous as it is carefully crafted; and if you ever feel a burning desire to hear something done angry and sad and raunchy and cynical, this album would be an excellent selection.

Tom Waits, in his latest release, Bone Machine, creates a solid sound.

Injuries cripple 'Nova Fall sports teams

By JUSTIN KESTNER
Assistant Sports Editor

Injuries, like winning and losing, have always been a part of athletic competition. But while athletes and teams know they will either win or lose an event, they cannot plan on being injured.

Over the past few years, the focus on injuries has increased dramatically. The sports fan now doubles as a medical student, as terms such as contusion and arthroscopic surgery have become part of the vernacular. This results from the fact that so many high-profile athletes are missing critical portions, if not all, of their seasons.

The Villanova football team has already lost several key players to injuries this season. Safety Barry Alvis and tailback Kevin Mosley both suffered injuries against Richmond. Alvis blew out his knee and will miss the entire season, while Mosley's broken hand will sideline him for another five weeks. They join linebackers Andy Cobaugh and Phil DiMaria among others on what is becoming a crowded list. All four players started and were counted on to make major contributions to the second-ranked Cats.

The football team is not the only squad that is hurting this year. The women's soccer team has been decimated by injuries, losing many key starters. The volleyball team played one match with only eight players available.

But are injuries increasing, or is more attention simply being paid to them?

"You can't really say there is a rise of injuries," said first-year strength and conditioning coach Jeff Watson. "People are just more focused on them with key players getting hurt."

Head Athletic Trainer Dan Unger supported Watson's assessment, adding that in his 15 years at that position "the percentage of injuries has stayed about the same. It's just that right now, (injuries) make good copy. We can get people back so quickly now that it makes for a good story."

Watson indicated that 'Nova's football injuries are actually down on the whole this season. He said that the team's situation seems worse because of the loss of so many starters. He contends that most injuries are preventable.

"Most injuries are caused by bad technique or being in bad positions," Watson said. "When people are not quite in shape, they get tired. That's when they get hurt — when they are tired and have mental lapses."

In his effort to insure that 'Nova athletes do not become tired during competition, Watson concentrates on conditioning the neck.

"I worry about the neck the most," said Watson. "I emphasize the legs, neck, and shoulders. It all comes from the neck and shoulders. You're not going to tear, say, a pectoral muscle. But the neck is more vulnerable."

As for preventing injuries, equipment and conditioning, though much advanced, can only help so much.

"Little things are going to happen," said Watson. "Knee sprains and ankle sprains are probably the most common injuries."

But when a person does sustain an injury, modern medicine enables patients to recover rapidly and sometimes even to come back stronger than ever after undergoing rehabilitation.

"Sports medicine has changed dramatically," said Unger. "Doctors changed procedures and accelerated rehab protocal." Unger said that what might have kept a player out for 12 or 13 weeks years before might now require only six to eight weeks.

The athletic department is currently working to develop year-round conditioning programs for all of the University's teams. Such a program would enable athletes to maintain high levels of physical fitness in the offseason. This would decrease the possibility of injuries occurring as a result of poor physical conditioning in the preseason.

Both Unger and Watson strongly support year-round conditioning. As for obstacles to this program, Unger states, "the only thing that might prevent this from working is the athletes themselves. If their motivation is good and they want to do it, (the program) should be successful."

Successful implementation of year round conditioning for all of 'Nova's athletic teams could reduce the number of Wildcat injuries, thus helping keep 'Nova athletes in action and out of the training room.

Women runners capture Boston College Invite

By SEAN KELLY
Staff Reporter

When the national rankings for women's cross country were released Sept. 28, it was extremely doubtful that anyone could possibly think of another school at the top of the poll besides Villanova. Actually, not one of the 25 votes went against the Wildcats, who have made quite a place for themselves in the No. 1 slot.

The NCAA rankings were put out two days after yet another impressive outing by the 'Nova runners who, once again, finished first at the Boston College Invitational Sept. 26. Once again, their score bordered on perfection as they tallied a tremendous score of 18 overall. Although the score is identical to the team's score from two weeks ago at the Indiana Invitational, this one was even more impressive for the club because it came against Providence, one of the only schools that poses any noticeable threat to the Cats.

In the face of what could have been a tough chore, the Cats had no trouble at all sending the Friars back to Providence with a second place showing.

Of course second place in itself is quite impressive; however, considering the Cats were able to separate themselves from the second place finishers by an astounding 29 points, it is doubtful the Friars will be writing home this week about their performance.

"We couldn't be any happier with the way we handled them," said Head Coach Marty Stern.

After dominating the competition for the past two meets, the vision of a fourth straight national title is beginning to appear from the other side of the mountain. Even Stern, who is still concentrating on the proverbial "one meet at a time" scenario, admits, "It is hard not to be confident about winning our meets after doing so well in our first two."

> Our goal is to get better each week and see where we are at the end of the year.
> Head Coach Marty Stern

Still, it will be a while before the normally poised mentor becomes overconfident. Stern is well versed on the road of an NCAA title, so he will undoubtedly know when it is time to worry about that meet. However, the future is looking extremely bright, as long as everyone can stay healthy.

To no one's surprise, 'Nova's renowned junior runner, Carole Zajac, finished first at 16:52 with senior Cheri Goddard finishing second, 32 ticks off the winning time. Sophomore Becky Spies and senior Irene Ruopoli have again shown vast improvement with seventh and eighth place respective finishes at 17:54 and 18:16.

Remarkably, the three freshmen continued to surprise their opponents with fantastic races. Megan Flowers and Jennifer Rhines, considered to be the country's top two freshmen, finished third and fifth with times of 17:28 and 17:45. Stacy Robinson also showed an impressive outing with a 19th place finish in a time of 18:55.

Nnenna Lynch, who finished first in Bloomington two weeks ago, did not run in this race because of some minor soreness. Coach Stern kept her out of the meet only for precautionary reasons; otherwise, she would have participated in the invitational.

The team competes in its third meet next weekend in the Paul Short Invitational at Lehigh University. For Coach Stern, the streak is starting to produce a bit of paranoia. If the women continue to run as superbly as they have been, the anxious yet optimistic mentor will be able to enjoy his team's No. 1 ranking for a very long time.

Cats drop two games

By MICHEL DAVIES
Staff Reporter

The Villanova men's soccer team (5-2-1) faces perhaps its most important part of the season this week. With two heartbreaking outcomes last week, it will be important for 'Nova to bounce back. This week's matches against Big East favorite St. John's and rival Syracuse could turn out to be the turning point of the season.

Traveling to Temple, as the Wildcats did on Wednesday, Sept. 22, is never an easy task. It is always important for the defense to keep the Owls' offense in check, and equally so for the offense to make the most of its opportunities. Villanova had no trouble with the former.

With the exception of a mix-up on defense, which led to a score for Temple, the Wildcat defense played superbly. The Cats, for the most part, kept the ball away from their own goal and limited the amount of shots the Owls were able to take.

"We (the defense) really played well. If it wasn't for that one mix-up, it would have been a shutout," said fifth-year senior Pat O'Malley.

Unfortunately though, the offense didn't play as well as it had been playing. Their lone goal came from midfielder Sean Whitely. The junior received the ball on the 20-yard line, and luckily for the Cats, was able to punch the ball into the net. That one goal was not enough for a victory though. The team had to settle for a tie.

In what was projected to be the toughest game of the season to date, 'Nova then traveled to Pittsburgh Sept. 27 to play the rejuvinated Panthers. After Pitt beat Big East favorites Seton Hall and Boston College, it was clear to the Cats that the Panthers were going to be a difficult opponent.

The Cats played excellent defense once again. Pat O'Malley contributed significant minutes, as did freshmen Bill Reid and Jay Sommer, as the 'Nova defense played near perfection. The Panthers only score came when a Pitt player was quite obviously off sides. Unfortunately for the Wildcats, the referee completely missed the call. That led to an easy goal for the Panthers. Pittsburgh later had another opportunity to score on a penalty kick, but freshman goalie Alecko "Ziggy" Zeppos made a great save to keep the ball out of the net.

But 'Nova still lost the game. The offense really never had the chance to get started when senior captain Ken Santos went down early in the game with a knee injury. His injury crippled the offense by taking away its most explosive scorer.

"The offense was really hurt when Kenny went down. It seemed as if they just didn't have the same amount of punch," said defenseman Bill Reid.

It will be important for the Cats to bounce back this week against St. John's and Syracuse if they plan to contend for the Big East title.

"We stumbled this week. Now it's just important for us to pick ourselves back up and turn in some big wins against St. John's and Syracuse," said O'Malley.

If 'Nova can beat those teams, it will be a clear signal that the Cats are back on their feet and ready to challenge in the Big East

Volleyball finally beats Pitt

By MICHAEL MARANO
Staff Reporter

The women's volleyball team began Big East Conference play Sept. 25 with a huge win over four-time defending champion Pittsburgh at Jake Nevin Field House. It was the program's first-ever victory over Pitt.

The Panthers were predicted to win the Big East once again this year, but the Cats were out to prove otherwise with a four-game victory (15-13, 11-15. 15-11, 15-12).

Senior Pam Clifford registered 16 kills to lead four Cats in double figures. Sophomores Molly Gorman and Mara Austrins each had 13 kills. Senior Captain Vicky Dispenza contributed 48 assists and 18 digs to help achieve the victory.

The 'Cats won the first game and trailed the second game 11-0 before making it interesting in a 15-11 loss. They then won the final two games, with Clifford registering 10 of her 16 kills in game four to seal the victory.

The Cats continue Big East competition as they compete in this weekend's Husky Invitational Tournament in Connecticut. The competition will feature 'Nova, Northeastern, Vermont and the host UConn Huskies. The Cats will take on the Huskies in the first match of the tournament and it also will count as their conference match.

In addition to leading the Cats over Pitt, Clifford also had 13 digs and two service aces in helping the Cats improve to 4-7 overall and 1-0 in the Big East. This is the third such honor for Clifford in her Villanova career.

Also this week, Head Volleyball Coach Ron Twomey announced the hiring of two assistant coaches for the 1992 season. Jonathan Clough, a 1991 graduate of Villanova with a degree in Economics, is originally from South Weymouth, Mass. Clough was a four-year member of the men's volleyball team at 'Nova and team captain as a senior. Karen Conroy, a 1988 graduate of Villanova with a degree in communication arts, is originally from Ridgewood, N.J. Conroy was a four-year letter winner for the Cats.

"I am very pleased to have Jon and Karen associated with our program," Coach Twomey said. "Both are former players with great attitudes and knowledge of the game. The players respond very well to both Karen and Jon."

Water polo splashes to victory

By ERIC WARREN
Staff Reporter

The water polo squad showed just how dominant it can be in the water by winning the seventh annual Wildcat Invitational. Improving their record to 5-3, the Cats appear fit to battle the tough teams in the Eastern Conference as play begins this weekend.

In the first game of the invitational, 'Nova took on an aggressive St. Francis College team that opened a three-goal lead at halftime. At the end of the third quarter, St. Francis still led by three despite several Villanova attacks. The fourth quarter saw the Wildcats execute perfectly as the defense prevented St. Francis from scoring and the offense notched three goals to send the game into overtime.

'Nova rolled to victory in overtime, scoring four goals and winning 13-9. Goaltender John O'Keefe stopped the St. Francis attack when it was needed and recorded 15 saves. Co-captain Peter Trout led the way with four goals and Jim Floerchinger and Paul Cera had two apiece.

'Nova simply overpowered Carleton College 14-2 in the second round. The talent of the 'Nova defense was apparent as it limited the Carleton offense to only nine shots on goal. Trout was once again the leading scorer with three. Floerchinger, Steve Steinbrook, Jeff Brown and Brian Pearce also scored two goals apiece.

The Cats next faced George Washington University, which upset 'Nova to win the Wildcat Invitational last year. The Cats entered the game eager to avenge that loss. The contest was full of emotion as 'Nova's pressure defense was simply too much for George Washington in the second half.

"We controlled the ball well and kept up the pressure," said Head Coach Dan Sharidan, pleased with the 16-7 victory. O'Keefe was once again strong as goaltender while Pearce led all scorers with four. Trout and Mark Verotsky also tallied three goals apiece.

'Nova faced off against Johns Hopkins in the championship round. The game appeared close at the half with 'Nova leading by four, but the second half saw the Cats simply destroy the competition. Verotsky dominated, taking eight shots on goal and scoring on all eight attempts. Verotsky also had five steals as 'Nova rolled to a 22-7 victory.

"We had a much stronger goalie than they did," said Sharidan, who was proud of the team's performance throughout the weekend. "We got off to a shaky start against St. Francis, but by the end of the weekend we executed everything well."

The team travels to the Army Tournament this weekend where they will get a second chance to beat a tough Navy team.

"We're right on track where we should be," said a confident Sharidan. "We manhandled the last three teams here."

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

PAM CLIFFORD and MARK VEROTSKY

This week the Villanovan recognizes as Co-Athletes of the Week Pam Clifford and Mark Verotsky from the volleyball and water polo teams, respectively. Clifford, a senior outside hitter, registered 16 kills, 13 digs, and two service aces in leading the Cats to a win over four-time defending Big East champ Pitt Sept. 25. The match marked the program's first victory ever over Pitt. Clifford was also named the Big East Player of the Week for her effort.

Verotsky, a senior, successfully converted all eight of his shots on goal and had five steals as host Villanova routed Johns Hopkins 22-7 to capture the championship of the Wildcat Invitational. Verotsky also scored three goals in a 16-7 semifinal win over George Washington.

Runners leap to No. 4 in polls

By LARRY LANZA
Staff Reporter

For a second consecutive week, the Villanova men's cross-country team continued to clear a path towards the top of the national rankings, this time cutting down the third and seventh-ranked teams in the nation to win the Sept. 19 Boston College Invitational.

With the surprising three-point victory over previously No. 3 Providence and the defeat of previously No. 7 South Florida, 'Nova now climbs into a tie for fourth in the NCAA Division I-A poll. After V.U.'s season-opening victory at the Indiana Invitational and the Wildcats' surprising jump from No. 22 to No. 12, 'Nova now sits only three positions behind the nation's top-ranked team and two-time defending national champion, Arkansas.

"Our goal wasn't to beat Providence, but it's a good measuring stick of where we are, despite catching them with a few injuries," said Villanova Head Coach Marty Stern of 'Nova's first win since 1983 over the defending Big East champion and perennial national power Friars.

"Our goal is to get better each week and see where we are at the end of the year," added Stern. "The thing that is so satisfying to the athletes and the coaches about the ranking in a program like ours, is that it's nice to know that our peers now think so much of us."

As it has been for the past three seasons, 'Nova's attack was once again led by senior Terrence Mahon. Over the wooded 5-mile course through Boston's Franklin Park, Mahon and Providence's Mark Carroll locked into a duel that went down to the wire. At the finish, Carroll, known for his speed in the mile, was able to outkick Mahon to win by three seconds in 23 minutes, 52 seconds.

Heading all the way into the late stages of the race, Mahon and Carroll had been part of a small lead pack that pushed out a fast pace over the flat course. Included in this group of four were South Florida's Jon Dennis and Villanova sophomore Louie Quintana. Dennis went on to take third in 24:15, while Quintana finished only a second behind to capture fourth.

Eleven seconds behind Quintana, Wildcat sophomore Dave Hartman came through with one of 'Nova's most valuable performances when he captured fifth just ahead of a group of three Providence runners. To complete the Villanova scoring and seal the surprise win, junior Mike Going finished 13th in 24:50 and sophomore Kyle Watson took 17th in 24:58.

In back of Going and Watson was where 'Nova's showed its new-found depth. One second behind Watson, sophomore Ken Nason took 18th, followed two seconds behind by freshman Matt Lamourie in 20th.

Rounding out VU's finishers, senior Brad Sumner finished 30th (25:20), senior Chris McDermott was 37th (25:39), freshman Kevin Christiani was 40th (25:45), and senior James Meszaros finished 65th (26:57).

"Our depth is nice for Mahon, Quintana, Hartman and Going to know that there are several great runners behind them, any of whom could be the fifth man," said Stern.

Villanova's strong showing in Boston is a particularly good sign for later in the season, since the Wildcats will be returning to the same course in three weeks to contest the Big East Championship against now No. 7 Providence and No. 20 Georgetown.

"I think this course is good for us," said Going, "since it's a fast course and we have a lot of milers and half-milers on the team. We're really starting to mesh well and come into our own. As long as we can continue to work hard and get better we'll keep doing well."

With the changes 'Nova continues to force in the national poll, the Wildcats are now tied with 1989 NCAA champion Iowa St., behind the top-ranked Razorbacks, No. 2 Wisconsin, and No. 3 Arizona. Rounding out the top 10 behind 'Nova are Notre Dame, Providence, Michigan, Washington and South Florida. In the second 10 stand three of 'Nova's NCAA Regional rivals in No. 14 Penn State, No 17 Navy and Georgetown.

The Wildcats are off this weekend before returning to competition in the Oct. 10 Paul Short Invitational at Lehigh.

Yankee Conference

By FRANK SCHNEIDER
Staff Reporter

The fourth week in the Yankee Conference was the most exciting week of the season, as the defending national champions were upset by a future Yankee Conference team and a conference powerhouse was toppled by a heavy underdog.

Massachusetts 30 Boston U. 28

UMass upped its record to 2-1 on the season and 1-1 in the Yankee Conference with a 30-28 win over B.U. (0-1, 0-3). The Minutemen notched their second consecutive win with the help of two Yankee Conference award-winners.

Rene Ingoglia was the Yankee Conference Rookie of the Week. The 5-foot-11, 190-pounder rushed for 148 yards on 33 carries with one touchdown. Senior linebacker Phil Lartigue had 15 tackles and recovered a fumble, earning him Yankee Conference Defensive Player of the Week. He is leading the conference with 45 tackles on the season.

The Terriers had one significant performer in defeat. Sophomore wide receiver Carnell Henderson had nine receptions for 101 yards and a touchdown. He also returned two kickoffs for 25 yards.

Northeastern 16 Connecticut 13

Connecticut's defense continued to impress, but it wasn't enough in a 16-13 loss to Northeastern. N.U. was paced offensively by wide receiver Branden Tsetsilas, who had five receptions for 84 yards, including the game-winner from 11 yards out. Jason Speaker led N.U.'s defense with six tackles. UConn's defense has only allowed 51 points this season. The Huskies have a turnover ratio of plus-7 and are second in the Yankee Conference in interceptions. Conference leader Mark Chapman has four picks.

New Hampshire 45 Dartmouth 27

New Hampshire evened its mark at 2-2 on the season with an offensive explosion, a 45-27 win over Dartmouth. The Wildcats were led by sophomore quarterback Jim Stayer. In his first start at quarterback, Stayer completed 21 of 34 passes for 295 yards and a touchdown, earning him Offensive Player of the Week.

The Wildcats' high-powered offense also features two of the Yankee Conference's top receivers, John Perry and Mike Gallagher, first and fourth in the Yankee Conference in receiving respectively. Another Wildcat standout included safety Jim Concannon, who had 10 tackles and forced a fumble.

William & Mary 36 Harvard 16

William & Mary improved its mark to 3-0 for the first time since 1986 with a 36-16 win over Ivy League doormat Harvard. Junior quarterback Shawn Knight hit 13 of 22 passes for 192 yards and a TD, while scrambling 34 yards for another score.

The Tribe's defense, which has allowed only 53 points this season, was led by Adrian Rich and Jermaine Rosser. Rich is fifth in the Yankee Conference with a nine tackle-per-game average and Rosser is tied for third in the Yankee Conference with two interceptions.

Richmond 46 Rhode Island 14

Richmond set a school record by scoring 128 points in its first three games with a 46-14 trouncing of Rhode Island. The Spiders' dominant offense featured Uly Scott, who rushed for 121 yards and two TDs. Richmond quarterback Greg Lilly connected on 13 of 15 passes and his sub, Jason Gabrels, connected on 4 of 4.

The Spiders' defense was led by Maurice Glenn, who had nine tackles and an interception. For Rhode Island, Marty Coyne had 20 tackles for a very active Ram defense.

West Chester 21 Delaware 20

In the best game that West Chester University has played in decades, the underdog Rams defeated the Delaware Blue Hens 21-20. To gauge the magnitude of this win, recall that Villanova defeated West Chester 26-6 in a game considered to be a mediocre performance for the Wildcats.

The Blue Hens' top performer was Scott Hondru, who had two quarterback sacks. West Chester improved to 6-29 against Delaware with the help of linebacker Brian Sebold (from Father Judge High School in Philadelphia), who helped hold the Blue Hens' offense to under 23 points for the first time in 18 consecutive games.

James Madison 52 Youngstown St. 49

JMU showed the nation just how fierce the Yankee Confernce is by handing national champion Youngstown St. a 52-49 defeat. JMU kicker Trey Weis booted a 27-yard field goal with 10 seconds left in the game to claim the victory.

Quarterback Eriq Williams was 12 of 16 for 302 yards and three touchdowns for the Dukes. He also rushed for another TD. Williams has now passed the 6,000-yard mark in total offense and the 2,000-yard rushing mark for his career. JMU tailback Kenny Sims rushed for 152 yards, his 11th 100-yard rushing performance in the last two years.

WXVU airs 'Nova football

By ANDY FITZPATRICK

The Villanova football team is not the only team preparing for tomorrow's game at Boston University. That is because WXVU Radio, the voice of the Cats, is making the trek to Boston to broadcast the game live at 12:45 p.m. for all of its fans.

After having broadcast the first three home games, the broadcast trio of Joe Altomonte, Ryan Fannon and Brian Goebel is not afraid to follow the Cats on the road this season. This is the first of three road games the station will broadcast, meaning that 10 of the 11 contests will be covered live on WXVU, 89.1.

"We are really excited this year to cover a team with national championship aspirations," said Sports Director Ryan Fannon, speaking of the No. 2-ranked and 3-0 Wildcats. "Last year we were just getting a feel for broadcasting but now we have some experience which has really helped."

And with a team of such high stature in Division I-AA, WXVU strives for the most comprehensive coverage available to them.

"With no TV coverage on the Yankee Conference, the only way to be prepared is to read media guides and study facts from Sports Information," said Fannon. "It takes a lot of time both individually as well as in a group. But all three of us are football fanatics and good friends. Every Thursday night we get together and go over a gameplan for the broadcast before drinking a few cold beverages."

Although the radio team is spearheaded by Fannon, both Altomonte and Goebel play key roles. Altomonte, in his first year, handles the play-by-play coverage and is described by Fannon as having "a tremendous radio voice" and "good poise."

Goebel, a former high school player, displays his experience through his position as color commentator. The two-year veteran brings "a mixture of great knowledge and a good sense of humor to the telecast," according to Fannon.

The station, however, does not only cater to the football team. "People are really getting involved and the feedback has been good," said Fannon of the station in general. "We play lots of types of music that appeal to a wide range of audiences."

Sports Director Ryan Fannon

WXVU itself has undergone many improvements including switching to the FM dial last year, upgrading the studios on the second floor in Dougherty Hall and establishing set programming on Tuesdays, Thursdays, Saturdays and half of Sunday. Cabrini College takes over the air waves the rest of the time.

The sports department at WXVU also has come a long way under the direction of Fannon, now a senior who has been involved with the station since his first week of freshman year. In addition to broadcasting 10 of 11 football games and possible post-season games, the station plans to cover every fall sport and to air the majority of basketball games within the 10-mile radius.

In addition to receiving good feedback from the student body, the support from Head Football Coach Andy Talley and Sports Information is really starting to show, according to Fannon. And to further heighten awareness, the broadcasting team distributes close to 1,000 fliers all over campus.

But do not get the impression that the broadcasts are all business. The crew has had its lighter moments, like when they were crunching potato chips over the air in the recent 34-0 win over Bucknell. "Our three-man booth creates a real fun environment with a strong sense of professionalism," said Fannon. "You really get a flair for college radio."

And now Villanova can legitimately boast about a top-notch radio broadcast as well as its championship-caliber football team.

Defense keys field hockey to three wins

By ALEX SCOFIELD
Staff Reporter

After starting the season 4-4, the Villanova stickwomen have hit their stride, posting three consecutive shutout victories. An overtime win over Drexel and a shutout of Big East opponent UConn has raised the field hockey team's record to 6-4.

'Nova hosted Drexel University Sept. 24 to begin a three-game homestand. As far as sudden-death overtime victories go, this game was rather lopsided. "We had 45 shots to their five, so we dominated the whole game," said 'Nova Head Coach Jackie Gerzabek.

Any offensive threat that Drexel mounted was foiled by the Wildcat defenders. Early in the game, co-captain Melissa Rea made a pair of sprinting break-ups on Drexel corners. Sweeper Kathy Pearce also met the Dragon attack head-on during the first half.

> I think we've played more offensively this year. I think we've improved enough to beat (UConn) if we see them again.
> Head Coach Jackie Gerzabek

On the other half of the field, 'Nova was unable to overcome Drexel netkeeper Catherine Billingsley. In addition to the numerous shots on goal, Billingsley fended off 14 'Nova penalty corners and recorded 22 saves.

After regulation ended in a scoreless tie, Gerzabek was still confident that her crew would emerge victorious. "It was just a matter of getting the ball in the cage," she said. "Drexel takes most of their opponents into overtime."

In the overtime period, the Wildcats relentlessly crashed the Drexel cage. After a pair of corners and a flurry of shots, junior Kim Reed netted the game's only goal at 8:51 in overtime. It was the second time this season that Reed has come off the bench to score the game-winner.

Villanova's 1991 season came to an end when the University of Connecticut beat the Cats 2-0 in the first round of the Big East tournament. The Sept. 26 rematch between these two teams offered 'Nova a chance to avenge the loss and raise its league record to 2-1.

The Lady Cats accomplished both with another 1-0 shutout. "I think we've played more offensively this year," said Gerzabek at the game's conclusion. "I think we've improved enough to beat [UConn] if we see them again."

'Nova wasted no time in scoring this time around. The goal came at 6:12 into the game when junior Bree Hawthorne (three goals, one assist, four points) charged the Husky goal and manuvered past UConn goalie Yolanda Muntz. Freshman Teri Galante was credited with the assist, notching her first point as a Wildcat.

In the final five minutes of the game, Villanova was put on the defensive and met the challenge. A foul took the Huskies into 'Nova territory, and their assault culminated in a corner hit, which Wildcat goalie Chrissy Thomas chip-kicked away.

In the final moments, UConn tried unsuccessfully to break past co-captain Marianne Connelly, who cleared two Connecticut charges to preserve the win.

The game was the third consecutive shutout for Thomas, whose record rose to 6-3 while her goals-against-average dropped to 1.4. She has totaled 16 saves in the string of shutouts.

The Cats have no games scheduled for the upcoming week, embarking on an 11-day break between games.

No. 2-ranked Cats ready for B.U.

Quarterback Tom Colombo hopes to get back on track this weekend when the Cats battle at B.U.

Preview

By ANDY FITZPATRICK
Sports Editor

Sometimes statistics do not tell the whole story. Look at tomorrow's 'Nova at Boston U. matchup at 1 p.m. A 3-0 team (Villanova) versus a 0-3 team (B.U.). A 56-6 slaughter by the Cats one year ago against a similar Terrier squad. The No. 2-ranked team in the country versus the last place team in the Yankee Conference. A game against a team that 'Nova Head Coach Andy Talley has never lost (5-0). A blowout tomorrow? Not necessarily.

While everything seems to suggest another Wildcat romp, the game must first be played. And for B.U., this is a contest it is longing to win. After three road games, the Terriers return home looking for a victory to turn their season around. Throw in last season's 50-point loss, and B.U. will be eager for revenge.

And so for 'Nova, this game presents yet another test in its run to the Division I-AA postseason. Like Richmond, this is a game everyone expects them to win easily. But the 36-33 squeaker over the Spiders proved otherwise.

First of all, the Cats have to improve their turnover ratio, which puts them dead last in the Yankee (- 7). The 13 total turnovers mean that the Cats are committing over four turnovers per game, a surprising stat for a 3-0 football team.

"That definitely concerns me," said Talley. "Defensively, we have not made the interceptions or the hits to cause fumbles. But with Andy Cobaugh [linebacker who will see action for the first time this year] returning, he is one of the guys that can make that happen."

As for the game plan, Talley has not announced his starting quarterback to the media, although he has made up his mind. The offense will pretty much stay the same regardless of whether it is Tom Colombo or Brad Parpan starting.

"Both guys are very supportive of each other," said Talley. "This may turn out to be a week-to-week thing. But it is a good situation to be in with two capable guys."

And a situation that is very familiar to B.U. Both Walter Norton and Greg Moore are expected to see time, according to Head Coach Dan Allen, who will start Norton in his run-and-shoot offense.

"Villanova has so many seniors that are very confident and believe they can win," said Allen. "Last year, it was a case of them gaining confidence as the season progressed. They have so much power upfront that we must keep their offense off the field. We can't play like last year."

With an extra week off, Talley stressed a return to the fundamentals with his team, instead of preparing strictly for B.U.

"We're not in sync right now," said Talley. "This will be a week to see where we are. B.U. has nothing to lose and everything to gain."

And for Villanova, this is a game to prove the statistics versus B.U. really do tell the whole story.

'Nova boots Lafayette, 4-2 behind Ross and Levandusky

By BOB TRAVISANO
Staff Reporter

Just when it seemed things could not get any worse, the women's soccer team earned a much-needed victory to lift them out of the doldrums. Behind the high-powered scoring of Sandy Ross and Sarah Levandusky, the Cats bested Lafayette College in a lopsided 4-2 contest.

The tandem of Ross and Levandusky combined for three goals and three assists while Gail Kegolis kicked in for another tally.

From the start, 'Nova seized control by aggressively attacking the Lafayette net. Even though the Cats did not register a first period score, Head Coach Shelly Chamberlain was pleased with his team's effort.

"We dominated the whole first half, even though we didn't score until the second period," said Chamberlain.

After the intermission, the Cats rushed out to a quick 3-0 advantage. Lafayette retaliated with two goals within seconds of each other, closing the Cat deficit to 3-2. 'Nova iced the game with a final goal at 44:12 in the second half, slamming the door on its opponents.

The difference in the game was quickness and precision. "We were quicker to the ball and linked three, four and five passes together," said Chamberlain. "It felt good having the upper hand for a change. We know what it's like to be in the opposite position; after the Boston trip (against Boston College and Providence College), we knew we needed a win badly."

The St. John's contest was a different story.

"We felt that we'd be in this game. They scored on us in three minutes. We played catchup and held them off for the next 35 minutes," said Chamberlain.

With a two-goal lead going into halftime, St. John's quickly hit for two more scores. The Cats faced an impossible mission but they refused to quit. Over the last 10 minutes, the team retaliated with two goals by Levandusky and Ross. But it was too little, too late.

"We needed 15 more minutes and we could have tied it up," said Assistant Coach Sharon Miller. "We were just starting to pick it up."

The Cats' superior conditioning was evident in the later stages of the contest. "Our girls never gave up," said Miller. "They always fight to the very end."

With Ross and Levandusky converging and filling the gaps, and Rose Miller quickly emerging as a defensive force, Chamberlain's prediction of a winning season remains intact.

"Our goal is to go 11-9. We can get seven more wins with a lot of hard work," said Chamberlain. "If we get eight wins out of our next 11, it would be a great season."

This Week: Jackie Gerzabek, field hockey

By JACKIE GERZABEK
Head Coach

Field hockey. You're probably thinking it's a sport that's too frustrating to watch because the official blows the whistle the whole time. Well not any more. The rules have changed to allow more continuous play and, as a result, field hockey is fast-paced and fun to watch.

Fortunately, you can see some of the best field hockey in the nation right here at Villanova. Villanova field hockey is based on a strong tradition of success. We are a member of the Big East Conference which includes powerhouses such as UConn and Providence College. We won the Big East Championship in 1990 and are currently 2-1 against Big East opponents. Our only loss against a league rival was this year's toughest by far. After dominating seventh-ranked Providence College for almost the entire game, they were able to score the winning goal in the final minutes. We were able to rally the next day to a 4-0 victory over Boston College and we have remained unbeaten since. We look forward to participating in this year's Big East Conference tournament to compete for the championship.

In addition to our Big East competition, we play some of the best teams in the country. We hope to build on our current 7-4 record when we take on such teams as Massachusetts, Virginia and Rutgers in the latter part of our season. We hope to succeed against these teams and better establish ourselves as a nationally recognized program.

Among area teams we have already proven to be the team to beat. This year we've earned decisive victories over cross-town rivals UPenn, Drexel and St. Joseph's. We look forward to playing a tough LaSalle squad.

Villanova field hockey is always exciting. We are the kind of team that can come back from a half-time deficit and score the winning goal with just seconds to go in the game. The kind of desire it takes to win these games is exemplified in our players. A great example of this is senior Kathy Pearce, who underwent reconstructive knee surgery after suffering an injury late last season. Kathy endured intensive rehabilitation to be able to take the field again this year. Her hard work has paid off, and she is an integral part of this very promising team.

This year's squad returns nine starters to the field who not only bring experience to the team, but also boast regional recognition. These players, in addition to other very talented veterans and freshmen, make up what could be one of Villanova's finest field hockey teams yet. We are excited about our opportunity for success this year, and we hope Villanovans will be able to share it with us. After all, field hockey isn't a boring sport anymore. We hope you'll get the chance to watch.

Graffiti defaces campus buildings

By JENNIFER CASTELLI
News Editor

Graffiti bashing the humanities, the Sesquicentennial and the ROTC program was found Oct. 3 on almost every floor of the St. Augustine Center for the Liberal Arts and Tolentine Hall, said Public Safety investigator David Mann. The cost of the damage has not yet been assessed.

The magic marker graffiti consisted of sayings that attacked the "Father President" and that proclaimed the "Humanities are dead." Memo boards, walls, stairwells and male bathrooms were among the many sites that were damaged.

"Someone got into the Liberal Arts building between 9 p.m. and 11 p.m. Saturday," said Mann. The damge was discovered at 11 p.m. in the St. Augustine Center and at 1 a.m. in Tolentine Hall, he said.

A floor-by-floor search was conducted of the buildings but no one was found, said Mann.

The damage was most likely done by a male student that knows the building, said Mann. "We believe that the person who did this was an angry, young person," he added.

An investigation is underway, however "finding this kind of criminal in a college environment is like a shot in the dark," said Mann.

"It's a hard case to solve unless someone comes forward and says that they know who did it or they heard someone bragging about doing it," Mann added.

We believe that the person who did this was an angry, young person.

David Mann, Public Safety investigator

Public Safety officials are working with the assistant dean of Liberal Arts "to get to the bottom of this," said Mann. Class lists of students in the liberal arts are being combed for possible suspects, he said.

The graffiti was cleaned up by Facilities Management with strong solvents that they have for that purpose, Mann said.

Volunteers aid victims in hurricane-stricken Miami

The Villanova Volunteers Program of Campus Ministry, in conjunction with the Villanova Miami Alumni Club, are sponsoring a trip to Miami, Fla. and the surrounding area to provide aid and assistance to the victims of Hurricane Andrew. Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity assisted in raising money for the trip by cosponsoring a collection with Campus Ministry at all Sept. 20 Masses.

Forty-two volunteers will be leaving for Miami Oct. 17 and will be staying one week, said Barbara Haenn, coordinator of the Villanova Volunteer Program. The group plans to be rebuilding and repairing homes as well as restoring and building temporary shelters, Haenn said.

The volunteers will work during the day and stay in a retreat center at night, Haenn said. The Miami Villanova Alumni Club will be hosting the volunteers in the evenings, she added.

"We felt there was a definite need. We wanted to help with the hurricane relief and campus ministry wanted to get a trip going so it all came together at once," said Scott Holloway, a junior political science major and philanthropy chair of the fraternity.

The collection raised during the Masses totalled $1,110, Haenn said.

Environmental group saves animal lives

Capt. Paul Watson, one of the founders of the environmentalist group Sea Shepherd Conservation Society, spoke at the University Oct. 6 in Connelly Center Cinema. He talked about the group's efforts to protect whales, dolphins, seals and other animals targeted by humans.

Sea Shepherds have publicized countries illegal trapping by ramming drift netting vessels, damaging whaling equipment and dying seals' fur. These actions have lent them the name of criminal, extremist and radical terrorists, Watson said.

Each year, 250,000 sea mammals and 1 million sea birds are killed by humans. Thousands of miles of nets are "strip-mining the oceans" because of the economic demand for fish, according to Watson.

"When the human species acts irresponsibly, I don't care about their opinions" about the California-based organization, Watson said.

Students illegally represent the Sesquicentennial logo

By KATE SZUMANSKI
Assistant News Editor

Five Villanova students posted 800-900 defaced Sesquicentennial logos on campus Sept. 24. The poster contained the Sesquicentennial logo with dollar signs drawn through the Church spires.

The pieced-together flyer also included a photo-copied stamp of approval for on-campus posting which did not receive official consent from the Office of Student Activities.

Three of the five students responsible for the designing and circulation of the posters were interviewed by the Villanovan and requested their anonymity be respected.

The students said they created and circulated the posters in response to what they believe is the "insane amount of money being spent on Sesquicentennial activities," of which they are strongly opposed.

In the Oct. 2 edition of the Villanovan, University President the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., responded to criticism of the University for its financial management of the Sesquicentennial and allegations that the University is spending too much money on the Sesquicentennial.

"I think the overwhelming majority of Villanovans see that something as important as the Sesquicentennial should be presented with that type of class. People need to realize that you need to spend money to raise money. We've been very careful with the budget. We have not overspent at all," Dobbin said.

"The Catholic Church's purpose is to make money," said the designer of the flyer, adding that "this [the Sesquicentennial celebration] is just one example of the Catholic Church's desire to make money."

A student who participated in the hanging of the posters said "there is no room for opposing points of view on this campus," adding "if there is no lively debate of important issues, there will be no resolution of issues." The creation and distribution of the posters was done in response to such behavior, added the student.

"If you want to say something, you should be able to do so. There should be a freedom of expression wall on campus, allowing for a free exchange of ideas and an open forum for debate," said the third student interviewed.

"Because there is no room for having strong opinions on this campus, no one has any strong ideas," said the second student interviewed.

Director of Student Activities Lucyna J. Gorski said the creation of this poster is "misappropriation and misuse of University property." The Student Activities Office does not

AL-ODHAIM MARSH, Iraq

Depsite their lack of artillery and supplies, rebels in the Iraqi marsh continue their battle against Saddam Hussein. The rebels, known as the Mujaheddin, are waging a persistent guerrilla war radiating out of the marshland of Southern Iraq. Hussein, however, still controls most of the region.

Although the Iraqi army has many advantages over the rebels, the war is not completely one-sided. The rough terrain of the marshes has proven to be an obstacle to Iraqi troops, often forcing quick retreats.

The civilian population is caught in the middle of the war between the rebels and the government. The no-fly zone, imposed upon Iraqi pilots by the United Nations barring them from bombing the Shiite rebels, has encouraged Hussein to improve the government's ground forces and blockade supplies into the marshes. As a result, the civilian population has been without adequate food or medical supplies. The once plentiful marshes are now facing an ecological disaster.

Although many anticiapted Saddam Hussein's fall after the Persian Gulf War, he still remains in control.

PITTSBURGH, Pa.

Democratic U.S. Senate candidate Lynn Yeakel and Republican incumbent Arlen Specter launched relentless verbal attacks against one another in their first televised debate. Each candidate tried to prove that the other was misleading voters.

Yeakel confidently attacked Specter's proposed economic policy and repeatedly tried to link him to the recession, which she attributes to Republican administrations. She dubbed Specter "Senator Flip-Flop" as a result of what she claims to be, constant inconsistencies in his positions on education and abortion as well as on many other major issues.

Specter, who was initially considered to have the advantage over Yeakel, was forced to constantly be on guard against Yeakel's fiery accusations. He insisted that in the past he has been steadfast in his positions, although circumstances have made him alter some of his stands on certain issues.

LARGO, Fla.

Natural forces devastated Florida again. Tornados, with winds up to 90 mph, swarmed through the Tampa Bay area, killing four people in their path. Three of the victims were killed by the tornados at a mobile home park in Pinellas Park and the other victim was killed in Largo.

In addition to the casualities, many homes were destroyed and still more severely damaged. The tornados not only raged on land but also on the seas. The high winds were also blamed for sinking a freighter in the Gulf of Mexico. Luckily, 10 members of the crew were rescued by Navy and Coastguard ships and four others by a Coastguard helicopter.

WASHINGTON, D.C.

President Bush vetoed a bill to re-regulate the cable television industry. The bill was introduced in response to increasing complaints with regard to the high prices and poor services of the cablevision service. Bush argued that it is inevitable that television rates will continue to rise.

The proposed cable bill would require the Federal Communications Commission to set rates for basic service and create nationwide standards for customer service. Those who support the bill say that it will foster competition in an industry that is narrowly controlled.

Both the House and the Senate, who passed the legislation with more than the two-thirds majority needed to override a veto, are expected to vote again.

Bone marrow typing drive to increase donor registry

An estimated 16,000 American children and adults are stricken each year with fatal blood diseases. For many, the only hope for survival rests in a bone marrow transplant from a compatible donor.

Cathleen Bowes, vice president of the Committee to Benefit the Children, a Philadelphia-based charity; the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity; the Tri-Delta sorority; and Student Government are sponsoring a bone marrow typing drive Sunday, Nov. 1, from 11 a.m.-6 p.m. in the Butler Annex.

The requirements to be a bone marrow donor, as outlined by the National Marrow Donor Program (NMDP), are as follows:

— Donors must be between 18 and 55 years of age and be in good health.

— A blood test is performed to determine the Human Leukocyte Antigen (HLA) tissue type of the volunteer.

— The volunteer's tissue type is entered into the NMDP Registry through a local donor center.

— If properly matched to a recipient and after making a commitment to donate marrow, the volunteer undergoes a simple surgical procedure to remove marrow.

— The donor's marrow completely replaces itself within a few weeks after collection.

— After the marrow is collected, an overnight hospital stay is usually required.

> In order to-ensure the drive's success however, the support of the entire campus is desperately needed.
> Michael Grosso, co-coordinator of the drive

— The donor can expect to feel some soreness for a week to 10 days, usually described as a dull ache in the lower back area.

— All donors are paid by the NMDP and then billed to the patient and transplant center.

Through the congressionally authorized NMDP there is a worldwide network of donor and transplant centers. The NMDP coordinates the personnel and computer system which match the patient and donor, according to the NMDP.

As the pool of potential bone marrow donors increases, so do the odds of a match for the thousands of patients in need. The chance that a patient will find a matching, unrelated donor in the general population is between one in 100 and one in a million.

Because tissue types are found in different ethnic groups, the chances of finding an unrelated donor vary according to the patient's ethnic and racial background, according to the NMDP.

"Last year's bone marrow typing drive was a big success," said Michael Grosso, co-coordinator of this year's drive. "A total of 200 people from the Villanova area were typed, four of which were called back for secondary testing," added Grosso. The goal of this year's drive is to type 1,000 people, said Grosso.

The cost to type each person's bone marrow is $60. Bone marrow typing drives are not government funded, although minorities are typed free of charge. Last year a Greek-sponsored "canning" drive raised the money needed to type the donors, said Grosso. Donations were also accepted at the door.

Peace award honors Native Americans

By JENNIFER CASTELLI

The Adele Dwyer-St. Thomas of Villanova Peace Award was given to the Native American Rights Fund (NARF) Oct. 3. NARF representative Walter Echo-Hawk accepted the award on behalf of the organization, said Dr. Barbara Wall, O.P., director for the Center for Peace and Justice Education.

The award was given in recognition of the organization's "22 years of outstanding legal advocacy for American Indian rights," said Wall.

The award includes a $1,000 check, and a group representative is asked to come speak on an issue related to the group's activity. Echo-Hawk gave a talk entitled, "American Indian Religious Freedom: Need for Federal Legislation."

The Villanova Peace Award has been given out for the past three years, said Wall. The first two honorees were John Sobrino, S.J., and Habitat for Humanity.

The purpose of the award is to "honor outstanding contributions to the understanding of the meaning and condition of justice and peace in human communities," according to the plaque which honors the award winners.

Award winners are chosen by the Activities Committee of the Center for Peace and Justice Education. The committee is currently accepting recommendations until Nov. 23 from the University community for the 1993 award recipient.

Pow Wow to be held

By JENNIFER CASTELLI

The first-ever Tree of Peace Pow Wow will be held Oct. 12 at 4:30 p.m., said Dr. Barbara Wall, O.P., director of the Center for Peace and Justice Education. A white pine tree will be planted during the ceremony, a Mohawk tradition, said Wall.

The Pow Wow is a "sacred gathering to celebrate Indian People since the arrival of Christopher Columbus," according to the flyer advertising the event.

"On Monday, hundreds and hundreds of Indians will be coming together in Washington, D.C., and at the United Nations in New York to celebrate the survival of their culture after 500 years of conquest," said Wall.

Several Indian faculty members and residents of the Delaware Valley will be attending the Pow Wow at the University. Students are encouraged to attend, said Wall. The Pow Wow is free for Villanova students.

There are 22 students who are registered at the University as American Indians according to the Registrar's Office, said Wall. "I also know at least four faculty members who are all Cherokee Indians," she added.

There will also be an Indian performance following the Pow Wow entitled, "Death Songs."

Dance benefits Special Olympics

By KATHLEEN COONEY

The third annual Dance Marathon will be held Oct. 10 to 11 from 9 p.m. to 9 a.m. in the Dayhop of Dougherty Hall. For the last two years the dance has been 24 hours long, but this year it has been reduced to 12 hours in the hope that more people will attend.

The proceeds from the marathon will benefit the Special Olympics. Many groups, including the Association of Commuting Students, the Student Programming Council and the orientation groups are being encouraged to attend.

There is still time to sign up. Participants must be sponsored for at least $48, $4 an hour. You may be sponsored for $3, or 30 cents an hour. Also, for every $2 over $48, participants will get a 15-minute break.

Among the bands who will perform are Perfect Timing, Funkin' Do Me, The Pros and Last Call, a student band. Radio station Eagle 106 also will play music during the marathon.

Prizes include food, T-shirts, hats, posters, CDs and tapes, among others.

Sesquicentennial Minutes

FIRES

A series of fires, some of them destructive, some of them nearly so, plagued the Villanova campus from the 1850s to the 1930s. They have added a note of tragic drama to Villanova's history and have changed the local landscape forever.

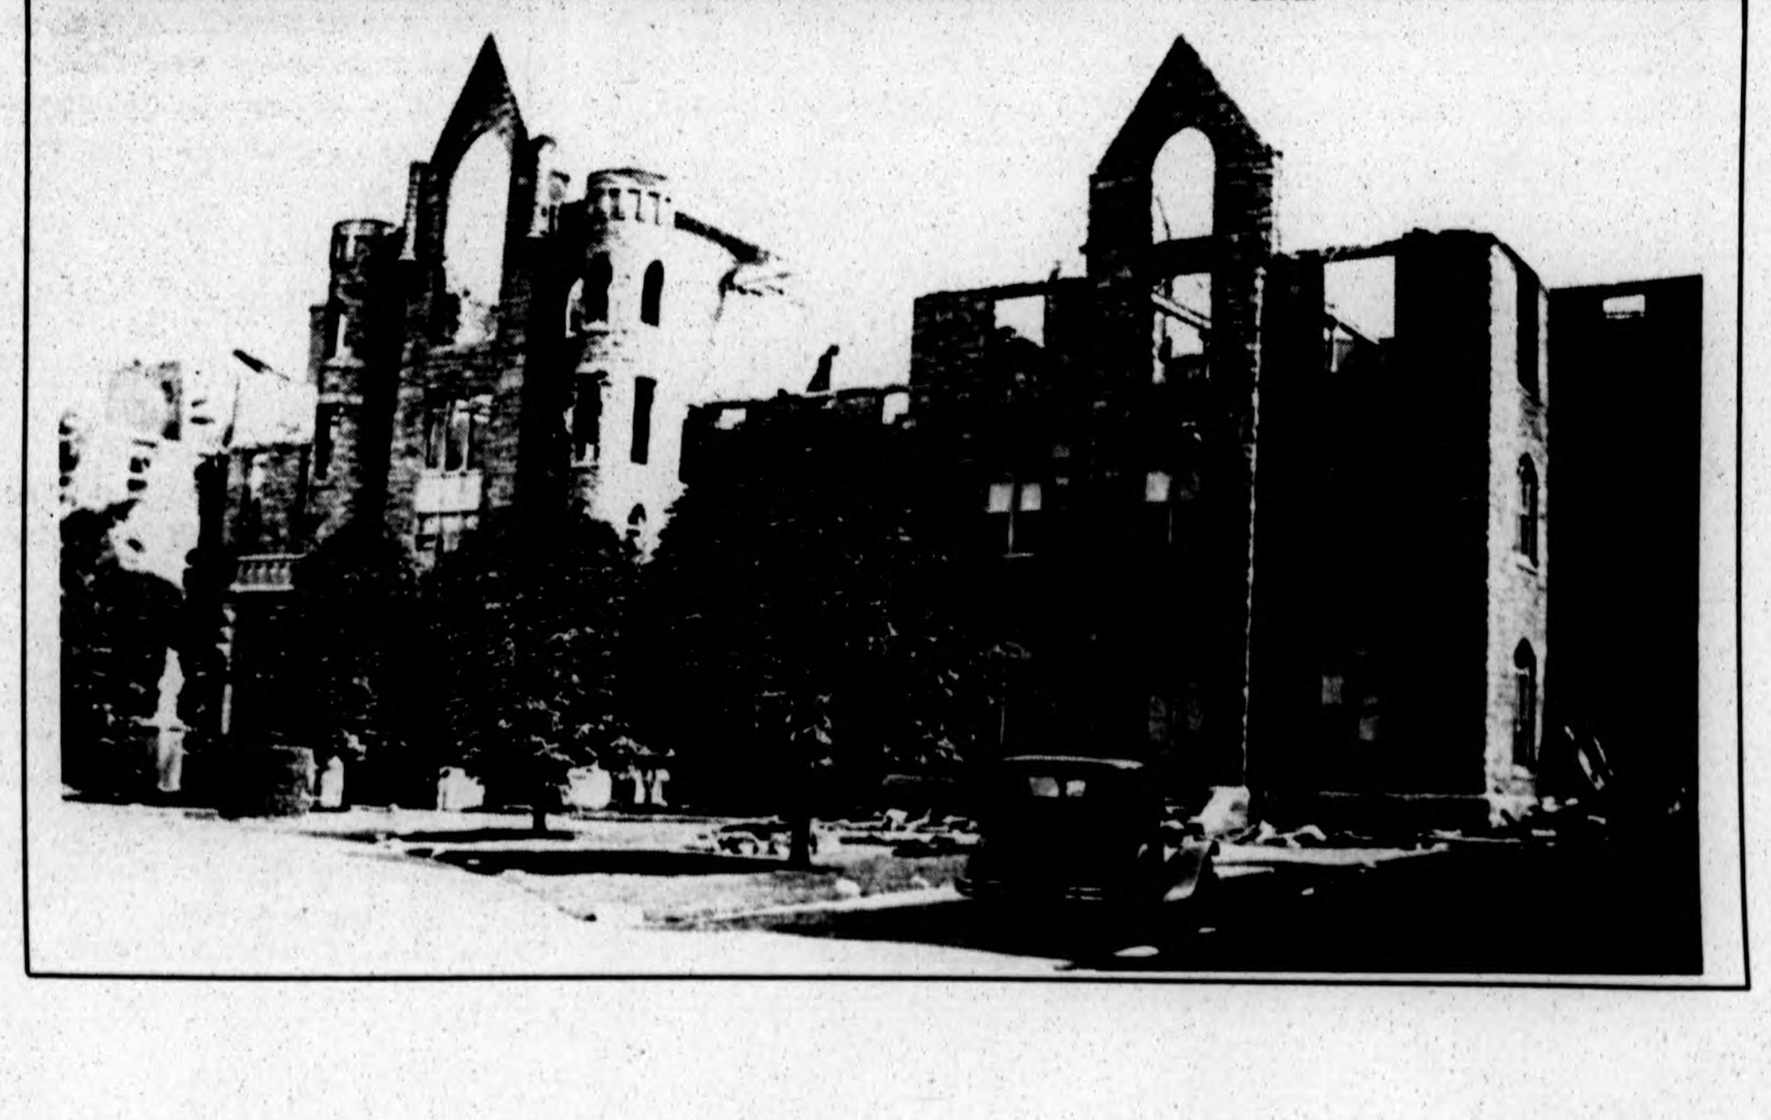
The first of these fires was on March 14, 1852, at about 8:30 in the basement of the old Belle-Air mansion, which was serving as the Augustinian monastery, burned through the floor of the parlor above and was put out just in time. Nearly 20 years later, on Oct. 7, 1871, a barrel of gasoline ignited in the monastery basement and almost spread out of control. Then on Nov. 4, 1894, a desk in the room of the Rev. Laurence Delurey, O.S.A., caught fire, burning a number of his books and papers before it was put out.

Nearly two decades passed without another fire in the old Belle-Air mansion. Now called St. Rita's Hall, it was at that time being used as a seminary building, as well as a dormitory for lay students. At about 2 in the afternoon of Jan. 10, 1912, a student noticed smoke coming from the attic, the fire having been ignited by a defective flue. Students and faculty rescued valuable manuscripts, documents and books from the structure before they were consumed. Five fire companies converged on the scene and managed to bring the conflagration under control by evening. The charred remains were pulled down, and a new St. Rita's Hall began to rise on the site that spring.

The next major fire also broke out on a winter's day. It was about six in the evening of Jan. 29, 1928, when students burst into the dining room of what was then called Main College Hall. Smoke was pouring from the fourth floor of this large building which contained administrative offices, classrooms, laboratories and a student dormitory. Snow had fallen for two days and the fire trucks had great difficulty making their way to the campus. When they did arrive, frozen water mains and low pressure made it difficult for them to fight the flames. By morning only the blackened stone walls stood against the winter sky. The interior had been completely destroyed for a loss of over $2 million. Reconstruction began almost immediately. The result was Tolentine Hall, also known as Mendel Hall between 1929 and 1960.

The last of the great fires struck the St. Thomas of Villanova Monastery. This was not the original monastery on campus, which had been located in the old Belle-Air mansion, but an impressive Gothic Revival structure built at the turn of the century. On August 2, 1932, while summer school was in progress, fire spread quickly through the building, fanned by a stiff summer breeze. The aging college librarian, the Rev. Francis E. Tourcher, O.S.A., ran through the flames in order to save the charter granted to the American Augustinians in 1796, along with the deed to the Villanova property and several other rare documents.

Despite the Great Depression, the Augustinians managed to begin a new monastery the following year. But it would be the last building erected on campus for 15 years, until both the Depression and World War II had run their tragic courses. Thus the last great fire on campus seemed to announce the painful times that were descending upon much of the world.



NROTC celebrates 50th anniversary

University Press Release

Villanova University's Naval Reserve Officers Training Corp (NROTC) unit will celebrate the 50th anniversary of Naval presence on campus this year. Their annual Fall Review will be held Oct. 13 at 3 p.m. on Mendel Field.

During World War II on July 1, 1943, 600 recruits reported to the commander of the campus V-12 Unit, established by the Secretary of the Navy.

The college training program spared Villanova drastic declines in enrollment during the war. It opened doors to a college education for many who otherwise would never have had the chance.

Back then, students lived in dorms and attended classes amid the cadence of drill instructors. Robert Casey remembers the scene well. As a 1944 Villanova mechanical engineering major, he was one of the first to graduate from the V-12 program.

Casey, an industrial professor of mechanical engineering at Villanova, vividly recalls July 1, 1943: "We were issued uniforms at the Field House, some of us receiving only portions of uniforms because they ran out. As a result, many of us walked around for days half-citizen, half-military.

"Physical training was rugged," Casey remembered. "We climbed rope ladders to jump into the Field House pool from the rafters. We also had to swim with our hands and feet tied, kicking hard to stay afloat. Other times we had to swim 50 yards under water wearing heavy sweat suits, taking a quick breather at the 25-yard mark."

Because of the program's success, the present NROTC unit was established after the war, and continues to ready students for military life after they receive their college degrees.

As a result of a recent Naval staff consolidation, Capt. Sandy Stoddard has commanded the NROTC units at both Villanova and the University of Pennsylvania since January 1991. He spends equal time during the week at both campuses. Today, there are approximately 170 students enrolled in Villanova's program.

Several Villanova alumni, many of them NROTC graduates, have ranked high in recent American military history. Gen. P.X. Kelly, a 1950 graduate and retired four-star general, was commandant of the U.S. Marine Corps. Gen. George Crist, Class of 1952, guided America through the Persian Gulf War on national TV. The retired four-star general previouisly headed the U.S. Central Command, responsible for joint military operations in the Persian Gulf.

More recently, Maj. Andy Allen, a NASA astronaut and a 1977 graduate, piloted the Space Shuttle Atlantis. During his eight-day mission this summer, the alumnus took into space with him an NROTC flag, a plaque from the College of Engineering and a Villanova pennant in observance of the University's 150th anniversary.

Native American conference celebrates Indian traditions

By AUDREY DUNCAN
Staff Reporter

A week before Columbus Day Native Americans celebrated the Indian culture and spirituality at "The Voices of the Americas" all-day conference Oct. 3. Three keynote speakers addressed the audience with their stories of Native American traditions and rituals.

Dr. Barbara Wall, O.P., said that the purpose of the conference is to rejoice in the 500 years of the Native American people's survival, who now number 2 million in North America. People should use their "creative energies for a commitment to healing the damage that has been done to native peoples" and to "join in partnership to make this society a more human and just community," she said.

Walter Echo-Hawk, the first speaker, discussed American Indian religious freedom and the need for federal legislation.

The second speaker, Dagmar Thorpe, said "We should focus on the next 500 years supporting the survival of indigenous people and re-evaluating the path of western civilization." She also addressed women's issues from a Native American perspective.

The last speaker, Sr. Jose Hobday said, "If you don't study Native America, you will always remain an import in this country."

Hobday also said that the religious traditions and rituals of Native Americans are extremely different from other cultures. She pointed out that for the native people a feeling of connection with the land is an essential part of their spirituality. "White people live by the clock" and therefore, are "chopped up" — not connected, she said.

Another difference Hobday pointed out between Native Americans and other cultures was the issue of inclusiveness versus exclusiveness. She said that contrary to the two American "exclusive" vices, greed and arrogance, the Native Americans are inclusive and believe in "respecting your history." Native Americans revere the tribe and the community, including the unborn, the elders, and the ancestors, and hold the concept of "respect" in high-esteem, Hobday added.

Hobday said her goal was for the audience to leave the conference with an "inspiration to study, to make Native friends and to grow in understanding of the beauty of Native American spirituality."

Student loans become issue in presidential campaign

By College Press Service

Financial aid is emerging as a major campaign issue for college and university students as President Bush and his Democratic rival Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton actively court the youth vote.

Representatives of college organizations for the Democratic and Republican parties agree that student loans and funding for higher education are fundamental issues facing both candidates. What they disagree about is how to make college more accessible to more people.

"The biggest problem students face right now is funding and student loan debt," said Jamie Harmon, president of the College Democrats. "We now have a situation where some people aren't able to go to their school of choice or school at all because of lack of money. If they can get through, they're burdened with debt."

Tony Zagotta, president of the College Republicans, agreed that loans are a major issue facing students, but defended Bush's administration and its higher-education programs. Bush has proposed increasing the availability of student loans, but wants to cut back on the funding for grants.

"Democrats charge that this administration has been unfavorable to student loans. This is simply false," he said. "More is being given out than [in] any other administration."

Zagotta also slammed Clinton's proposed national trust for higher education.

Clinton has proposed a two-fold program to make higher education affordable. Students taking out government-guaranteed loans could pay them off through payroll deductions, or they could perform community service for two years.

"These don't have a lot of appeal. Young people want to enter the job market when they get out of college. They want choices and opportunity," Zagotta said. "While community service may sound fine, many would want to do other things."

Harmon described Clinton's plan as "revolutionary," saying the plan could "harness student idealism." If the plan is enacted, students could get jobs they really want to take after graduating from school, rather than feeling pressured to take a high-paying job they don't want in order to pay off school debts, Harmon said. "Debts affect their first jobs."

ROTC sponsors blood drive

BY ELIZABETH BARSZCZEWSKI

Villanova University's Naval Reserve Officers Training Corp (NROTC) in conjunction with the American Red Cross sponsored a campus wide blood drive Oct. 7 and 8 in John Barry Hall. The NROTC sponsors a blood drive every semester, said midshipman Tom Krueger, deputy operations officer.

"We try to get 200 pints. We have not been able to meet our goal in recent years and our numbers are declining," Krueger said.

"It was my first time giving blood," said Michelle Lockwood, a freshman psychology major. "The people there were really nice. They made me feel really comfortable and it doesn't hurt as much as people think."

Everyone in the NROTC program is encouraged to give blood and encourages others to give as well, said Krueger.

In addition to the Red Cross volunteers who assist during the blood drive, the midshipmen also help out a great deal, he added.

One of the incentives for members of NROTC to donate blood is a color competition held among the three companies of the NROTC Unit. Participation in the blood drive, along with such things as grades and physical fitness test scores are considered in the competition, Krueger said. The Red Cross presents an award to the company with the highest percent of participation, said Krueger.

The University has been the largest single donator of blood on the Main Line for years.

Congress approves cuts in Pell Grants

By College Press Service

A budget-conscious U.S. Senate this month approved a $100 reduction in the maximum Pell grant next year, virtually assuring final congressional approval of the plan.

Meanwhile, financial aid advisers are warning that broader eligibility for the grants, coupled with lower funding levels, means that the competition will be greater than ever for smaller amounts of money.

The Senate bill would reduce the maximum grant in the fiscal year 1993 from $2,400 to $2,300. Lawmakers blamed some of the problems on previous shortfalls in the program, and the committee that developed the bill said it "deeply regrets" having to lower the award.

Nonetheless, the $2,300 maximum grant is far below the $3,700 Pell grant envisioned in the recent Higher Education Act (HEA) reauthorization bill. Congress enthusiastically approved the reauthorization bill earlier this year, although members now admit they lack the money to support many of its goals.

During the summer, the House voted for the $100 cut in the maximum Pell grant, also citing budget constraints.

In addition to the Pell reductions, the Senate bill cuts funding for several other higher education programs, including a small reduction in aid to historically black colleges and universities. But the Senate and House did vote to save the State Student Incentive Grant program, which was singled out for elimination by the Bush administration.

Coming on the heels of the HEA reauthorization bill, the Pell grant cut could substantially alter the nation's major student grant program. Under HEA, more middle-class families will become eligible for aid next year, which could create a scramble for the available funds.

"We know there will be expanded eligibility," said Dallas Martin, president of the National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators. Yet Martin expressed hope that the program — with its limited funds — will continue to support low-income youth.

"I think there's a real commitment [in Congress] not to erode access for low-income students," Martin said. "People with the greatest need should get served first."

He said a major goal of the expanded eligibility is to build greater national support for Pell. "If you have fewer students eligible, people will not feel they have a stake in it," Martin said. "But if they can get even a grant of $200 or $300, people will consider it an important program."

About 3.8 million students will receive Pell grants in 1992, the Education Department says. The average grant award is $1,452.

HEA also created a new system to judge a student's need for financial aid. Already, some colleges have complained that this new, simplified needs analysis may hurt independent students who lack family resources for college.

Martin said this issue — and many others in HEA — may be left until after the November election.

Law School appoints director of development

University Press Release

Steven P. Frankino, dean of Villanova University School of Law, announced that Samuel T. McClure has accepted the position of director of development. "Sam comes to us with 26 years of experience in higher education fund raising and a proven record of success at four quality institutions," said Frankino.

McClure previously served as vice president for institutional affairs at Assumption College in Worcester, Mass. He was responsible for the college's development, public relations and alumni relations programs. At Assumption College, McClure successfully completed a $3.5 million library campaign and was engaged in a capital campaign with an overall goal of $15 million. He raised more than $8.3 million for the campaign before leaving. The initial phase of the campaign included a $5.35 million recreation complex now in its final stage.

Prior to his position at Assumption College, McClure was at the University of Dallas, where he was responsible for overall alumni, development and public relations programs. He served at Georgetown University in various development functions from 1976 to 1986, including director of corporate and foundation relations and acting director of development. From 1966 to 1976, McClure served respectively as the annual fund director and as director of development at St. Bonaventure University.

McClure holds a B.A. and M.A. degree from St. Bonaventure University. He is married and has two children.

Complaints Silence Bells

DURHAM, N.H. — Bells that have chimed for decades on the University of New Hampshire campus have been silenced because of complaints about the volume, the time of concerts, and because some of the music is of Christian origin.

Since 1952, a carillon of 246 bells has been played at daily 10-minute concerts in the morning and at lunchtime. The music includes the New Hampshire hymn, and the school alma mater, which is written to the Christian music, "Lead on, Oh King Eternal."

Recently the concerts were moved from 8 a.m. to 7:45 a.m. because professors said the music interfered with early classes. The noon concert was moved from 12 to 12:30 p.m. because classes have been lengthened.

The complaints began with the change of schedule, says a school spokesman.

University officials are reviewing the complaints. In the meantime, the bells will remain silent for the first time in 40 years.

Low Grades Linked To Heavy Drinkers

WASHINGTON — College students with low grades consume an average of 11 alcoholic drinks a week, three times the amount that honor roll students do, say researchers from two universities.

The study, based on a survey of 56,000 students on 78 campuses during the 1989-90 school year, also found that students at smaller schools are drinking more than at larger schools, and that male students are more likely than women to go on drinking binges.

Students who were getting D's and F's were averaging 10.8 drinks a week, while students with A's were consuming 3.4 drinks.

Researchers from Southern Illinois University and the College of William and Mary in Virginia analyzed the survey results and created the report, which is intended to assist school officials in designing substance abuse prevention programs.

Researchers found that alcohol, as expected, is the drug of choice: 86 percent of respondents said they used it in the last year, and 45 percent said they drink on a weekly or more frequent basis.

Twenty-seven percent of students said they smoked pot in the past year, and 6.1 percent said they used cocaine.

Other drugs reported on campus included steroids, opiates, hallucinogens, amphetamines, sedatives and inhalants. The most significant result is the link between alcohol and grades, say officials.

Earned Degrees Could Reach Record

WASHINGTON — The number of students receiving degrees at colleges and universities could reach an all-time high in most categories in the 1992-93 school year, the Department of Education said.

At least 490,000 associate degrees are expected to be conferred this year. The estimates, in the department's annual back-to-school forecast, include: bachelor's, 1.13 million; master's, 345,000; and doctorates, 41,000.

About 75,000 degrees will be awarded to students in medicine, theology and law schools, the department estimated.

Magazine poll satirizes 1992 election campaign

By College Pros Service

In a poll sponsored by Spy magazine and TDK, a recording tape company, Democratic presidential contender Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton was favored by college students over President Bush 56 percent to 35 percent.

Of 1,190 students questioned in the poll, the results of which appear in the November issue of Spy, 70 percent said they thought Clinton would be a better lover than Bush. Sexual preference of the respondents was not included in the poll's results.

The poll was conducted Sept. 11-17 at 62 campuses nationwide by Frank Luntz of the University of Pennsylvania. He was Ross Perot's pollster. The survey has a margin of error of plus or minus three percent.

Questions ranged from the serious, "Are you angry with the conditions in America today?" to the not so serious, "Which candidate do you think is more full of crap?"

The candidates' wives also were dragged into the fray. Hillary Clinton won the sweepstakes in the question, "If the presidential election was between Barbara Bush and Hillary Clinton, who would you vote for?" Fifty-three percent went with Hillary, compared with 45 percent for Barbara.

In terms of motherhood, however, Barbara wins: 56 percent would rather have her for their mother to 40 percent for Hillary.

On the more serious side, the poll indicates there is a general mistrust of government. Among the findings:

- Students have become wary of government, with 48 percent say they have some trust and 35 percent saying they have very little trust in government. Only nine percent have a lot of trust, and seven percent have no trust at all.
- Forty-two percent define themselves as liberals; 27 percent call themselves conservative.
- Bush beat Clinton on the issue of which candidate students would trust to babysit their children, 42 percent would trust Bush, compared with 31 percent for Clinton, while Clinton edged Bush out in a question about whom they would want to be their father. Clinton was preferred, 43 percent to 39 percent, over Bush.
- A majority — 79 percent — said that a candidate smoking marijunana is not an issue that would affect their vote. But adultery is another matter — 48 percent polled believe that they would be less likely to vote for someone is that someone committed adultery.
- And finally, in the area of music, 26 percent would want U2 to rewrite the national anthem, followed by Bruce Springsteen, 15 percent; Garth Brooks, 14 percent; Public Enemy, 5 percent; and Nirvana, 4 percent. If the students were electing a singer for president, Billy Joel would be leading our nation with 28 percent; Don Henley, 13 percent; Madonna, 8 percent; Bonnie Raitt, 7 percent; and Ice-T, 5 percent.

Sea Shepherd Society

An incident in 1975 changed Watson's life, he said. Some volunteers and he floated small inflatable rafts in front of Russian whaling ships. This did not prevent the harpoonists from firing at the whales. After a whale was hit, it did not attack the people on the small rafts as Watson expected. For this he indebted his life to protecting whales.

In 1972, Watson helped found Greenpeace, one of the largest environmental organizations in the United States. In 1976 he founded the Sea Shepherd Society, a policing organization to enforce laws and treaties that countries fail to obey.

The society is made up of all volunteers to prevent it from becoming beaurocrasized as Greenpeace has become, Watson said. He was called in front of Greenpeace's board of directors for being too radical.

The Fund for Animals lent Sea Shepherds the money to buy a ship to pursue their efforts of protecting animals. In 1979, Watson's group dyed 1,000 seals blue to keep people from clubbing them for their fur.

In 1990, Watson and his crew rammed two illegal Japanese drift netting vessels and watched the third retreat. The International Whaling Commission can do nothing to the illegal drift netters because of economic political reasons, Watson said.

Despite their actions, Sea Shepherds have never been convicted of any crimes. Countries do not want to connect themselves with breaking the laws that the organization is in business to enforce.

Watson cited the difference between the reason wars are fought, which are considered normal, and his efforts, which are often described as criminal. "What is more noble — to protect property that may not even be yours or to protect a creature that has taken 100 million years to evolve into what it is today?"

The Sea Shepherds take care to not injure anyone else or cause themselves any harm, said Watson. They work to inspire fear into the hearts of their adversaries.

When people ask how they can help, Watson tells them to do what they do best for the earth and for future generations. Students can get involved in grassroots environmental groups in their communities, he said.

Over the last 14 years, Watson's groups have saved tens of thousands of whales, hundreds of thousands of dolphins and millions of seals.

"Many talk about the sacredness of the earth, but few have been willing to take a stand in its defense," said Watson. His lecture was sponsored by the Student Programming Council.

have a policy on record regarding the misuse of the student activities' stamp of approval, said Gorski, adding that disciplinary action in this case would fall under the jurisdiction of the Judicial Affairs Office.

According to the Code of Student Conduct, "intentionally, recklessly or negligently, but not accidentally damaging, destroying, defacing or tampering with University property or the property of another are all prohibited ... Such behavior is likely to result in disciplinary action up to and including suspension."

The Code of Student Conduct also states, "The posting or distribution of advertisements for the promotion of commercial interests is prohibited and is subject to disciplinary action."

"If our posters made anyone think, that was good. If our posters made anyone angry, that was good," said the students, adding that they completely stand behind their actions.

Student composes melody of HIV

By College Press Service

When Bryan Shuler heard a melody that he had spent a year researching and writing, he was disturbed.

"The first time I heard it, it was a surprise," he said. "I didn't expect that melody. It was very shocking."

Shuler, who graduated from the University of South Florida in Tampa with a graduate degree in music composition, has composed a seven-minute electronic melody of HIV and T-4 cells. HIV is the AIDS virus and infects the T-4 cells, which are the cells of the immunization system.

The work was part of his graduate thesis. About a year ago, he was trying to find data on DNA to turn into computer music.

With the help of a doctor at the University of South Florida medical school, he was able to get specific information on the makeup of HIV and T-4 cells. "Genetic information is not as widespread as one would think," he said.

Shuler, who has had friends die of AIDS, said like his friends' deaths, there is nothing beautiful about his music.

"The melody is morose. There is nothing uplifting about it," he said. "I saw a friend of mine die of AIDS. It wasn't pretty."

He especially selected the HIV virus and T-4 cells to turn into music because of the worldwide devastation AIDS is causing in all population groups.

"Viruses are not biased or bigoted in anyway," he said. "They will kill anyone, unlike their hosts, the humans, who are biased and bigoted."

Shuler came up with a formula for interpreting the genetic pairings into musical expression, he said. He then fed the data into a computer and let the melody come out "as is."

What came out both disturbed him and made him more aware of the disease. At first, he tought of changing the music, and then decided against it.

The melody tracks how HIV and T-4 cells play against each other, and the listener can hear the ominous tones as the HIV invades the body and destroys immunization cells.

Marrow drive

This year, $60,000 was anonymously donated to the HLA drive at Villanova, eliminating the need for a formal fundraiser, said Grosso. Donations will be accepted at the door once again.

Head Football Coach Andy Talley was "instrumental in last year's drive," said Grosso. "Talley got the entire football team and one-half of all University sports teams typed last year.

"Talley also organized the bussing of students from the University of Pennsylvania, West Chester University and Cheyney University to come to Villanova for this year's typing drive.

"This year's bone marrow typing drive should be an even bigger success than last year's drive. In order to ensure the drive's success, however, the support of the entire campus is desperately needed," said Grosso.

we've ever done before, in that it is a triangle between students, Campus Ministry and alumni," said Haenn. "Scott came in to see me about taking up a collection for hurricane relief and the next day we received a phone call from Art Furia, class of 1973, president of the Miami Villanova Alumni Club," Haenn said.

Furia along with Joe Myrtetus, class of 1956, helped to organize the trip, she added. "Myrtetus has a son, Colin and a niece, Lauren Esslinger, who attend Villanova, who helped me on this end," said Haenn.

> We felt there was a definite need. We wanted to help with the hurricane relief and Campus Ministry wanted to get a trip going so it all came together at once.

The money raised by the collections taken at Mass did not completely cover the cost of the trip to Miami, Haenn said. As a result, all the volunteers will provide their own transportation down to Miami, said Haenn.

"I had done volunteer work last year on a trip to Maine. When I was told about Florida I thought it was the right one for me," said Dan Sullivan, senior accounting major. "I think the group feels that even though it will be hard work, we'll all have a good time," Sullivan said.

In addition to the trip to Miami, Campus Ministry will be sponsoring trips to Maine, Virginia and St. Francis Inn in Philadelphia over Fall Break, Haenn said.

"You know, it's so ridiculous. If I don't call my parents every Sunday at exactly 5 o'clock, they think I was kidnapped by aliens, or something. Anyway, one Sunday me and Mark, we decide to take-off and check out the city. So we're hanging out and I look at my watch. 5 o'clock. Alright, so my calling card and I head down to the local pool hall. (Which I happen to know has a payphone.) And I tell the folks the Martians send their best."

Vandals disgrace themselves with acts

One professor said he had not seen anything so controversial in his four years at Villanova. Others said it went against much of what the University strives to accomplish. Whoever did it, the graffiti written all over the new liberal arts center and the basement of Tolentine was disgraceful.

Throughout the St. Augustine Center for Liberal Arts, ugly anti-Villanova declarations were written. They criticized the University, the Sesquicentennial and the University president and professors in a crude and disgusting manner.

For the past few weeks arguments concerning freedom of speech and its limits have been discussed in this newspaper. Philosophies and views have been debated. Students and organizations, including the paper, have argued about where freedom of speech begins and ends in this country and on this campus.

The graffiti incident not only tested freedom's limits, but overstepped it. The felons damaged University property and broke laws to prove a point. But their actions were pointless. The attacks on the University were done irresponsibly and maliciously. More importantly, the vandals perpetuated stereotypes about the groups they represent.

Obviously, the vandals have serious gripes about the University and its mission. Such problems with philosophy are acceptable if presented in a mature way. But to launch veiled attacks at the University and individual members is degrading and destructive.

Open, responsible debate is the way to make your voice heard. Vandalism is not.

More paws and claws given

Paws to everyone committed to respecting life. Politics aside, "Respect for Life" entails a great deal, and we cheer the many members of our campus who commit themselves intellectually and spiritually to raising the level of respect for human life.

Paws to the students challenging the campus celebration of Columbus. They justly dispute the notion that European and Native American cultures merely "converged."

Paws to Steve Lappas for successfully recruiting Alvin Williams. Williams, a 6-foot-4 point guard from Germantown Academy, made an oral commitment to become a Wildcat Oct. 5. He will be the first Philadelphia-area player to enter 'Nova out of high school in over 19 years.

Claws to Sinead O'Connor for her unthoughtful and inappropriate actions on "Saturday Night Live" Oct. 3. In ripping the Pope's picture, she furthered nothing except ignorance and violence.

Change should move forward

To the Editor:

As the presidential election looms ever closer, mudslinging, sound-bites and incomplete information distort our views of the two viable candidates. We all recognize that our country needs revitalization; we disagree over who could do the job better. However, it is not difficult to see that another four years of Bush leadership will not bring about much-needed change — what it will bring about is another term of the same old empty promises.

Then again, perhaps it is unfair to say Bush is incapable of bringing about change. After all, according to Jonathan Kozol, author of Savage Inequalities, the Reagan and Bush administrations have managed to set social policy regarding minorities and the poor back 50 years. That is quite a change — one that will take at least 50 more years to rectify.

A better choice is Bill Clinton. He favors the aggressive enforcement of civil rights everywhere: the workplace, schools and neighborhoods. He also plans to appoint Supreme Court justices who understand the importance of Civil rights — a far cry from the neglectful, and thereby damaging, policies of Bush.

Education is another area Bush has indeed managed to change. According to Kozol, U.S. social policy regarding public schooling has been turned back almost 100 years. Yet Bush resists putting money where it is desperately needed. Instead, he wants to give $1000 a year to assist families in sending their children to private schools. This is a ridiculous gesture that will not help the most needy families; most private schools cost far more than $1000 a year. Meanwhile, public school buildings rot and some children do without such basics as schoolbooks and paper.

Clinton, on the other hand, sees education as a "key to empowerment" and wants to provide quality schooling for all. He does not support special privileges for those families sending their children to private school. Instead, he favors annual report cards for public schools to ensure quality education. He also supports national trust funds for loans for college students, job training and literacy programs for adults, and preschool for every child who needs it.

A good education is not the only thing Bush has made unavailable to the poor — adequate health care is equally inaccessible. Clinton hopes to change this through a national health care plan incorporating universal coverage for quality care, cost control through insurance reform, control of redundant technology and drug prices, and improved preventive care in rural areas and inner cities.

Where will Clinton get the money for such reforms? By cutting our inflated military spending by one-third by 1997 and shifting the funds to health care, Head Start, child programs and economic revitalization. Since Bush has been riding on his "success" in the Gulf War for the past two years, it is unlikely he would make a similar proposal. He continues to waste his huge military machine on "no-fly zones" in Iraq while people die by the thousands in the former Yugoslavia.

Another area where Bush has caused "change" to occur: the environment. The state of the earth is growing more and more desperate, yet Bush saw fit to sabotage the Earth Summit in Rio. Clinton and Gore, in contrast, plan to preserve forests, wetlands, endangered species and the Arctic refuge. A far cry from Bush, who wants to slaughter the spotted owl, purportedly to save American jobs. Meanwhile, he eagerly supports the transfer of those very jobs to Mexico through the North American Free Trade Agreement.

And what about "Read my lips, no new taxes?" After making this promise, Bush went on to impose the highest tax increase in recent years. Clinton, contrary to current mudslinging, proposes a 10 percent tax cut for the middle class, and will raise taxation on those making more than $200,000 a year.

Bush and Quayle's real specialty is singing the praises of "family values." Consider this quote: "We must stimulate within them ... the idea of home, of family ... these are the very anchorages of civilization." Who said this? Bush? Quayle?

Wrong. It was Senator Pendleton of Ohio, in 1887. He was referring to the Native Americans whom U.S. government officials regarded as a huge problem. The rest of the quote reads: "They must either change their mode of life or they must die ... these Indians must either change ... or they will be exterminated."

Implausible? It happened. While such drastic measures would probably not be taken again, it is still frightening to think of how Bush and Quayle might make life less livable for those who do not conform to "family values." We need a president, indeed, an entire government system, that respects different cultures, races and lifestyles. We won't find that in Bush and Quayle. It is time to give someone else a chance to make a change.

Public Safety's parking policies prove painful

By JUSTIN KESTNER

Did you ever have one of those days when nothing seemed to go right and things could not possibly get any worse? Well thanks to Villanova's own Department of Public Safety, I ended up having one of those months.

Because of injuries I suffered in an automobile accident on Aug. 17 — ironically enough at the intersection of Ithan Avenue and Lancaster Pike — I had to begin physical therapy. I soon learned this therapy would extend well into the first semester, if not longer.

The moral of the story is: avoid being in situations which force you to depend on Public Safety for help.

Knowing I would need transportation to and from therapy two or three times a week, I quickly filed an appeal for a temporary parking permit over a week before school started. I included in my letter documents from both my doctor and therapist which affirmed my need for treatment and thus my need for transportation as well.

Alright, I thought. Now that parking was taken care of, I could concentrate on more pressing issues, such as rehabilitating myself and determining what to do with my recently totaled car. I was certain I would receive a parking permit because of all the documents I enclosed (Public Safety, had been at the scene of the accident and would thus have a record of it) and also because of the true need my situation demonstrated.

My jaw dropped when I learned shortly after Labor Day that my appeal for a temporary parking permit had been denied. I was completely shocked by this news. I could not understand how Parking and Traffic Services, a branch of Public Safety could refuse to allow me parking privileges in spite of my dire circumstances.

It had been my understanding that Public Safety existed to protect the students and tend to their special needs. Well, I am a student and I do need assistance, I thought. Where is Public Safety when I need it? After all, it always seems to be there when I do not need or want it around.

I immediately sought to appeal this unjust decision. I was given the phone number of an official with whom I could further argue (and plead) my case. Over the next two weeks, I constantly attempted to get in touch with him, making several calls a day at various times. I even had family members call in case he was there when I had classes.

My effort seemed hopeless. I contacted Public Safety several times both in person and over the phone and asked where I could find this person if he actually did exist. They would not give me an address or the number of someone else, so I continued my search in vain.

Finally, more than two weeks and one ticket after my appeal had been refused, my mother actually got in touch with the phantom parking official. He presented her with several excuses why my appeal may have been thrown out, none of which sounded too convincing.

Public Safety, he said, would not transport me to and from Media, where my therapy took place. But at the same time, they could not grant me a parking permit which would enable me to drive myself.

He said he would look into other possibilities, such as parking at the Infirmary, and that he would get back to us soon. He never did, of course. Needless to say, we never could track him down again.

I was baffled by the manner in which Public Safety handled the whole episode. The staff members were inconsiderate of my situation. They gave me the impression that it was my fault I was injured, and that it was not their problem I could not secure a permit. Furthermore, they acted rudely to me and to some other students I saw who were also handling various parking and traffic cases.

I discovered I was not the only person who felt Public Safety had treated their situation insensitively. One of my friends angrily explained how Public Safety had suggested that he might have sold his parking pass after he had just reported it to them as being stolen.

"They were rude and (the official) didn't seem like he wanted to help me, and that's his job," said my friend Nick, who did not want his full name printed. Nick also said Public Safety was rude to his mother on the phone, cutting off the conversation and hanging up on her.

I eventually managed to secure a parking permit when I spoke to an officer on the phone, not knowing at the time that it ws the same man who had given me a hard time in person. I explained my situation to him and he agreed it seemed like I should receive a permit.

I then mentioned how Public Safety had given me the run-around and would not give me the benefit of the doubt. He sounded surprised to hear this and asked whom I had spoken to. We then realized we had discussed my case before.

The man immediately became defensive and said there must have been some unusual circumstances surrounding my situation. He said he did not know why he would not have helped me obtain a temporary pass. I told him I did not know that either, and that I refused to move my car from the Main Lot until Public Safety came up with a way for me to get to physical therapy. I said that Public Safety could not deny me the right to rehab. He then told me to come by in person and later gave me a temporary pass.

Finally, after a month of running and calling all over campus, I had my parking pass, no thanks to Public Safety, but because I would not let them walk over me and push me case aside.

The moral of the story is: avoid being in situations which force you to depend on Public Safety for help. If they handle your case as "well" as they handled mine, you are in for a headache so big that Excedrin will not come close to relieving it. But don't worry, their incompetency always comes through in the end.

Where are so-called environmental jobs?

By PHILIP DeCICCO

NOTE: This commentary is a response to Megan O'Donnell's letter of Sept. 25.

I am new to the Villanova community, having transferred from a small Catholic college in Maine where there are still trees, even with loggers around.

Guess what? Maine is still 95 percent wooded with a 150-plus year history of logging. I invite everyone who believes that environmentalism creates jobs to visit my unemployed logger friends who live in Maine. They have been out of out for over a year — thanks to "tree worshippers." Perhaps environmentalists, like letter-writer Megan O'Donnell, would be willing to supply their mortgage payments and food while they wait for those "substantial jobs" to be created from environmentalism.

(The only thing left to be created is rust on their chainsaws — thanks to groups like the Sierra Club, Nature Conservancy and Earth First, who are bankrolled by big banks and corporations.)

In case you did not know, groups like the Sierra Club and the Nature Conservancy are pushing for the creation of a five-state greenline zone which would confiscate some 22 million acres of private lands (many being the ancestoral homes of American Indians) and place them under federal control in the name of preservation and conservation. And, if you happen to live on these lands, who cares? You will have to move.

Therefore, families who came to these lands before the American Revolution, those who farmed, raised families and stayed for generations, are told they must get off, or else the state will kindly remove them through the law of eminent domain. This violates their most basic right to property ownership and throws the 14th Amendment out the window.

Contrary to popular liberal myths, it has not been automation or modernization but rather litigation that has tied up logging industries from cutting trees (renewable natural resources) on their own private lands. And, it is litigation that has caused the decline of the logging industry, and put my friends out of work. Loggers have not moved south, they have not moved at all.

Excessive "tree-hugging" has caused paper and lumber companies to buy their lumber and pulp from South America, where they are not polarized by litigation. So, maybe you are right Ms. O'Donnell, environmentalism has created jobs. Jobs in South America and jobs at the federal, state and local unemployment agencies.

So, go ahead, promise environmenal jobs. Just try telling that to my friends as they wait in line to receive their unemployment checks.

Philip DeCicco is a junior history major. He transferred from Saint Joseph's College in Maine and considers himself a "reformed" liberal.

COLUMBUS DAY '92

By LACHLAN WHALEN

As I sat in McDonald's last week, I smiled as a young family took a seat near my table; a father was treating his two excited children to a burger and fries. It was heart-warming to see this obviously devoted man spending an afternoon alone with his kids. My good feelings turned to ones of sadness (and I confess, a certain amount of anger) when Daddy admonished his rambunctious offspring "not to run around like wild Indians" at the bookstore they would soon be visiting.

I wondered at the term "wild." Did he mean that all of those with Indian blood are inherently uncontrollable, or just some? Are there then "tame" Indians, who do not make a habit of disturbing storegoers? Perhaps by "wild" he was alluding to those who follow their traditional ways of life, dancing and praying in the ancient manner of their ancestors. However, I know for a fact that not one of the traditional Lakota I know from Rosebud Reservation has ever been to Borders' bookstore in Rosemont. Maybe by "wild" he was referring to the pre-reservation Indians, who were so uncivilized as to live in their own way on their own land. Those were the "real" Indians, the "wild" Indians. Well, we all know there are no more Indians left, right?

In this year marking the quincentennial of Columbus's voyage, many books, plays and films have sought to re-interpret history, and the past is indeed justly on trial. However, what many people do not realize is that Columbus and those who came after him did not succeed in wiping out all of the indigenous people of America. This year marks 500 years of survival, though you would never know it from many of the available works. I call this the "Dances-With-Wolves' syndrome;" Indians are portrayed in their glorious past, just as destruction looms on the horizon. Although these works are usually done with sensitivity (as in the case of Costner's film), by continually depicting the Indian as a vanished denizen of the 19th century they distance modern America from modern Native Americans. A viewer leaving such a film might say, "Oh, isn't it terrible what we did to them. Well, it's all in the past now." Even modern textbooks seem to imply that all the "real" Indians are dead; for example, it is quite a task to find a history of the Lakota (Sioux) that does not end shortly after the Wounded Knee massacre of 1890.

Perhaps it is this illusion that allows anti-Indian racism to pervade American society. The realm of professional sports is a stronghold of outright racism condoned by the majority of Americans. Take for example, the Washington Redskins. I find it inconceivable that this team still bears that disparaging name. There are no teams named such things as "the Chicago Pollacks" or the "Cleveland Honkies." If other nationalities were portrayed in the same manner, we would have "the Pugnacious Micks" instead of "the Fighting Irish."

Stop for a moment and consider such pre-game activities as dressing a pig in a turkey-feather war bonnet. Would painting a pig black, putting an afro wig on it, then nationally televising this outrage be tolerated today? Unquestionably not. Why then are Native Americans subject to this abuse? The eagle feather is a sacred thing to many indigenous nations and is full of meaning, just as is the painting of the face which is so often mocked by sports enthusiasts. To phrase this in Catholic terminology, these actions are tantamount of a non-Christian serving Cheez-wiz and Communion wafers as hors d'oeuvres at a bachelor party. I do not wish to offend by making this statement, I merely wish to make an analogy that will make clear the seriousness of these fans' sacrilegious actions.

Perhaps some may not see the harm in keeping such racist icons in place. What harm can the mascots of a few sports teams really do? The answer can be found in the suicide rate among Native Americans. Recent statistics have shown that one out of six Indian youths will take his/her own life this year. As any psychologist can tell you, the root of suicide is poor self-esteem. What is the effect of seeing your race, religion and culture portrayed as meaningless and worthy only of the crudest forms of mockery? The answer is a lot of funerals. The answer is that one out of every six of the young Lakota I know will not see their 18th birthday.

Indeed, there are more important considerations than the mere names of sports teams, for the very lives of indigenous nations are at stake. The killers of today are as ruthless and even more efficient than Custer was; poverty, alcoholism, disease, suicide, infant mortality and poor or non-existent housing devastate reservations everywhere. And, as the Sept. 20 issue of The New York Times reports, the Oglala Lakota of the Pine Ridge Reservation are the poorest people in America. Readers might be interested to know that the Lakota are the nation depicted in "Dances With Wolves." This is what has happened in the 100 years missing from the history books.

Like the author of the article entitled "Bush Can Successfully Lead America Into the Future," (the Villanovan Sept. 18) I agree that we need to "drop the name tags that promote racism." But for this to happen, people like Michael Marano must realize that not all Americans come from the Judeo-Christian heritage that he seems to believe universal to the U.S. population. If more people come to see this, perhaps an end will be put to such things as nationally condoned racism and the continued illegal seizure of sacred land by the federal government (like the Black Hills of the Lakota). I can only hope that when it finally comes to pass real, life-threatening concerns can be addressed. Continued survival depends upon it.

Lachlan Whalen is a graduate assistant in the English Department. He would like to thank the Ikce Wicasa of the Sicangu Lakota for their wisdom, patience and spiritual guidance.

Don't forget injustice when celebrating the past

By KAREN CAMPBELL

The International Indian Treaty Council has announced plans to intercept replica ships of the Nina, Pinta and Santa Maria sailing into San Francisco Bay Oct. 12 to mark the quincentenary of Christopher Columbus' impingement upon the Americas.

The Council's intentions reflect the bitter discontent of the nation's two million Native Americans. Over 300 tribes currently struggle to survive in a country planning to venerate the man who introduced 500 years of genocide and ecocide into their culture.

The ambiguity surrounding the origins and motivations of New World explorers has allowed society to forge a hero out of scraps of questionable Columbus lore. We have wrought a figure which fulfills our needs for an innovative adventurer. But in doing so, we have glossed over the hateful record of oppression which taints the history of America's indigenous people.

Misinformation about Columbus' actions is propagated through superficial history lessons as well as the ignorant and shallow bigotry evident in popular media.

Blame cannot be heaped mercilessly upon a dim historical figure. If Columbus had not been the first to draw Old World attention to the Americas, undoubtedly someone else would have. The consequences of Columbus' "discovery" cannot be altered now. However, we can and must challenge our society's willingness to sugarcoat past injustices in the name of celebrating historical events.

Misinformation about Columbus' actions is propagated through superficial history lessons as well as the ignorant and shallow bigotry evident in popular media. Modern-day interpretations of the events of 1492 herald Columbus as an intrepid explorer who brought order to the barbaric and chaotic world of the Native Americans.

Archaeologists and Native American historians confirm that Native American civilization had existed for about 12,000 years before Columbus' arrival. Columbus was not the liberator of savage "Indian" hordes, but the oppressor of once-thriving Native American communities.

Some credit Columbus with establishing the trade routes that have created modern international empires. This honor is justified if we consider that, for the distinction of supplying the Old World with exotic vegetables and spices, the people of the New World were granted foreign and devastating diseases in return.

After introducing Europeans to the pleasures of the tobacco plant, those Native Americans not decimated by disease were forced into slavery, harvesting the crop to supply European habits.

These factors alone might cause one to question whether the 500th anniversary of Columbus' voyage merits a celebration. The fact that such misconceptions and injustices have endured throws a heavy cloud of doubt over the quincentenary's festivities.

In times of remarkable advances in medical fields and health care, Native Americans are still dying in disproportionately high numbers from hepatitis, influenza, pneumonia, tuberculosis and alcoholism.

Native American religious freedoms are repeatedly trampled as the U.S. government encroaches upon and destroys their holy lands and burial places.

Hindsight, though dimmed by passing years, remains a wonderful thing if we acknowledge its truths. We cannot force blame upon an ambitious sailor who stumbled upon a profitable new world. We cannot resurrect the generations of Native Americans who were casualties of the Age of Discovery. But we can strive to correct the misconceptions which encourage the continued exploitation of Native Americans.

When the "Peace Navy" — a flotilla of Native American vessels — halts the replicas of Columbus' ships in San Francisco Bay, they will ask the captain to sign a treaty promising to treat the land and native people with reverence. Through this symbolic action, perhaps 1992 can signify not only the quincentenary of Columbus' voyage, but the beginning of a period of renewed respect for the Native American culture.

VILLANOVA UNIVERSITY
The Center for Peace and Justice Education presents:

Deathsongs:
Columbus and the Conquest of Paradise

For many, the 500th anniversary of Columbus' "discovery"of the New World is not a time of celebration, but of mourning. The European invasion that began in 1492 saw the genocide of literally millions of Native Americans. Nowhere is the story of this great tragedy more clearly symbolized than that of Columbus' own interaction with the Arawak/Taino Indians.

Deathsongs takes a hard look at the realities of the Spanish conquest under the command of Christopher Columbus. At the same time, we learn of what was lost. Through the eyes of Anacaona, a female Taino leader, we see a culture in harmony with its environment, advanced, not only in astronomy, agriculture, sculpture and pottery, but perhaps more important, in the arts of interpersonal and community relationships. The play takes place on the eve of Anacaona's death; she is condemned to hang for the crime of "rebellion." Already the Spaniards have slaughtered 90% of her people. After a ceremony of sanctification, she sings her deathsong, and in a vision, travels the path of her past life, marred with the violent intrusion of the white man. Concurrently, the audience sees Columbus on his deathbed, driven literally insane from his lust for gold and fame, experiencing a fevered retrospective "vision" of his own. The fifteenth century in Europe was known as the "Age of Death", with its plagues, Inquisitions, and an obsessive preoccupation with the imminent end of the world, and Columbus was aptly suited to be the great importer of greed, corruption and intolerance. In Deathsong, we come to know who the real heroes of the first contact between Europeans and Americans, actually were.

The staging of Deathsongs includes rear-screen projections that give an exciting immediacy as well as visual detail to the production. In addition, a rich soundtrack augments the moving, live performance of two professional actors, one of whom is a Native American.

Perot behaves like a ruthless businessman

By ELLEN GOODMAN

So he's back. The Texan who fancies himself the thinking man's Rambo. The outsider who sees himself on a national rescue mission.

At his press conference in Dallas Thursday, Ross Perot said he would "accept the request" of his volunteers. "There's only one issue today. What's good for our country."

From the very beginning, Perot has talked about the country as if it were a P.O.W., a prisoner of war held captive by the two parties. He declared that "the issues" were still languishing, gagged and bound in some hidden cell.

With his bells and whistles, his talk shows and 800 numbers, his volunteers and dollars, his straight talk and his ideas, he wants to single-handedly free democracy from the parties' old grasp. All we have to do is tie a yellow ribbon round the old Perot tree. Again.

Well, I didn't share the Perotphilia the first time around. I don't put stock in maverick billionaries with egos as large as their bank accounts. Especially when they deny those egos. Especially when they portray themselves as mere servants of the people.

Last July though, I saw that Perot had injected something into this campaign. Call it energy if you want, call it excitement. He had engaged the disengaged, won the affection of the disaffected, gotten the jaded to be involved.

Maybe Perot was never more than a name for None of the Above. But the stamp-licking, petition-signing, grass-roots activism he incited hadn't been seen since 1968 when students shaved themselves "Clean for Gene" McCarthy.

So I was uneasy when my media mates came down on Perot with such a heavy hand. I think it showed how conservative we have become as professionals — too much a part of the system, too comfortable with the old names on our Rolodexes.

For all our overt passion for news, new-ness, change, some of us were hostile to the notion that a Ross Perot might really throw the whole process up for grabs. Reporters who had trudged through months of primaries, commentators who had nurtured all the right (and left) contacts in Washington, were not friendly to the new outsider, the nobody.

But when the guy upped and quit one day in July, without a word of warning or apologies to the people who believed in him, I agreed with the disgusted New Yorkers milling around outside Madison Square Garden during the Democratic convention. The city's in-your-face New York Post headline screamed: "What a Wimp!" I would have added, "What a Phony!"

There are moments in life when you learn a lot about a person's character. Across the country, people had left their jobs, upended their lives, to work for Perot. They had put Perot first. Unfortunately, so had Perot.

In a critical decision, he behaved like the most ruthless businessman who closes the factory, abruptly, when the bottom line starts to fall. Workers be damned. If he treated his own people that way, with such personal disregard, how would he treat the country? There is more than one way to be unfaithful.

Rationalizing his way back into the race, trying to erase the "quitter" image, Perot said that he was re-entering the race only because the people want him to. Who can believe that? This is a man, as unable to listen to detractors as is his 800 number. No matter what a caller wanted to say, the toll-free number only counted approval for his re-entry.

He described himself again as the alternative to the "ego-driven, power-hungry people." But this description has as much credibility as "volunteers" on a payroll.

Maybe the return of Perot was always planned as "an October surprise." Maybe the millions he spent and the ads he canned were savvy preparations for a daring last-minute raid on the election.

But if true, these are not the actions of the democrat who spoke of town halls, direct access and a "bottom-up" campaign. They are the actions of a secretive autocrat. They don't describe a man who serves the people but a man who manipulates people.

My father used to say that if a man fools you once, he's a jerk. If he fools you twice, you're a jerk. Only he didn't use the word "jerk."

In the case of Perot, the saddest thing is not his capacity to fool himself or others. It's that this outsider promised to bring new people and new hope to the system. Instead he has brought something very, very old: Another large dose of cynicism.

LETTERS

Let's move to real debate

To the Editor:

I would like to thank the Villanovan's editorial staff for their display of journalistic integrity in the last issue of the Villanovan. Although the editorial staff of the Villanovan and the College Republicans may be on different sides on many issues, putting the comments of two weeks ago behind all of us will lead to a much more positive atmosphere on campus.

I, for one, am tired of all of the negatives displayed in politics. I feel our campus and, indeed, our country would be better off by openly discussing the issues. What we all have to remember is that politics is, in its noblest form, a discussion of what is best for our nation. Views on what is best may differ, but at the heart of any responsible political debate is what will benefit the country most.

I hope that in the coming weeks, as Election Day draws near, that the Villanovan and the College Republicans can steer clear of negatives and engage in meaningful debate. Only such debate can result in finding the best candidate.

Criticism part of life

To the Editor:

I must admit that I read, with more than a little amusement, the letters to the editor (Oct. 2, 1992) accusing the Villanovan of a left-wing bias. The reason for this accusation? The Villanovan criticized a flyer that the College Republicans used to advertise a weekly meeting.

I may be under the wrong impression, but I thought I was living in America. Freedom of speech is one of our basic rights, and the media is allowed that freedom to the fullest.

Criticism is a natural part of life. I personally have experienced a lot of criticism, and I have found that it can be helpful and constructive.

To all the College Republicans who wrote letters, try to lighten up. Realize that the Villanovan criticizes us all. It may be the one thing we all have in common. And, on this campus, common ground is sometimes very hard to find.

COMMENTARY

Issue of free speech still not resolved at V.U.

By KEVIN HANEY

The Villanova Democratic Socialists of America (DSA) posted flyers March 18 advertising a "pro-choice" rally. That same afternoon the DSA was told to take them down. "The administration decided the flyers would not be allowed because the flyers opposed the University's stance on abortion."

The Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., president of Villanova University, issued a statement to identify the University's position. Dobbin states, "To be faithful to [Catholic teaching] and to its own Catholic identity and mission, the University cannot provide institutional support for a message or activity which promotes or advocates abortion."

I do not intend to argue either side of the abortion issue. Instead I intend to examine the questions raised by the removal of the DSA flyers.

Can a Catholic university allow one of its student groups to advocate a position contradictory to that of Catholic teaching? Certainly it can be seen that neither the rights of the university or the rights of its members are absolute.

Let me begin by defining the University's role. Dobbin states "... Villanova, as a university, endorses unfettered discussion and the exchange of ideas in the search for truth and knowledge. In that context, Villanova encourages debate and examination of all aspects of the important moral and social issues of our time, including abortion."

Dobbin's statement is visionary and an excellent ideal for a university to strive toward. However, Dobbin's vision excludes certain members of our own community.

Suppose the Student Programming Council (SPC) were to sponsor a debate and discussion between a "pro-life" speaker and a "pro-choice" speaker. Would this not be "... unfettered discussion and the exchange of ideas?"

Then suppose some students are persuaded by the "pro-life" speaker and the discussion. These students could attend the next Villanovans For Life (VFL) meeting, and for example, help with "Respect Life Week."

Now suppose another group of students were persuaded by the other speaker to advocate "pro-choice" rally. They might put up flyers for an organizational meeting, and plan to attend the rally.

However, if the administration makes them take down the flyers, ing, and plan to attend the rally.

However, if the administration -akes them take down the flyers, the group has no way of recruiting other interested students, and has no way to organize itself. These students are being prevented from exercising their constitutionally guaranteed right to "freedom of speech."

These are the members of our Villanova community that Dobbin's vision excludes. They participated in debate, came to a conclusion, were ready to exercise their "freedom of speech" but could not because they attend a Catholic university.

Even the members of our community who are not willing to participate in debate, they must have the right to exercise their "freedom of speech." However, if these members choose to advocate "pro-choice" they are effectively stopped from doing so.

The rights of a Catholic university cannot be absolute. If they were, some of the members of its community would lose constitutionally guaranteed freedoms.

So are the rights of the students absolute? I would argue no.

Suppose that the DSA were to charter a bus for a "pro-choice" rally. The group would leave Villanova the day before the rally and would stay in a hotel overnight.

If the University were to pay for this trip it would not only contradict Dobbin's statement but the University's Mission Statement as well.

The rights of the University are paramount up to the point where the students' right to "freedom of speech" begins. Student groups who wish to advocate positions contradictory to that of the Catholic Church must be allowed the very minimum in order to exercise their "freedom of speech."

In the case of the DSA, they should be allowed the minimum institutional support to organize themselves. Which would include posting flyers (with a disclaimer if need be) and a room to meet in. The DSA should not be allowed to, for example, announce their meeting and rally from the pulpit at the end of mass. This form of institutional support is reserved for groups who support Catholic teachings.

Without this minimal support the DSA's "freedom of speech" is being limited. With this as a precedent any other student group could also be censored. The College Democrats for example could be censored on the issue of homosexual rights; the College Republicans, on the issue of capital punishment.

If this is the case then there is not true "freedom of speech" at Villanova University. If some student groups are censored, then we are all censored. It is impossible to have partial or selective "freedom of speech."

"The ultimate good ... is better reached by free trade in ideas ... the best test of truth is the power of the thought to get itself accepted in the competition of the market ... We should be eternally vigliant against attempts to check the expression of opinions that we loathe and believe to be fraught this death ...," said Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes Jr., dissenting in Abrams v. United States in November 1919.

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

IF YOU THOUGHT COLLEGE WAS EXPENSIVE, TRY PUTTING YOURSELF THROUGH RETIREMENT.

Think about supporting yourself for twenty-five, thirty years or longer in retirement. It might be the greatest financial test you'll ever face. Fortunately, you have one valuable asset in your favor. Time.

Time to take advantage of tax-deferral. Time for your money to grow.

But starting early is key. Consider this: if you begin saving just $100 a month at age thirty, you can accumulate $192,539* by the time you reach age sixty-five. Wait ten years and you'd need to set aside $227 a month to reach the same goal.

At TIAA-CREF, we not only understand the value of starting early, we can help make it possible—with flexible retirement and tax-deferred annuity plans, a diverse portfolio of investment choices, and a record of personal service that spans 75 years.

Over a million people in education and research are already enrolled in America's largest retirement system. Find out how easy it is to join them. Call today and learn how simple it is to put yourself through retirement when you have time and TIAA-CREF on your side.

Start planning your future. Call our Enrollment Hotline 1 800 842-2888.

Dobbin recounts past years, looks toward future

The Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., has emphasized change at Villanova during his four years as University president.

By JOE SHEARER
Staff Reporter

What do most of us make of the man who stands 6 feet 4 inches, weighs 220 pounds, who wears a freshly ironed black shirt, black slacks and white collar? To many people this image may seem somewhat intimidating, but to those who attend Villanova, it is a symbol of authority and status. The black of this man's dress symbolizes his determination, the white, his purity of mind and spirit.

Who is this man? He is none other than Villanova's president, the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A. Even after having established this, one might still wonder what these words mean. To understand him fully, we must venture behind the cloak and look at the man behind the collar.

Born in Brooklyn, N.Y., and raised in Staten Island, Dobbin has been a part of the rich Augustinian tradition since his early teen-age years. He attended an Augustinian high school and from there he decided to enter the Order of St. Augustine.

After high school he entered the novitiate for a year and then went on to study at Villanova as an undergraduate. Although the seminarians were separated from the general student body, he had the opportunity to experience the great character and eloquence that can be attributed to Villanova today.

After graduating from Villanova in 1958 with a degree in philosophy, Dobbin went on to study in Washington, D.C., at Catholic University. He received his masters degree in mathematics and prepared himself for a life dedicated to teaching.

In 1962, Dobbin was ordained as a member of the Order of St. Augustine and returned to the Philadelphia area to begin his first assignment at Malvern Prep. He taught at Malvern Prep for five years and then went on for his doctorate. He studied at the University of Louvain in Belgium and returned to the United States in 1971.

From 1971 until 1987, Dobbin taught theology at the Washington Theological Union, a school in the District of Columbia. The best professors from all of the ecclesiastical orders come together there to teach theology as an eclectic whole.

It was in 1987 that Dobbin came to Villanova. His first administrative capacity in the University was not as president but rather as an associate vice president for Academic Affairs.

During this brief but meaningful year, he learned the nuances of the present Villanova. It was during this time that he formulated his concept on the "identity" of Villanova which has been the trademark of his administration.

Dobbin was named president in 1988. In his inaugural address he spoke of the importance of St. Augustine in the Villanova community.

Students voice opinions on local Columbus controversy

By SHANNON KELLY
Staff Reporter

The 500th anniversary of Columbus' discovery of America has arrived not only amidst celebration, but also with controversy. This year more than ever, views of special interest groups and traditionalists have clashed.

Those groups opposing Columbus Day argue that it should not be celebrated because it is nothing more than a grim reminder of what marked the beginning of the genocide of the American Indian. The supporters contend that the holiday is part of the American tradition and celebrates the birth of the New World.

Recently an event in Philadelphia has brought this national issue to a local level. The City Council of Philadelphia has decided that Delaware Avenue be renamed Columbus Avenue. Villanova students voiced their opinions on this issue.

Some Villanovans revealed that, for them, the controversy is not one of importance. "I don't think it's an issue. It's insignificant and it's fine with me if they rename the street," said a junior biology major. Another junior, majoring in engineering, said, "I think it is ridiculous for people to make such a big deal over this." A sophomore engineering student agreed, saying, "It's only a street, what does it matter?"

One student questioned the priorities of the country in view of this debate. "With all the problems of this country, like the economy and the national deficit, I think the last thing we need to be worried about is a street name," he said.

Among the students who agree that the controversy has some bearing upon them, there is a significant faction who support the celebration of the holiday and Columbus' actions. "It doesn't matter to me because I don't live in this area. But I don't agree at all with the opposition to Columbus Day. Its tradition is the basis of our country," said a sophomore marketing major.

"I don't think it's such a big deal. I don't agree with the controversy because I think that Columbus brought about the civilization of this country," a freshman liberal arts major said in support of the holiday.

"It's fine if they rename it. The claims about Columbus being the cause of the genocide of the American Indians is stretching it real far. Columbus was a pioneer and should be rewarded for his actions," said one junior international business major.

"I realize that for the American Indian, Columbus Day is nothing to celebrate, but to judge Columbus' actions by today's standards is wrong because in 1492 the Europeans saw it as discovering a new land and civilizing savages, not as the extermination of a race," a freshman communications major said.

There are students at Villanova who expressed opinions opposing the change of street names in Philadelphia. A senior economics and philosophy major said, "Leave it the way it is. There is enough for Columbus already. I don't think it is necessary."

"I think they should leave it the same because there are enough things named after Columbus already and also because Delaware is an Indian term. Even if there was no controversy [over the celebration of the holiday] I wouldn't change it," said a senior majoring in sociology.

A sophomore liberal arts major expressed similar opinions, saying, "I do think the issue is blown out of proportion. It is just a street. But I don't think that we should name a street after someone who killed an entire population."

The views of these Villanovans are representative of a few of the diverse opinions of the American population. This issue is not new and may never be resolved.

But one thing that the majority of Americans can agree upon is that the right to a difference of opinion is what created America and is the privilege that has brought it this far. Issues like the one currently raging over the correct celebration of Columbus Day only emphasize the importance of such a right.

Swing into Pitcher's for fun

If classy, stylish nightclubs are too rich for your blood and too devastating to your booze budget, take heart, beer connoisseurs. A stroll down Main Street in Manayunk will lead you to a bar with a lived-in atmosphere more your style, Pitcher's Pub.

For this bar, with 15 brands of beer on tap, the name says it all. Reminiscent of Kelly's, the iron-gut drinker reigns here. But amateur imbibers and social drinkers can easily find a niche of their own here to settle into for the night.

The dress code is laid-back, jeans and T-shirts with beer logos abound. But if you don't own a shirt of this kind, fear not. You can win one any night of the week on the pub's own version of the drinker's "Wheel of Fortune." Every hour the wheel spins to determine new drink specials that go as low as 25 cents. The bar's patrons can also win prizes such as T-shirts and hats when they are raffled off on the wheel at the top of every hour.

While searching the crowd for Pat Sajak, drinkers can munch on free all-you-can-eat popcorn and watch MTV on one of the bar's four televisions.

For people looking for a casual friendly atmosphere, Pitcher's Pub is the place to wander into and stumble out of. Bottoms up, beer fans. This is one pitcher from which you'll definitely want to drink.

'Nova celebrates Indian heritage

With the increasing hype and publicity surrounding the 500th anniversary of the arrival of Columbus to the Americas, the media coverage of the issues concerning American Indian rights has risen proportionately.

The Center for Peace and Justice Education (CPJE) has been actively involved in this issue. It will sponsor two events Oct. 12 to commemorate this national holiday from the viewpoint of the American Indians.

At the same time the foundation for our lives was being established, the Indian way of life was being systematically destroyed and irreparably altered.

"Our hope is that these events will be gestures of recommitment and reconciliation to celebrating the values and traditions of the Indian people," said Dr. Barbara Wall, O.P.

"The Tree of Peace Pow Wow" will begin at 4:30 p.m. in the Quad in the front of the CPJE office. It will conclude with the planting of a white pine tree at the entrance to the University by duPont.

This is a Mohawk tradition symbolizing peace among various peoples. The term "pow wow" in the Algonquian language means "any ceremony for healing, survival and/or celebration with North American Indians."

Before the tree is planted, guest speakers will address the gathering, which will move from the CPJE office to the Connelly Center. One of the speakers is Vera Palmer, a Tuscarora Indian, who will speak on the need for reconciliation with Indian people.

"Deathsongs," a performance which illustrates the encounter of Columbus with the Indians, will be held in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center at 7:30 p.m.

Jazz scene heats up Philly nightlife

By RACHEL D. LUTTRELL
Staff Reporter

Philadelphia is the home of such well-known landmarks as the Liberty Bell and Independence Hall and is famous for its vast array of singularly American activities. But what most people do not realize about the "City of Brotherly Love" is that it also breeds hot jazz styles representing the indigenous American music of the 20th century. The area's vibrant club scene has given many aspiring jazz musicians their start in the world of performing.

Jazz grew out of several kinds of early American music and its name is sometimes used synonymously with that of ragtime and blues. It was the art of musicians who drew solely on spontaneity and raw talent for inspiration. Their music was rarely composed but rather improvised. Early jazz audiences rarely witnessed the same music twice, with the genre constantly evolving, changing and deepening.

Beginning with small groups of artists, jazz eventually gave way to the big-band style of performing. Such entertainment greats as Duke Ellington and Benny Goodman achieved their fame in this period and were adored by their audiences for their ability to entertain. This type of jazz, known as swing, reached its peak in the 1930s and '40s.

Since then, jazz bands have grown smaller and their style has come full circle. Contemporary composers strive to achieve the intimate, improvised artistry of the early days of jazz. At that time, the style was respected less for its mass appeal and more for its intricate, contextual subtleties.

Those at Villanova who would like a taste of the continuing evolution of jazz need not go far to find it. The city of Philadelphia offers a variety of styles and performers from which to choose. The following jazz hot spots provide on-going performances and entertainment in this area.

The Abbey Bar & Grill in the Radnor Hotel at 591 Lancaster Ave., St. David's hosts the City Rhythm Orchestra Friday nights and Joy Adams and Bruce Klauber's Men of Jazz Saturday nights.

The Brass Rail at 3942 Chestnut St. in Philly presents Catch 22 with Lynn Riley every Saturday.

Downey's at the intersection of Front and South streets in Philadelphia holds jazz brunches every Sunday featuring the Sonny Troy Trio.

Zanzibar Blue at 301 S. 11th St. in Philly has been the home of distinctive jazz styles for decades. From 5 to 9 p.m. Friday nights the Arpeggio Jazz Ensemble featuring Val Ray performs. Also on Friday as well as Saturday nights, the Colonel Byrd Quartet with Juanita Holiday jams at Zanzibar Blue. And Sunday brunch spotlights the Paula Breslin Trio with Zan Gardener and Don Pullen and the African/Brazilian Connection.

Campus asked to respect life

By ANN McNEARNEY
Staff Reporter

To draw attention to the issues concerning the sanctity of human life, Villanovans For Life (VFL) sponsored Respect Life Week Oct. 4-11. The week held events designed to offer information about topics often eclipsed by the college student's hectic world.

The week began with "Respect Life Sunday" on Oct. 4. Following the student liturgies, a vigil was held in the Grotto where students presented roses provided by VFL to the statue of the Blessed Mother, the patroness of the unborn.

The collections taken up at Mass that day benefitted the Nurturing Network. This agency works with college-aged women who are faced with unexpected pregnancies and must deal with the situation without the benefit of family support.

An information table was set up in the Connelly Center from Monday through Thursday providing students with facts about topics such as abortion and euthanasia.

Marie Tapie and Leah Sterling, representatives of Feminists for Life in the state of Pennsylvania, spoke about the history of pro-life feminism in a lecture on Wednesday.

> The week held events designed to offer information about topics often eclipsed by the college student's hectic world.

VFL has been an active organization recognized by Student Activities since 1974. Aside from coordinating Respect Life Week activities, VFL also publishes a newspaper titled "Villanova for Life" which informs about the pro-life happenings outside the Villanova community.

In addition, last year VFL adopted their own chapter of the Nurturing Network. The program offers pregnant students the option of a school exchange to take classes at a different university in the surrounding area, while counseling and support are still available to them.

There are approximately 150 students involved in VFL. President Jenny Schuler, a junior majoring in computer science and honors arts, was the head coordinator for the week's activities.

"The activities ... hopefully represent[ed] and [made] people more conscious of the pro-life issue on our campus," said one student.

However, another student qualified that view. "The pro-life events are good in the fact that the vigil money collected from the Masses is going to the pregnancy center. But, while the week is informative, it probably won't change the views and opinions of pro-choice advocates," a student said.

Distinctive classes offer respite

By LAUREN WURST

With mid-terms approaching, everyone is well into their courses for this semester. However, some may be finding that their classes are not all they were cracked up to be.

If you are eagerly looking ahead to next semester, there are some unique classes offered at Villanova that are refreshingly out-of-the-ordinary. You might want to consider signing up for one of them.

The Center for Peace and Justice Education offers classes such as Modern Peacemakers and American Indian Thought and Culture. In Modern Peacemakers, students closely examine Mahatma Ghandi, Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., Dorothy Day and Thomas Merton.

"We spend three weeks on each individual ... looking at their historical background, biographical information and the wisdom of each. It stretches the thinking of the students. They meet these individuals on a personal basis," said the Rev. Ray Jackson, O.S.A., who teaches the course.

Jackson will introduce a new course next semester called "Caring for the Earth." The course will give students an understanding of our changing environment.

> Villanova offers many other courses that will broaden students' horizons.

Dr. Barbara Wall, O.P., who teaches American Indian Thought and Culture, said, "The Indian philosophy and culture provides us all with a valuable way of life." Guest speakers from the Lakota, Navaho, Hopi and Iroquois tribes give presentations during the semester.

"Students learn history and philosophy but they also listen to stories, myths and music as well as observing dance traditions," said Wall. Music plays in the classroom from each of these traditions when students enter for class.

The sociology department offers Social Psychiatry and Sex Roles and Sexuality classes.

As stated in the University Bulletin, Social Psychiatry examines the "cultural and social patterns in the causation, incidence and treatment of mental health problems; emphasis upon current approaches to mental illness and the relation of mental illness to criminal, antisocial and deviant behavior."

Dr. Bernard Gallagher, who teaches the course, takes the class to Norristown State Hospital during the semester. Here students are allowed to walk around, observe and speak with the patients. Film strips and expert guest lecturers are also included in the course.

courses that will broaden students' horizons. "In taking Sex Roles and Sexuality my views on women's roles in our society were b2oadened. My mind was opened concerning the problems women have in integrating themselv%s in a male-dominated society," said Caroline Lavin, a student taking the course.

Students may also choose to take some unique classes offered at Rosemont College, such as photography, ceramics and sign language.

Students debate pros and cons of housing options

By TARA CAMPITIELLO
Staff Reporter

Be it hob-nobbing in the Quad, country-clubbing at St. Mary's Hall, enjoying the comforts of South Campus or braving the parties and daily challenges of off-campus living — these are the "lifestyles" of the students of Villanova University.

OK, maybe the chance of Robin Leach finding interest in the various lifestyles of Villanova students is slim. It would appear that Villanova students have a great interest in the advantages and disadvantages of on-campus and off-campus living because every student has definite opinions.

The values, friendships and habits which students form are influenced by the way in which they live. "On-campus, the Office of Residence Life attempts to create a sense of community in the residence halls. We want students to feel as if they have made a home for themselves. We also try to provide an academic atmosphere. Such is the reason for providing quiet hours during the week," stated Marie Schauder, assistant director for Training and Development.

The Resident Assistants (R.A.s) throughout the halls play a major part in developing this sense of community, as senior Whitney McDonough, head resident of New Female Hall, explained. "Some students only see R.A.s as the person who will write you up. However, enforcing policies is only a minor part of the job. We are trained to deal with all and any situations which may arise. Whether the situation involves a medical emergency, academic or emotional counseling or something a little less serious, such as organizing a "tuck in" with a male residence hall, we are here to help in any way we can, either personally or by offering direction to another source of help," said McDonough.

Residence hall policies do not usually seem to find favor with students, as Dave Kissane, a sophomore residing on campus, explained. "The visitation policy is a definite disadvantage of living on campus, in addition to the lack of privacy. At the same time, you can't beat the convenience of living on campus. You can roll out of bed and walk over to class, not to mention that the cafeteria is right outside the door," said Kissane.

> "Without trying to sound sexist . . .you never really realize how much you need your mom until you live on your own."
> Mike Portas

Although, for some, the cafeterias and Food Services are not considered advantages. "As a freshman, I had to buy the largest meal plan available, which was a severe waste of money. I'm lucky if I make it to eight meals a week, let alone 20, which the plan allows for," said Nicole Smith, a resident student.

Generally speaking, students agreed that the conveniences of on-campus living outweigh off-campus living. Each of the three residence areas, East, West and South campuses, hold their own pros and cons respectively.

Sheehan and Sullivan Halls offer easy access to main campus facilities and the social activity of the Quad, as well as the noise.

Residence halls on South Campus provide additional comforts such as carpeting throughout, air conditioning, telephone service to individual rooms and cable hookups. The price to be paid is a long hike to class, usually between 10 and 20 minutes.

St. Mary's Hall also provides quite a stroll for residents, but its "country club" nickname says it all. "What more could you ask for?" said junior Jon Dyer, a resident of St. Mary's. "The triples have private baths. There is a gym. Tennis courts are just outside, and our cafeteria even provides music while dining," said Dyer.

However, these on-campus conveniences seem trivial when compared to the "big picture" of off-campus housing. Obviously, living off-campus provides tremendous freedoms in addition to no more visitation policies, quiet hours or meal plan restrictions.

According to Dan Remley, assistant director of Housing Services, in 1991 66 percent of that year's sophomores chose to participate in the housing lottery for the next year. Only 85 percent of this number returned the housing preference form. This ever-dwindling number only decreased further. In the final stage, only about three-quarters of those who received housing actually returned the housing contract.

Many students attempt to take advantage of the off-campus housing listings provided by the Residence Life Office, although most students believe that the University should provide more assistance. Off-campus housing may sometimes be difficult to obtain because of the Radnor Township housing regulations and the lack of reception of students by the surrounding communities.

Straight from the home office in 201 Dougherty, where we're all abuzz over the recent graffiti scandal (quick, turn to page one for the story), come the Top 10 things not scrawled on the walls in Tolentine and the St. Augustine Center:

10. "We're here because there's beer."
9. "For a good time, call Fr. Dobbin's Funhouse, 1-800-555-PAR-T."
8. "The Dragon was here."
7. "We luv St. Augustine."
6. "Friends don't let friends . . . "
5. "We want California Medley."
4. "Clapton is God."
3. "Da Bulls, Da Bears, Dobbin."
2. "V.P. Lafferty has a nice bun."

And the No. 1 thing not defacing the hallowed walls of Villanova is:

1. "Support Sesquicentennial Spending."

Residents and off-campus students rate styles of living

Female students are often given priority over male students who apply for leases because renters often perceive female students as more likely to take care of the house and control the noise level.

Many students agreed that fraternity and sorority ties often assist in finding compatible roommates. Often housing is passed on between fraternity brothers or sorority sisters.

Beyond the seemingly limitless freedoms and socializing of off-campus life, the major difference between on- and off-campus housing comes with the extraordinary responsibilities of living on one's own.

"A car is a definite necessity ... something which I don't have," said junior Kelly McDowell. "I have to rely on my friends to give me rides to and from campus."

Maintaining a car is a definite responsibility and an added cost to off-campus students. Once one knows where one is going to move, the question becomes what is needed. Senior Sue Romano explained, "most furniture is donated from relatives and friends. Everything may not match, but if it serves its purpose, it's a gladly accepted addition."

Rent payments often include water, heat, electricity, and various other utilities.

Junior Anja Faistanic related this story. "We were without heat in our apartment, so one roommate decided to plug in a portable heater last week when the temperature began to drop. Well, by the end of the evening we were not only without heat, but also without electricity because we ended up blowing a fuse and lost power until the next day!"

Household chores are usually evenly divided. However, cleaning can often become a tense matter of "this is your mess, not mine."

Food shopping and cooking appears to be an individual's responsibility because every person's tastes and schedules are different. "Cooking for one's self is a definite advantage because you can buy the food you want and prepare it however and whenever you want. You save money by buying your own food in addition to splitting rent with roommates," said junior Mike Portas.

"Without trying to sound sexist ... you never really realize how much you need your mom until you live on your own."

of literally millions of Native Americans. Nowhere is the story of this great tragedy more clearly symbolized than that of Columbus' own interaction with the Arawak/Taino Indians," according to a description of the play.

The Center has invited staff and students of Indian heritage from the University, as well as members of the Indian community in Philadelphia to take part in the events, and Wall stressed that everyone is welcome to attend.

"Ninety million Indian people, especially from Latin America, died from conquest and diseases brought by the Conquistadors," said Wall. "There will be many festivities honoring Columbus. It is essential and necessary to honor Indian people who lived here when he arrived 500 years ago."

Dr. Barbara Wall, O.P., is a leader in the fight to reevaluate Native American stereotypes.

President explains goals for growth for University

"Villanova's character as an Augustinian university transcends ... the presence of courses, lectures and institutes devoted to Augustine's thought, desirable as these may be," he said. "It consists of certain characteristics of Augustine's thought and legacy which have become essentials of Villanova's identity, embedded in Villanova's symbols and varied forms of self-expression."

The question of Villanova's identity is very important to Dobbin. When asked about this, he stated that he believes it is fundamental to his position to "enable the University to get focused on what it wants to be."

His concept of what a University "wants to be," its identity, is rather clear. "An institution's identity is something concrete and something ultimately unique. [Villanova's] identity is who we are, have been and aspire to become."

For most university presidents this idea is translated into what he or she wants to do for the university while he/she is at the helm, but not for Dobbin. When he came into office, Dobbin had no set "plan" for Villanova.

Certainly, he had many ideas circling in his mind, but instead of restricting himself to the limits of a plan, he chose rather to test the waters and implement slowly the notions that seemed befitting. Even without an initial set of guidelines, Dobbin managed to construct an efficient system of performance and production.

One idea that Dobbin implemented when he became president was to minimize the bureaucratic red tape that characterizes any institution. He wanted a "less hierarchical system" of doing things.

Dobbin recognizes that there is a communication problem within the administrative strata of the University, and he believes that Villanova can serve the students "better for less." That is why he has employed the directives of a Total Quality Management Program.

This program empowers those who work directly with the students to make more decisions and help to involve the higher administration as well. It will serve to empower faculty and students, but also to make the administration more approachable to everyone. The consolidation of certain offices and positions has helped to assist in the bureaucratic "lift-off" that Villanova is espousing.

Finally, Dobbin envisions the administration working within the parameters of a team-work strategy. This will add input from many sources and promote a more diversified administration. All of this in the end will hopefully enable the University and the students to function within a familiar and productive environment.

> To understand him fully, we must venture behind the cloak and look at the man behind the collar.

Having been president for four years, Dobbin has had the opportunity to assimilate his thoughts on the identity of Villanova into everyday life. A set of goals, rather than a plan, has emerged and the results look promising.

Already, Villanova has seen the construction of the St. Augustine Center for the Liberal Arts. Dobbin hopes the Center will "foster the Catholic identity of Villanova" while at the same time be a site where "a lot of conversation takes place."

There are plans as well for next fall to have a University-wide telephone system installed in which each student will have his or her own telephone. This should serve to facilitate campus life because the students will pay the school instead of dealing with the hassle of Bell of Pennsylvania.

Also, as is well known, there are plans for new apartment-like dormitory space behind St. Mary's Hall. This will enable the University to house more students and cut down on problems with off-campus housing.

Finally, Villanova, in conjunction with Pennsylvania Department of Transportation (PenDOT), has decided to build an underground pedestrian walkway across Lancaster Avenue linking South Campus with Main Campus. Dobbin said that it will hopefully keep crossing problems for students to a minimum.

These are just three of the things Dobbin and the University will be instituting to enhance the campus life and services for Villanova students.

One final thing that has occupied much of Dobbin's time is the augmentation of the University's endowment fund. Each year his efforts have been steadily adding to this fund. Villanova is currently involved in the Capital Campaign.

With an increase in endowment, the University has more opportunities to enhance student life by offering more money for financial aid and scholarships and to sharpen Villanova's graduate programs.

The emphasis is always to better the undergraduate atmosphere, and through an increased endowment more resources will become available for the students, hence a better atmosphere for education.

Dobbin is an extremely intelligent, eloquent and practical person. He has served Villanova well in his four years and his enthusiasm for the future is encouraging. The black garb and white collar do not serve as something intimidating or obscure.

It is important, though, that the Villanova community recognize Dobbin as a man dedicated to the principles and standards that have made Villanova what it is today. If you have any doubts, just stop by his office and ask him. He'd be glad to take the time to prove it.

Spin Doctors knock on the door of success

By AARON NICODEMUS
Entertainment Editor

Success brings many things: money, fame, new-found friends, old friends asking for money. For bands, it means moving up from bars and clubs to a concert stage. Many groups play to local crowds for years until one song finds its way to national popularity. The Spin Doctors rode that high wave of new-found success to a sold-out crowd at the Tower Theatre Oct. 3.

Looking a little like a blinking prisoner just let into the sunlight, the Spin Doctors ambled onto the stage. Their first set consisted of short recognizable bursts of songs like "Forty or Fifty" from their Pocket Full of Kryptonite album, followed by long jams. These first musical improvisations dragged at points, a characteristic which fortunately did not carry into the second set. The one bright spot was the upbeat song, "What Time Is It?"

In their second set, the Spin Doctors raised their performance level and kept the crowd on its feet. Popular ditties like "Little Miss Can't Be Wrong" and "Two Princes" satisfied the new fans, while mixing several cuts from their first album, Up for Grabs ... Live EP. "Jimmy Olsens Blues," the lead song of Kryptonite, was the peak of the show. Also a real crowd-pleaser was "House," in which vocalist Christopher Barron led each side of the audience into a different part of the chorus, and then had the band perform the harmony changes while he improvised. It was classic audience participation at its best.

> The Spin Doctors have entered a new realm.

The Spin Doctors performed to a full Tower Theatre Oct. 3.

Throughout the show, Barron railed the media between songs and its presentation of events: "The same people that are covering the wars are causing the wars, the same people who give us these facts are the ones twisting them." Barron also tried a little poetry, as he said, "Beauty is supposedly in the eye of the beholder, but those magazines tell you what's beautiful ... if you're loved by someone, in their eyes you're beautiful, and that's what counts.

While Barron was providing the tempo to the show, guitarist Eric Shenkman expertly worked with his instrument, especially in the second set. His driving solos and warm melodies pulled the show together.

Near the end of the show, Barron earnestly thanked the crowd. It appeared that hard work and dedication, plus a throng of loyal listeners, put the Spin Doctors in a new realm. While they had performed for years in small club settings (including many along the Main Line) it appears that those days are over. The band still needs to polish its act in bigger venues, including a few sound problems and a weak encore. The step had been made, however, and for the emerging Spin Doctors, there is no turning back.

Daltrey sticks to mainstream pop for fun

By JOHN KAZMIERCZAK
Staff Reporter

Roger Daltrey's new album, Rocks In The Head, is both nonconformist and enigmatic. In today's world of socially aware music, the album features cheerful, upbeat songs. The noncontroversial, non-mystical, nonincoherent lyrics make absolutely no social commentaries and are best described as middle-of-the-road pop. Yet despite these drawbacks (and partially because of them) it is extremely enjoyable listening.

Daltrey, who performas lead vocals and guitar, rounds out his band with Gerard McMahon on guitars and keyboard, Ricky Byrd on lead guitar and David Katz playing keyboards. Bassist Shaun Solomon and percussionists Tommy Price and Jody Linscott provide ample and competent backup. The most unconventional aspect of this arrangement is the heavy reliance Daltrey has on McMahon and Byrd for background vocals in no less than four of the 11 tracks.

The album's centerpiece is unquestionably "Days Of Light," the epitome of the group's offerings, both stylistically and in performance. It is essentially a song about one of the less commonly idealized goals of the modern worker; making it to quitting time on Friday and the opportunity for 48 hours of fun, relaxation and love. "Days Of Light" is primarily dominated by Daltrey's straightforward, slick vocals, backed by Solomon and Linscott's bass and drums arrangement. It is optimistic, bordering on obnoxiously cheerful, the type of song you find yourself humming for the rest of the day.

Although Daltrey and his band never really take any major risks stylistically, they do manage to produce some interesting and clever permutations of their style, with each member receiving a chance to highlight his talents. From the grainy, bluesy vocals in "Times Change" to Byrd's artful, if not particularly original guitar hooks in "You Can't Call It Love" and "Love Is" to an interesting flamenco guitar solo in "Mirror Mirror," the album manages to be just diverse enough to hold the listener's attention.

This is not the best available example of Daltrey's depth and talent (for such an example, listen to "Baba O'Riley" or "Squeeze Box" by The Who) but that's not really the point: it never tries to come off as deep or particularly artsy. Rocks In The Head's lack of pretension and devotion to lighthearted fun are its biggest two assets. A friend of mine had to only listen to one song before he returned his verdict: "Fluff." He is probably correct, but for those looking for a clean, uncomplicated, non-self-absorbed album, take a listen — you'll find it refreshing.

Basehead jams alternative rap on debut

By THOM ARNO and MARK McCREARY
Staff Reporters

You should hunt for Basehead's debut disc, Play With Toys, at all costs. But, to see Basehead live, you should resort to following the seven deadly sins, if necessary. Michael Ivey, brainchild behind the four-man group, grew up with drummer Brian Hendrix in Pittsburgh, Pa. In 1987, Ivey headed to Howard University and secretly began the groundwork that would become his stellar debut. There he met up with guitarist Keith Lofton and bassist Bill Conway. Together, with Hendrix on drums, Basehead was born.

In 1991, a small independent label, Emigre, heard the big sound Ivey had created and signed them immediately. Three thousand copies of the album were circulated, then Imago, a larger "indie" label, netted the group and reissued the album. Pulse! magazine may have been the first media source to spread Basehead's name. Then, larger magazines such as Spin and Rolling Stone featured the group in their respective new music previews. And if there is any band who can try to define "new music," it is Basehead.

Play With Toys succeeds because it does not fit any contemporary genre, whether it be "alternative rap" or otherwise. The album wakes up to a lazy, country-tinged rendition of James Brown's "Get Up I Feel Like Being A Sex Machine," and slips into the first single, "2000 BC." This is a celebration of the body's pleasures. Whistling scratches cover Ivey's drawl, while a sparse hip-hop drum beat pulses in the background. Ivey's lax utterings will mellow you out, and his arrangements are a musical Quaalude. "Brand New Day" at first sounds like a depressing ditty about a broken relationship. Ivey laments to his friends about having to go through "silly dates and silly dames." He soon realizes "I can get my paycheck and still have money," and all is not lost.

> Ivey and his bandmates let their incredible creativity guide them.

Other songs stick to the aforementioned formula, and range from serious social commentary to love songs about beer. On "Better Days," Ivey talks about life on Washington, D.C.'s mean streets. "Clair and Cliff Huxtable, you know they never lived around here." It is the new sound that has brought Basehead nationwide critical acclaim and interested folks into the venues on their U.S. tour.

Basehead live and Basehead on vinyl is not the same band. Sometimes, they appear live as Jethro and the Graham Crackers, their alter ego. Welp, Jethro and his cohorts dragged themselves into JC Dobbs in Philadelphia this past Saturday night and stoned a crowd of curious onlookers. By the end of the night, Basehead had about 150 new fans. In a live setting, Ivey speeds up the beat and stuffs it until it is "phat, phunky and nice." His songs still convey the same meaning, but instead of sitting down, fans groove around and pass themselves over the hands of the crowd.

New fans were captivated by covers of The Doors' "Love Me Two Times" (which Ivey sang through a megaphone) and The Police's "Driven To Tears." The band energized their standbys, like "Ode to my Favorite Beer," "Not Over You," and "Play With Toys." Ivey's spirited commentary concerning black paranoia rang through on a new song "Kiss My Black ...," as did his opinions on materialism in "Do You Wanna ... or What?" The hour-plus set was as it should be, without a gameplan and contrived formula. Ivey and his bandmates let their incredible creativity and vision guide them, and spent ample time talking with the audience. They all seemed interested in getting the all-age crowd into the show, and drawing their attention to the fact that there were 12-year-olds, in a bar, on a Saturday night.

A quick interview with the band after the show furthered explicated the fact that Basehead is a band with four distinct members who share a genuine interest in their music and fans. A new album, You're Not in Kansas Anymore, is geared for a late March release. Ivey promised: "It'll be more like the live show, you know, funkier." If Basehead passed you by this first time, get into them now so you can tell all your wanna-be friends you were into them back in the old days.

SET LIST: "Ode to my Favorite Beer," "Kiss my Black A," "Evening News," "Brand New Day," "I Try," "Play With Toys," "Not Over You," "I Need a Joint," "The Lie," "Driven to Tears," "Do You Wanna F or What?" "Bill's Song," "Love Me Two Times" and "2000 BC."

'Sarafina' encourages South African pride

By JULIE BANE
Staff Reporter

"Sarafina!" stars Whoopie Goldberg and Leleti Khumalo and has a powerful message. It bases its story on the struggle of school children in Soweto, South Africa, challenged by a teacher to dream of freedom and take pride in their heritage.

Goldberg plays Mary Masembuko, a teacher who is an inspiration to the students and especially to Sarafina, played by Khumalo. Mary tries, through her history lessons, to give her students a sense of their heritage.

Her teaching methods do not correspond with the syllabus approved by the government. They object to her teaching and they remove her from her classroom, but not before she has had a serious affect on her students.

The students protest the removal of their teacher. They are quickly subdued by the army, who, although most of the children are running away, begin to shoot at them.

This violence does not deter the students from further demonstrations and riots against the white government. These scenes are jolting reminders of the tension and injustice that exists now in South Africa.

'Sarafina!' has a few strong moments and a powerful message.

One other key aspect of the film, besides the protests, is the music. Throughout the movie, the students sing hymns praising God, freedom, and Nelson Mandela. The music keeps their spirits alive while they are beaten and tortured. It gives them strength to pursue their cause and gives meaning to their struggle.

After surviving injustice in prison, Sarafina goes to her mother for comfort. She has rejected her mother for not actively participating in the fight for freedom. She realizes though, that her mother works for a personal goal, not a national one. She is still a strong woman, even though she is not fighting in the streets.

Sarafina realizes by remembering the words of her teacher and through her mother's influence, that violence is not the necessary road to freedom. Although her struggle and that of her country is not finished, she can approach it with a more open mind. Her fight will not be filled so much with hate for the present, rather love of the future and possible freedom.

"Sarafina!" has a few strong moments and a powerful message. Its characters find strength in their music and in each other.

The film, however, has difficulty relaying its message and the characters' struggle is only adequately supported by a few scenes. It doesn't capture the spirit of the people, but only demonstrates different aspects of their lives.

The movie holds its audience with the violence and injustice of the riot scenes, but at times these scenes seem almost jumbled together to fill space. The movie starts well and has no trouble showing the influence their teacher has over the students, but goes downhill from there.

It is a decent movie, but it does not have the impact it could. Wait until it comes out on video.

Goldberg and Khumalo are teacher and student, fighting against oppression.

Smiths collect classics led by Morrissey

By MAURA RURAK
Assistant Entertainment Editor

The Smiths I Best ... collects some of the finest work done during the days of the Smiths. Drawing on tracks laid during the early to mid '80s, the talents of writing team Morrissey and Johnny Marr are displayed. Staying true to their own unique sound, The Smiths gained a cult following and underground fame with songs such as "Girlfriend In A Coma" (1987), "How Soon Is Now?" (1984), "Some Girls Are Bigger Than Others" (1986) and "This Charming Man" (1983), all of which are included on this compilation.

The unmistakable melodies of lead singer Morrissey capture the listener and draw him into The Smith's introspective world. The smooth, soft sounds combined with a pulsing rhythm became the backbone of the group and it is this particular sound that thrust The Smiths onto college radio and the underground scene.

This particular sound thrust The Smiths onto college radio and the underground scene.

Not a group for recognition from the establishment, The Smiths probably gained the most commercial fame for "Please, Please, Please, Let Me Get What I Want," which was included in the John Hughes film "Pretty In Pink." Other than that, the group found their success in other musical areas. The departure of front man Morrissey in the late '80s brought the creation process to an end. Although a few attempts were made to recapture the spirit and insight of Morrissey, the attempts failed and The Smiths disappeared.

The Smiths I Best ... places favorite Smiths tracks on one album. "Half A Person," "Rubber Ring," "Stop If You Think You've Heard This One Before," and "Hand In Glove" are classics that make the collection complete. Long-time Smiths fans are able to hear sounds resembling those found on Morrissey's solo projects. However, for those who spent their rebellious youth listening to the reflective thoughts of The Smiths, this compilation must be added their personal collection. The Smiths II ... Best will be following soon with hits such as "Shakespeare's Sister," "Bigmouth Strikes Again," "Reel Around The Fountain" and "Ask."

Sinead crosses the line

By AARON NICODEMUS
Entertainment Editor

The line must be drawn. I am all for the artistic freedom of anyone who performs in the entertainment business. This includes being able to swear, dance naked, and howl about global injustices. But this week, Sinead O'Connor and Madonna crossed the line of political or social commentary into the realm of sensationalism, merely for shock value. Both actions were grossly commercial and served no purpose other than to support one fledgling career and enhance another.

Let us begin with that wild Irish banshee, Sinead. While performing her new song "War" on Saturday Night Live Oct. 3, O'Connor produced a picture of the Pope and proceeded to tear it apart. She claimed that it was in order to "destroy all things evil." Actually, it was a thinly veiled attempt to promote her new album (a collection of cover songs) and bring her name back into the spotlight. Ripping up the Pope did not seem to enhance her weak album or make any real statement, but will certainly get her some free press.

Madonna released her new video, "Erotica," at midnight Oct. 2 on MTV. To little surprise, the video provided an in-depth look at whips, chains and sadomasochism. Some might argue that her previous provocative effort, "Justify My Love," pushed the bounds of censorship and provided more freedom for other artists. Maybe so. Did "Erotica" do more of the same? Or are they both just promotional ploys? Madonna can chalk up "Erotica" as another successful attempt to sell herself to the American people, while pulling in a tidy profit.

It is not the content of Sinead's action or Madonna's video which infuriates me. My concern is: what's the point? Plenty of other artists have promoted equally shocking material, but for some reason, I was always able to find valid underlying criticism or commentary. Whether or not everyone agreed with it was irrelevant; the topic, whether it happened to be censorship, police brutality, apartheid or cruelty to animals, was raised for discussion. That made the outburst palatable.

But in both cases, the action was performed with a sole purpose: money. What O'Connor and Madonna have done is not standing up for what they believe in; it is pure self-promotion. Artistic expression is one thing, while political commentary is another. Their words ring hollow in light of their motivation. My theory is, if you want to sell yourself, be my guest, but don't try to sound politically driven, too. The message, if there actually is one, fails to impact its audience and leaves the performer's image shaken. In terms of creating controversy (and profit), however, both these girls have got some real talent.

FAST FORWARD: In the spirit of Columbus Day, Hollywood has been actively searching for just the right formula for a hit. "Christopher Columbus: The Discovery" bombed horribly at the box office, despite a $5 million cameo by Marlon Brando.

The latest in the line of holiday films is "1492: Conquest of Paradise." Starring Gerard Depardieu as Christopher Columbus, the film has the potential to capture the true spirit of the times. Instead of focusing primarily on Columbus and his trip, the film will combine viewpoints of doubting Europeans, frightened Indians and reckless pirates as well as those of Columbus and his crew. "1492" is scheduled to appear soon.

Did Hollywood invade the "Cliffs' Notes" section of the local Beverly Hills bookstore? First there was Cooper's "Last of the Mohicans," an adaptation of the classic novel that is currently earning solid reviews. Coming soon is "Of Mice and Men," a remake of an earlier version and based on John Steinbeck's work. The film stars Gary Sinise as George and John Malkovich as Lenny in this tumbleweed tale about two roaming ranch hands, set during the 1930s. "Of Mice and Men" is slated to open later this month.

REWIND: Arguably the season's most controversial film, "Basic Instinct" will be released on video Oct. 14. Starring Michael Douglas and Sharon Stone in a psychotic web of intrigue and ice picks, the real draw of this movie is sex. Stone's now legendary leg-crossing during interrogation can be easily overanalyzed by freeze-frame technology. While the plot is weak and Stone is lousy in her deep-voiced vixen mode, "Basic Instinct" still makes for enjoyable, albeit pulpy, entertainment. Plus you get to see the two stars naked for a good half hour of film.

Melon creates hybrid mix

By COLEEN KENIREY
Assistant Entertainment Editor

The Cutting Edge

Blind Melon is a band that verifies the theory that looks are deceiving. Although they look like the heirs to the Metallica throne and lead singer Shannon Hoon performed back-up duties on Guns n' Roses' Use Your Illusion I and II, their sound is not heavy metal or hard rock. Instead they produce a homespun hybrid similar to a cross between Jane's Addiction and The Black Crowes. Critics also have made the comparison to Jane's, and, although they usually tend to pigeonhole artists, Hoon's voice in "Tones of Home" actually does parallel that of Perry Farrell. There are overlapping vocals and also a brief guitar chaos near the end of the track similar to techniques used in Jane's songs. This comparison can, however, only be made in a few instances, and Blind Melon does expand in many different original directions.

"Soak the Skin" is probably the best Melon tune, although not the only contender. "Soak" is suggestive, but not imitative, of Pearl Jam's style, possibly because the album was produced by Rick Parashar, who was also responsible for Ten. The Blind Melon tracks were recorded in Seattle, but differ greatly from the area's grunge, possibly due to the band members' backgrounds. Having emerged from small-town America and having written the album's material in North Carolina, these musicians drench their songs with a natural and earthy simplicity.

Hometown influences, while adding these qualities to Blind Melon's music, also contribute restlessness to some lyrics: "What do you think they would say/ If I stood up and walked away/ Nobody here really understands me/ And so I'll wave goodbye." Escapism is a vein which also runs through "I Wonder" as Hoon sings, "Hey I'd like to daze away to a place no one has known/ In a state of mind I could call mine, that only I could own." "Change" maintains a positive mood with the hopeful words "When your deepest thoughts are broken, keep on dreamin' boy ... When life is hard, you have to change." Lyrically, this album is a juxtaposition of images which synthesizes the carefree mood of "Sleepyhouse" with the feeling of longing in "No Rain."

Blind Melon also adds an exotic touch to certain tracks. "Sleepyhouse" features an Indian stringed instrument called a sarangi, which sounds like a Martian kazoo. A Southern element of harmonica and acoustic guitar embellishes "Drive." In "Holyman," there are the faint echoes of bongos and tambourines and guitarists Christopher Thorn and Rogers Stevens strum with Spanish-style flair. There is also a short but interesting guitar segment in the middle of "I Wonder" which must be a tribute to The Doors. With the guitar work at the onset of "Seed in a Tree" it almost seems as if the Red Hot Chili Peppers' "Suck My Kiss" is about to begin. Thus, these songs contain traces of other musical styles, but as a whole Blind Melon presents a fresh, creative perspective.

Another new release which attempts to be clever and daring but fails miserably is Adam 'n' Eve by Gavin Friday. Friday is from Dublin, Ireland, which gives him poetic potential, but he does not live up to the storytelling tradition of his Irish heritage. Instead he attempts to inject American pop culture into over-processed music. He appears to have grabbed onto the early '80s new wave sound and twisted it so that it is reminiscent of the background music of a tacky '70s foreign film. In "Falling Off the Edge of the World," Friday puts a supposedly humorous twist on American society with references to "Charlie Darwin," "Georgie B.," Stormin Norman, Ovaltine and the "Candy Man, Candy Man can ..."

Every song reverberates with ooh's, la's or doo doo's. Friday tries to sound passionate by employing a scratchy and husky deep-throat singing voice, even trying a poor Lou Reed imitation on one song, but he only manages to sound as if he needs a drink of water. Unfortunately, Friday does not excel at songwriting either. Words seem to be chosen simply for their rhyming value such as in "Melancholy Baby" when he sings, "Zing zing a zang go the strings of my heart/ Cling cling a clang I'll never let you part." In fact, the lyrics are probably even worse than the annoying repetition of apple-and-tree imagery in the cover art.

Kravitz writes material for Parisian icon

By DANIELLE SANTUCCI
Staff Reporter

Vanessa Paradis, Parisian pop icon, makes her self-titled, English-language debut album with a sultry voice and '70s sound, courtesy of writer and producer Lenny Kravitz.

This album is a tentative first step for a debut. Paradis is testing different styles of music to pinpoint her own. From the Motown sound of "Be My Baby," to the Velvet Underground cover "Waiting for the Man," to the powerful "Silver and Gold," Paradis displays a diverse style.

Paradis' voice brings the lyrics of Lenny Kravitz alive in a unique light. "How many children must die/How many rivers run dry/ How many angels must cry/For silver and gold," asks how long our earth can withstand the abuse from humans in the song "Silver and Gold."

Vanessa Paradis' career began five years ago at the age of 14. Her platinum French single "Joe le Taxi" launched her European career. In 1989 she was offered the lead role in the feature film "Noce Blanche." Her portrayal as a troubled teenager earned her a Cesar (French Oscar).

> Paradis' voice brings the lyrics of Lenny Kravitz alive in a unique light.

Her career was further confirmed this year when the avante-guard image maker, Jean-Paul Groude, built his television commercial for Chanel perfume around her.

Kravitz, whose previous outside production credit was Madonna's "Justify My Love," wrote and produced Paradis' debut album. The project proved educational to both performers. Kravitz got to do things he does not do on his own albums, and Paradis learned to sing in a different language.

Upon arriving in the United States, Paradis was overwhelmed by her first recording session on foreign shores, but she triumphed and assimilated to her new environment.

The Waterfront studio in Hoboken, N.J., is where Paradis' debut for Polydor Records took place. Her team-up with Kravitz produced this stylish soulful album that will not only impress Paradis' European following, but first-time listeners in the United States as well. The two found common ground, and created a likable album. It may not top the charts, but is definitely worth listening to.

Vanessa Paradis will be putting a band together for her stage debut early next year.

French singer Vanessa Paradis debuts with her first English album.

Dennis' ballads ring true

By ERIC CHEUNG
Staff Reporter

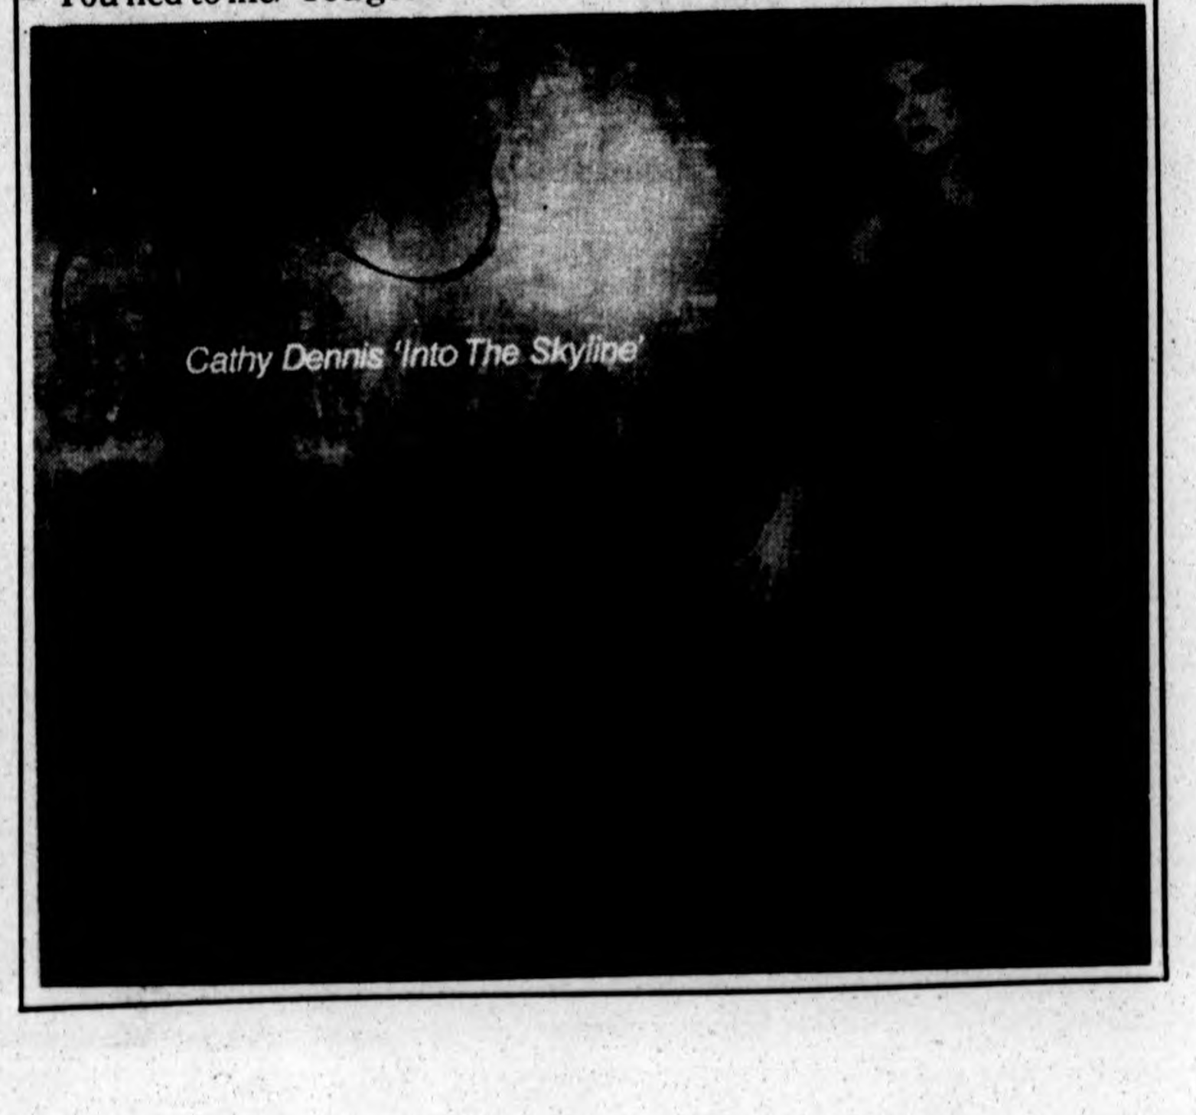
English dance diva, Cathy Dennis, first broke through the music scene as a member of the group D-Mob. Since then she has made a name for herself in the pop world with tunes like "Just Another Dream," "Touch Me (All Night Long)," and "Too Many Walls." Now after a year leave of absence she returns with a new album, Into The Skyline, a more mature voice, and a new look (long-haired and lovely). It would seem she stands on the brink of stardom.

Unfortunately this will not be the album to push her over the top. As one of many female vocalists with over-polished production and underwhelming vocals, Cathy Dennis is hard-pressed to make herself noticeably different from the rest. Her saving grace remains her faithfulness to dance music. Rather than making a full crossover to Top 40 appeal, she decides to wisely stick with the formula that made her a splash.

This is not to say that Skyline is an unworthy sophmoric effort. Indeed Dennis pushes her boundaries a bit by introducing a more hip-hop sound which is the dominant force today. The first single, "You Lied To Me," already enjoys a reign in the top 40 with its hard-edge beats and catchy lyrics. "You got another lover/ You lied to me/ You got another love/ So know I'm free." Of course if you like that one, there is plenty more like it.

For most of the time, Dennis collaborates with Shep Pettibone (of Madonna fame). The good news is that the music is great and the rhythms are irresistable, but the bad news is that Dennis' voice is pushed to the background. Despite noticeable improvement, she still is hardly a commanding singer in any sense of the term. Salvation comes through her writing abilities. Seventies soul seems to have a big influence on her music. Never is this more apparent then with the soothing "Being With You." What a refreshing relief from all these hard-core house/hip-hop songs.

However, it is Dennis' ballads (though few and far between) that are the real gems in this album. One of them, "Our True Emotions," is a pretty melody in its own right, although it pales in comparison to "Moments of Love." In this lush piece, complete with an orchestra, Cathy takes advantage of her not-so-well endowed pines. In fact, her whispy voice adds a hauntingly memorable element in the tune, "When I look back/ over time/ all the million days in my life/ I'll remember the moments of love." The album is worth a listen to just for that one track and fortunately there are a few other decent songs to reward the effort.



Hedges arrives at T.L.A.

By CAROLYN POPPE
Staff Reporter

Michael Hedges' guitar stylings will headline South Street's Theatre of the Living Arts (TLA), Oct. 14. The artist has recorded under the Windham Hill label on his past records and describes his style as "acoustic thrash" and "heavy metal" music. His unique sound offers a great experience for his listeners.

Hedges appears solo this time, having just completed his tour this summer as the opening performer for Crosby, Stills and Nash. CSN helped Hedges with the track "I Carry Your Heart" on his most recent album Taproot, harmonizing with him to create a beautifully constructed track.

Hedges is a favorite for his instrumental interpretations of known tunes. On his album Aerial Boundaries, he alters Neil Young's imagery-ridden "After the Gold Rush" into a flowing lyrical guitar piece. And he surprisingly transforms Prince's "Love Bazaar" into a charming conclusion for his Live on a Double Planet.

His 1990 release Taproot goes out on a limb. He interprets the natural world with the sounds of a very early American culture. Using flutes, harped guitar, whistles, clarinets, a little saxophone and a wide array of other complimentary instruments, Hedges suggests a "savage myth" in the imagery he creates.

Hedges entertains, amuses and amazes his audience when on-stage. He breaks free from those peaceful, somewhat dull performances many solo guitarists give. Instead, Hedges rocks his acoustic guitar — slapping the strings, beating the frame of his guitar off-beat. Though playing is his primal talent, Hedges sometimes sings with his surprisingly enchanting voice. He also introduces the audience to "stomping," when he employs his feet to achieve all sounds that a single musician with a guitar possibly can. The result is an energetic performance.

Hedges jokes with the audience, sometimes mocking current "Top 40" songs with his own version of them. A captivating evening with him keeps audiences coming back for more.

Hedges taps into a wide range of sounds with his innovative guitar work. And it has to be seen to be believed. Don't miss this explosive concert.

Tennis improves to 14-6

By CATHERINE C. GRAHAM
Staff Reporter

After playing eight days in a row, the Villanova women's tennis team (14-6) emerged with a 7-1 mark this past week. The highlight of these matches was Head Coach Dr. Robert Langran's 300th women's tennis victory Sept. 30, a 9-0 shutout against LaSalle. With 623 wins, Langran has the most career victories of any coach in 'Nova athletic history.

The Cats started play last Tuesday, Sept. 29, by defeating West Chester, 6-3. 'Nova roared off to a 5-1 lead after the singles matches, including a 6-2, 6-0 win at No. 1 singles by Carolyn Daley and a 6-0, 6-0 win at No. 2 singles by Kelly Barnes. The following day, the team won all of its matches in straight sets against LaSalle in Philadelphia. No. 6 singles Amy Santaniello scored a 6-0, 6-0 win.

On the afternoon of Oct. 1, the Cats played Lehigh in a close match, losing 5-4. The two teams tied singles play with 'Nova winning No. 1 doubles before dropping the last team doubles and, in turn, the match.

'Nova came back with a good win over Fordham in New York Oct. 2 with Daley and Barnes leading the charge. Daley won a tight three-set match 5-7, 7-5, 7-5 while Barnes won a close tiebreaker in the first set (12-10) before streaking to a 6-1 win in the second set. The No. 3 doubles team of Stephanie Kirchner and Jessica Pagana won its contest in a third-set tiebreaker 11-9. The team went on to win 6-2.

The Cats returned home to the St. Mary's courts to play Franklin and Marshall Saturday, Oct. 3. "This is a hard match for the team. F & M is the national powerhouse of Division III," said Langran, before the Cats took the courts.

With 623 wins, Langran has the most career victories of any coach in 'Nova athletic history.

'Nova proved to be stronger than their highly-touted opponents, soundly defeating Franklin and Marshall 7-2. Daley won another three-set match at No. 1 singles while Barnes cruised to a 6-0, 6-1 victory at second singles. The duo teamed up to win at No. 1 doubles 6-2, 6-0. 'Nova finished the weekend with a 7-2 victory over New York University. All six singles players won in straight sets.

"Today was a nice relaxing match for me," said Daley after playing two three-set matches in a row.

"It was a good match to ready the team for tomorrow," said No. 5 singles player Julie Homicz, a 6-1, 6-0 winner.

In the following match, the Cats proved themselves more than prepared for Drexel University, winning 7-2. Five of the six singles players won in straight sets and three of the four doubles teams won as well. In their final match of the regular season, the Cats beat Lafayette to improve their record to 14-6.

Daley finished up the season at 17-2 while Barnes recorded an 18-1 mark. The two comprised an unstoppable No. 1 doubles team, finishing the season with a perfect 10-0 record.

This weekend, the top nine players travel to Seton Hall University for the Big East Conference Championships. Of the ten schools competing, Miami, Syracuse and Boston College are the toughest teams in the field. The Cats are looking to improve upon last season's fifth place finish.

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Chrissy Thomas

This week the Villanovan recognizes Chrissy Thomas of the field hockey team. Thomas, a sophomore goalie, has shut out five consecutive 'Nova opponents. She registered 12 saves in each of the Cats' victories last week against St. Joseph's (1-0) and La Salle (2-0), and helped raise the team's record to 8-4.

Thomas has gone 8-3 this season between the pipes with a 1.1 goals-against average and a .89 save percentage. She was a second-team All-Regional in her rookie season last year, playing every minute en route to a 9-9-1 record.

Golf finishes ninth

By LESLIE KRAMER
Staff Reporter

The Villanova golf team managed to finish ninth among 15 East Coast schools at last weekend's Black Knight Fall Invitational Golf Tournament in West Point, N.Y. Leading the way for 'Nova was Jason Cordes, a junior from Australia, who ranked fifth individually. He finished three strokes behind the winner. Senior Cris Cox placed 20th and sophomore Chad Wasserman was 42nd.

Wasserman, Cordes and Cox were also low scorers for the Wildcats Sept. 26-27 in the Big East Championships at Avenal Country Club in Potomac, Md. Here, Villanova placed sixth out of seven while Seton Hall beat out Connecticut and Providence for first place.

VILLANOVA 1992-1993 STUDENT SEASON BASKETBALL TICKET LOTTERY APPLICATION

For the third year, Villanova University's student season basketball tickets will be sold by a lottery method. The lottery application appears below, and is the only valid application for student season tickets.

"There are 1,844 tickets printed for the student section, and with the exception of tickets used by the band and recruiting, all of those tickets will go into the lottery," explained Villanova Athletic Director Dr. Ted Aceto.

Student season tickets are for sale at $115. This package includes 13 duPont Pavilion games and all four games scheduled for the Spectrum in Philadelphia.

Students wishing to purchase basketball season tickets must fill out the application in full. A self-addressed, stamped envelope must accompany all orders, and the full application must be returned to the Athletic Ticket Office in the Nevin Field House by Monday, Nov. 2, 1992. The actual lottery process will take place on Saturday, Nov. 7, 1992. All applications from seniors and graduate students will go into one computer file, all applications from juniors into another, and so on. Each class will be treated equally.

Once the applications are entered into a computer, the computer will randomly select the recipients of the 1992-93 men's basketball season tickets. Notification of selection will come via the applicant's self addressed, stamped envelope. A coupon sent to the applicant will signify that the tickets are being held for them; if the applicant's check is returned, they were not selected to receive tickets.

The actual tickets can be picked up at the Field House Ticket Office. You must bring your notification coupon, along with a valid Villanova identification card.

Soccer struggles at No.9 St. John's Redmen

By MICHEL DAVIES
Staff Reporter

With the loss of senior Kenny Santos the week before at Pittsburgh, it was evident that the Cats (5-3-1) were going to have to play near perfection if they planned on beating St. John's, the ninth-ranked team in the country.

From the outset, it was obvious the Redmen had no ideas of being upset. Sophomore standout Huey Ferguson was all over the field for St. John's, displaying why he was the team's top goal scorer and overall point leader last season. Ferguson and the rest of his team refused to let 'Nova find its game, and midway into the first half, the Redmen scored.

'Nova had been unable to mount a real offensive threat, and it seemed as if it was only a matter of time until St. John's put the ball into the net. A foul was called on the Cats just five feet in front of the 'Nova goal, leaving St. John's with a great chance to score. The Cats mounted a wall in front of their goal to prevent the shot, but it ended up hindering freshman goalie Ziggy Zeppos. The ball caromed off the side of one of the 'Nova players and Zeppos never got a good look at it. The ball went into the net, and the Cats went into the half down 1-0.

Realizing that 'Nova was losing the battle at midfield, Head Coach Larry Sullivan put freshman Bill Reid into the game. The defenseman, known for his speed, was placed at the striker position, and was told to run down every ball he could.

"Coach just told Bill to use his quickness, and go after the ball. We just hoped his speed would be able to energize the offense," said freshman walk-on Tim Andersen.

Unfortunately, the Cats never got into any type of offensive groove. The Redmen scored just five minutes into the half with a shot from nearly midfield.

Though down 2-0, the Wildcats kept fighting. Joe Roy made numerous runs at goal, often faking out three defenders, only to have his shots stopped by the Redmen keeper. It was also difficult for Roy and the offense to get consistent opportunities.

"The ball was down at our end of the field so much, it made it difficult for the offense to get in synch. It also put a lot more pressure on them," said Anderson.

Toward the end of the second half, the Redmen came up with their third and final score. Ferguson received the ball at the goal box on a long, bouncing pass from midfield. Ferguson did not even bother settling the ball. Instead, he chose to take the ball on the fly, and then went on to drill it into the top right of the net.

Losing to St. John's and Pittsburgh back-to-back could be discouraging for the Cats, but with Syracuse on the schedule later this week, no letdown is possible if 'Nova plans to reach the Big East Tournament in November.

Rugby opens with impressive 24-10 win over Drexel

By PETER SANDS
Staff Reporter

The Villanova rugby team officially kicked off its season Oct. 3 with an impressive 24-10 victory over Drexel University. Playing on the new field behind duPont Pavillon, the team was determined to establish a winning tradition.

Leading the way behind the tenacious play of the forwards was scrum captain Tony Nashawaty, who scored all three of the team's tries. Nashawaty was able to capitalize on the aggressive play of Rob Colligan, Gary Corlin, Mike O'Donnell, Dave Asker, Adam Pasicka and Chris Friesenburg.

"The key to our victory was the play of the pack and the hard-nosed running of Joe Rexroue and wing captain Bill Biscone, who played with total disregard for their bodies," said Nashawaty.

Nailing the proverbial coffin shut was junior Kevin Braz. Braz cashed in on all three conversions as well as a 52-yard penalty kick.

Complementing the A-side victory was 'Nova's B-side win over the Drexel B's.

The rugby team will be in action tomorrow in a home game against St. Joe's at 1 p.m.

Cats fall at UConn

By MICHAEL MARANO
Staff Reporter

The Villanova volleyball team suffered two conference defeats at the hands of Seton Hall and Connecticut en route to a 1-3 record for the week. The two conference losses came in the wake of the Cats' win versus Pitt last week.

The Cats lost to Seton Hall Sept. 30 at Jake Nevin Field House in a four game match (17-15, 15-11, 14-16, 15-9). Junior Becky Kulbago led the Cats with 17 kills, while seniors Vicky Dispenza had 44 assists. Senior Pam Clifford and sophomore Mara Austrins each contributed 13 kills in a losing effort.

The Cats travelled to Connecticut for the Huskie Invitational Tournament Oct. 2. 'Nova faced UConn in the opening match which also counted as a conference match. The Huskies defeated the Cats in four games (12-13, 14-16, 15-5, 15-13), handing 'Nova its second conference loss of the week. Kulbago was the only Cat to reach double figures in skills with 14. Dispenza added 44 assists.

The tournament continued Saturday with two more matches for the Cats. In the first match of the day, the Cats defeated Vermont in straight games (15-13, 15-10, 15-7). Sophomore Amy Steigerwald led the team with nine kills and 12 digs, while Dispenza added 34 assists to her team-leading total. In the third and final match of the tournament, 'Nova lost to Northeastern in four-game match (15-9, 7-15, 15-13, 15-13). Clifford registered 11 kills and 18 digs and Steigerwald and sophomore Molly Gorman each chipped in with 10 kills.

This week the Cats will travel to Delaware for a match against the Blue Hens Tuesday night. 'Nova will journey to Georgetown for a conference match tomorrow against the Hoyas and will remain there for matches with Maryland and James Madison on Saturday.

Villanova (4-0, 2-0) at Connecticut (2-2, 1-0)
Saturday, 1 p.m.
TV: None, Radio: WXVU, 89.1 FM
Last Year: Villanova 35-13

OUTLOOK: This contest is 'Nova's final test before hosting conference rival Delaware Oct. 17 and possibly its toughest yet.

Connecticut comes in with two losses by a combined four points and traditionally gives the Cats problems. This year will be no exception as the Huskies gear up for the defending Yankee Conference Champions on UConn's Parents' Weekend.

For the Cats, the offense will be looking to re-establish itself after two lethargic performances against Richmond and Boston U. However, the quarterback position is still up in the air and both Tom Colombo and Brad Parpan are expected to play. The Cats are still hurting at running back with Eric Hunt expecting to see some time despite a hobbled ankle and starter Kevin Mosley out indefinitely.

The Huskies are a team solid in all areas, great at none. UConn has committed only three turnovers this year, compared to 'Nova's 14. The Cats will have a hard time blowing them out, especially if they struggle on offense. But with their defense near full strength, the Cats should roar past the Huskies and remain in good shape for Delaware.

PREDICTION: Villanova 23, Connecticut 13

Soccer looks to build momentum

By BOB TRAVISANO
Staff Reporter

Sometimes things do not always go the way they were planned. In these cases the key to improvement would be to accentuate the bright spots, the up-side.

For the women's soccer team, this past week was the bright spot that may be the reason to carry on with the season. In the past it seemed to the players that a win was extraordinary and a loss was something common. However, once they got rolling, they collected a win in the Stony Brook Tournament and have yet to lose, tying three different teams.

Coming off a tough loss in St. John's, the Cats knew they needed a win, but Bucknell would have a say in that outcome. The teams played the first half to a stalemate, with neither of them scoring. B.U. scored first in the second half only to have 'Nova equalize it a mere 20 seconds later. The goal came when Rose Miller dribbled up the sideline and crossed it to Sarah Levandusky, who drilled it in for the goal. The teams eventually settled on a 1-1 decision. The defense in this game was stellar, limiting Bucknell to a mere four shots on the net.

The Temple Owls were the next to face the Cats at home. 'Nova usually rises to the occasion in games against local rivals, but Temple proved to be its toughest crosstown foe yet. The game was literally a perfect matchup, as both teams had nearly identical totals. Temple had 16 shots on goal to Villanova's 13, 12 saves to 'Nova's 13 and in the end the score in the book read 3-3. The Cats generated offense from their usual power source, Sandy Ross, as well as from up-and-coming Alli Maue and Kim Mullahy, each with a goal apiece.

The next expedition led the team to Stony Brook, NY, as the team played in that school's invitational tournament. The first game was against St. Bonaventure. Sharon Hewitt connected right through the hands of the goalie for the score. The easiest came on a Levandusky cross. The result: the only goal of the game for either team.

In the second game against host Stony Brook, the women battled it out for a scoreless game. A shootout followed, but the score remained 0-0. However, the game was all the Wildcats needed to win the tournament and provide the highlight of the season thus far. Danielle Fagan sparkled once more when she stopped 15 shots from hitting the net.

On an upnote, the team once again travels south of the Mason-Dixon line for the WAGS Tournament in Virginia and a game in Maryland this weekend.

Water polo splits four at Army

By ERIC WARREN
Staff Reporter

Conference play began for the water polo team as the Cats travelled to the Army Tournament last weekend. 'Nova split four games, but conquered yet another milestone by defeating Bucknell for the first time ever. 'Nova goaltender John O'Keefe was once again instrumental in sealing the victories and limiting the losses.

The Cats opened play against host Army. Though 'Nova had the advantage of being larger and more powerful, the speedy Cadets were able to take advantage of Villanova mistakes and turn them into counter-attack goals. The Wildcats turned the tide by slowing down the pace and tied the game at 6-6 going into the half. The formidable Army defense was just too strong for the Cats in the second half as the Cadets went on to win 10-8. Paul Cera scored four goals and Mark Verotsky added two for 'Nova.

Villanova's second opponent, the Bucknell Bison, entered the game having never lost to the Wildcats. The outcome of this game would be vital in determining the seeding for the Mid-Atlantic Conference Championships. Bucknell, a perennial Top 20 team, allowed the Cats to keep the score close throughout the game, and 'Nova was able to come from behind and push the game into overtime.

"Verotsky took control against Bucknell. He's the major reason why we did so well," said 'Nova Head Coach Dan Sharidan. Verotsky scored two of his five goals in overtime as the Wildcats topped Bucknell 10-8. Ryan Engstrom led the defense with four steals, and O'Keefe had an outstanding game in goal, recording 15 saves.

"We usually match up pretty well against Queens College," said Sharidan of 'Nova's opponent. "We just crushed them."

Queens has given the Wildcats some trouble in the past, but this time the 'Nova offense was simply too strong. Brian Pearce fired in four goals and Cera, Peter Trout and Steve Steinbrook tallied two apiece as 'Nova cruised to a 13-6 victory.

"I anticipated that Navy would be our toughest opponent of the weekend," said Sharidan. Villanova had already lost to Navy, ranked 18th in the nation, earlier in the year by the score of 13-4. "We played much better than the first time we played them," said Sharidan.

The Cats showed how much they have improved by batting the Midshipmen through four quarters of intense, physical play. Although the final score read 14-6 in favor of Navy, it was not indicative of the determination with which the Cats played. Verotsky rifled in five goals and the 'Nova defense recorded 11 steals. O'Keefe logged 12 saves, including two penalty shots.

"O'Keefe is definitely one of the best goaltenders in the conference," said Sharidan. "A good goalie will save two penalty shots throughout a tournament. O'Keefe saved two against Navy."

Villanova hosts the Eastern Water Polo Invitational Tournament this weekend. The Cats kick off play against Boston College at 11:30 a.m. tomorrow.

LaSalle penalty corners.

Against such a number of corner hits, the Cats needed some big defensive plays, which they got from junior Kate McKee.

"On our defensive corners, Kate has been our post player," said Gerzabek. "She's been coming up with two or three saves for us a game, and playing really well."

After a scoreless first half, Rea scored an unassisted goal at 11:52. Less than six minutes later, Hawthorne scored again on an assist from sophomore Barbara King (four goals, three assists, seven points).

With 12 saves in the game, Thomas eclipsed La Salle for her fifth consecutive shutout. Thomas, who was a second-team All-Regional last season, is in good shape for post-season honors again. Her goals against average is now 1.1 with a .89 save percentage.

The stickwomen return to action Oct. 12 against Big East rival Syracuse. The game will be played on the turf at Villanova Stadium at 3:30 p.m.

Zajac paces cross country

away all thoughts of that sort because Zajac never ran in the shadow of anyone in the first place. One must understand that O'Sullivan ran in a class of her own. In no way did Zajac ever have a problem running behind the senior. In fact, with all of her modesty, it was an honor for Zajac to run behind the best women's cross country runner in the world.

Now in her junior year, Villanova's top women's cross country runner has gotten much stronger both physically and mentally. She is in more ways than one the veteran of this dominating organization. Not only is she the leader in the majority of the races, but Zajac's leadership abilities go beyond the course.

"Carole leads by example," said her proud mentor. "She has a clean life and she keeps herself very healthy."

If there is anyone for the younger runners to look up to for advice or overall morals, it is definitely Zajac. She comes from a family whose high morals and values have obviously had an upstanding effect on her life. This is an athlete that is tremendously strong both mentally and physically.

As a quiet leader at the meets, she is strictly down to business when it is time to race.

Outside of the competitive aspect of her sport, however, Coach Stern notes that, "She is always the first person to talk to someone if they are having problems. When we do something for charity, she is always more than willing to visit even the toughest neighborhoods in the city to help out the homeless. She is such a good person that we can all look up to her."

Perhaps one can never quite say enough about a person of this caliber. It is obvious that Zajac can be considered a role model for everyone. As for what we can expect from her as a runner, if she keeps on competing the way she has been, you can be assured that it will be nothing short of excellent. She would never settle for anything less.

Hoops land recruit

By PATRICK MEILER
Staff Reporter

This is the first of weekly commentary articles about the Villanova basketball team. I will also comment on the Big East Conference and college basketball in general.

Lappas getting the job done ... Steve Lappas was hired as Villanova's head coach back in the spring. Not much was expected of this fiery young Massimino assistant turned successful head coach at Manhattan College. He was supposedly the Cats' third choice. Look what he has done even BEFORE coaching his first game at 'Nova:

1) He successfully persuaded the incoming freshman class of Eric Eberz, Kerry Kittles, and Roscoe Harris to remain at V.U.

2) He is successfully recruiting in the Philadelphia area. A member of the Philly Fab 5, 6-foot-4 point guard Alvin Williams, verbally committed to Villanova Oct. 5. Williams is rated the 32nd best player in the country by All-Star Stats, a talent evaluation service. Williams is the first Public League player to commit to 'Nova since 1973. In addition the Cats remain high on 6-foot-11 center Rasheed Wallace's list of schools. Also, Williams was seen playing pick-up ball on campus with 6-foot-6 power forward Tyrone Weeks and 6-foot-10 center Jason Lawson. Williams' verbal commitment certainly does not hurt Villanova's chances at landing any one of the other three aforementioned players. Needless to say, recruiting is one of the most important aspects of coaching. If you do not have the horses, you cannot run the race. Lappas, who is known for his recruiting ability, is already rounding them up. The future looks bright.

3) He has brought Midnight Madness to 'Nova Halloween night at 12 a.m. The eve of Nov. 1 is the new official date the NCAA allows member schools to engage in a first practice. Hopefully, duPont will be packed, as a new era of Villanova Basketball will begin — the Steve Lappas Era . . .

Syracuse getting the easy treatment by the NCAA ... Syracuse University became the first Big East member to receive penalties under NCAA violations. The 'Cuse learned of its probation penalties last week. The consensus is that a one-year NCAA Tournament ban and scholarship limitations in several sports was a mere slap on the wrist, in comparison to penalties levied on the Maryland and Kentucky programs, to name a few.

The Orange will not be banned from television during probation. Big East Commissioner Mike Tranghese is leaning toward a Syracuse presence in the Big East Tournament, but has not yet made a final decision. He prefers to "protect his own." It is believed that both of Syracuse's incoming recruits, power forwards Otis Hill and John Wallace, have decided to remain at the University.

Yankee Conference

By FRANK SCHNEIDER
Staff Reporter

The fifth week of Yankee Conference play saw a newcomer continue to roll and this year's trend of high scoring games continue.

Delaware 42
New Hampshire 22

The Delaware Blue Hens bounced back from last week's nightmare in West Chester to defeat New Hampshire 42-22. The win was Delaware's first over the Wildcats since 1988. The Blue Hens were led by quarterback Bill Vergantino, who amassed 236 yards of total offense and four TDs. He ran for 97 yards, had one score, and threw for three more on eight for 12 passing.

The Blue Hens' defense was led by Yankee Conference Defensive Player of the Week Warren McIntire. The 5-foot-11, 202-pound safety helped the Blue Hens cause six Wildcat turnovers. McIntire forced a fumble, broke up a pass, had four tackles and one fumble recovery.

Among top performers for New Hampshire was fullback Mike Gallagher (12 catches, 96 yards), who moved into 12th place on the all-time UNH receiving list.

Richmond 28 Maine 6

Richmond continued its offensive rejuvenation this year with a 28-6 trouncing of Maine. Richmond continued to establish new school highs on offense with 156 points in four games.

The Spiders were led by Yankee Conference Offensive Player of the Week Greg Lilly. The Spiders' quarterback was 18 of 27 passing for 363 yards and three touchdowns (three, 28 and 73 yards). This season Lilly has 1,000 yards passing with 13 TDs and only one interception.

The Black Bears' only bright spot was the play of linebacker Dan Girard, who had 14 tackles in defeat. He is fifth in the Yankee Conference, averaging 11 tackles per game.

Connecticut 40 Yale 20

Connecticut's defense had plenty of support this week in a 40-20 blowout of Yale. The Huskies' potent ground attack was the story of the game with Yankee Conference Rookie of the Week Wilbur Gilliard rushing for 198 yards and four TDs. The backfield combination of Gilliard and Ed Long accounted for 318 yards rushing and five TDs. Gilliard's four TDs marked the first time a UConn player accomplished this feat since 1974.

William & Mary 51 Brown 6

William & Mary continued to feast on Ivy League opponents this week, lambasting Brown 51-6. William & Mary improved to 4-0 for the first time since 1986. The Tribe was led by quarterback Shawn Knight, who connected on 12 of 16 passes for 286 yards and three TDs.

William & Mary's stingy defense features the dynamic duo of Adrian Rich and Jermaine Rosser. Rich is sixth in the Yankee Conference in tackles and Rosser is second in interceptions. William & Mary's overall defense is second in the Yankee Conference behind Villanova. The Tribe allows 280.8 yards of total offense per game.

James Madison 35
Northeastern 34

JMU squeaked by Northeastern in a thriller, 35-34. The Dukes were led by tailback Kenny Sims. Sims has been a one-man wrecking crew thus far and rushed for 181 yards and three TDs against N.U. He is averaging 128 yards rushing per game. The Dukes' defense allowed only 34 points. It may sound like a lot, but JMU allows 499 yards of total offense per game and has allowed 187 points this season.

N.U. was led by Kevin Williams, who rushed for 154 yards and two TDs.

Hofstra 28 Rhode Island 18

The Rams, winless in the Yankee Conference, fell to 1-3 in a disappointing 28-18 loss to Hostra. Darren Rizzi continued his quest for All-American honors with an 11-catch, 162-yard performance. He had two TDs and a two-point conversion. The tight end leads the Yankee Conference in receptions.

Missouri 44, No. 1 Marshall 21

The Missouri offense gained 641 yards and routed top-ranked Marshall. Mizzou quarterback Joe Freeman threw for a school record four touchdowns and helped the Tigers end an eight-game home losing streak. In its previous three games, Marshall had given up only 51 points.

No. 2 Northern Iowa 41, Illinois St. 14

Northern Iowa overcame a 7-0 deficit as quarterback Jay Johnson threw for three touchdowns. The win boosted Northern Iowa to 4-0 overall and 1-0 in the Gateway Conference. They also claimed the No. 1 position in the I-AA rankings. Illinois St. is 2-3 (1-2 conference).

No. 2 VILLANOVA 22, Boston U. 14

No. 4 E. Kentucky 20, SE Missouri 10

No. 5 Idaho 30, CS Northridge 7

No. 6 The Citadel 25, Appalachian State 0

The Citadel running back Everette Sands ran for 199 yards and one touchdown to lead the visiting Citadel. With the victory, The Citadel upped its record to 5-0 (2-0 conference). A.S.U. dropped to 1-3 (1-1 conference).

No. 7 Youngstown State 30, Indiana St. 24

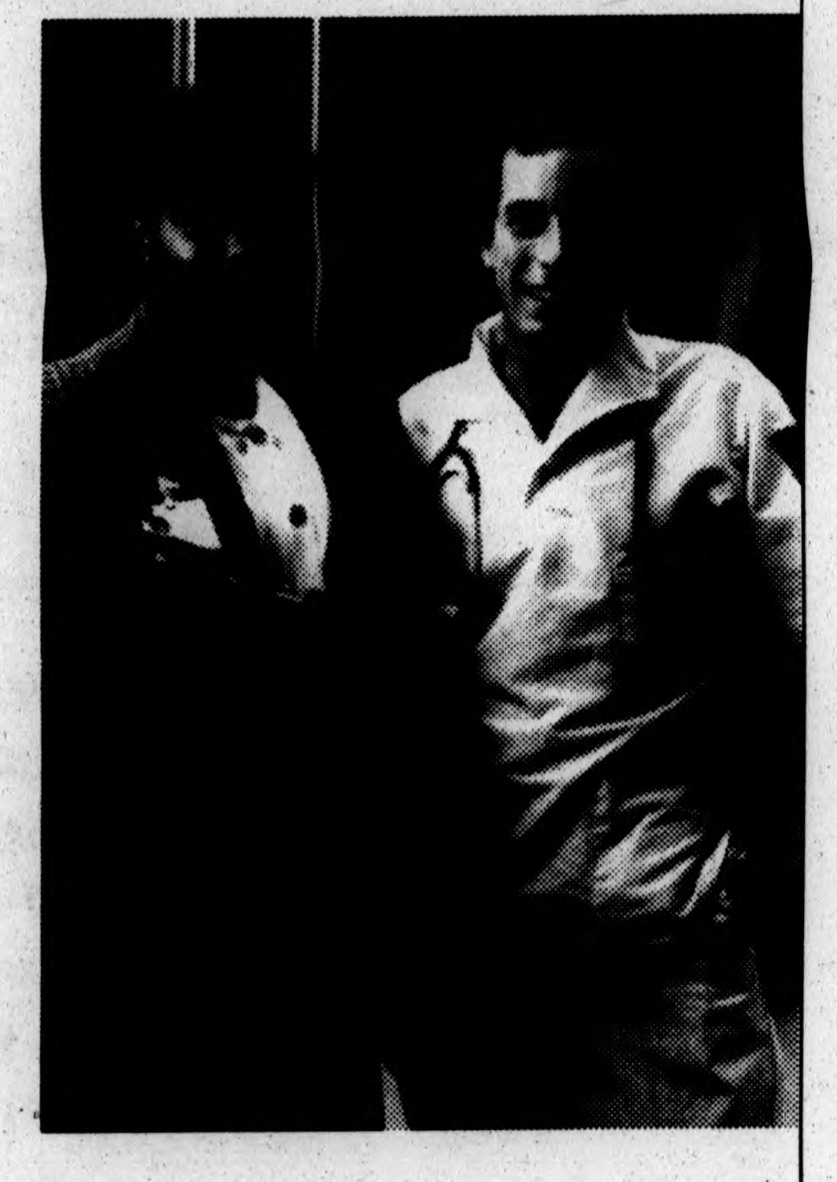
No. 8 Middle Tennessee State 30, No. Illinois 13

No. 9 NE Louisiana 52, Delta St. 13

No. 10 William & Mary 51, Brown 6

Quarterback Shawn Knight completed 12 of 16 passes for 286 yards and three touchdowns, leading William & Mary to a rout over Brown. The Tribe (4-0) took a 28-6 halftime lead and were never threatened again. Offensively, they gained 618 total yards.

Leading the charge was Derek Fitzgerald, who gained 111 yards and scored one touchdown. Defensively, the Tribe gave up only 288 total yards, half of which were gained by Brown running back Brett Brown.



NURSING STUDENTS

Mercy Health Corporation's $3,000 to $5,000 GRANT PROGRAM can get you started on a great career!

Mercy Health Corporation, the fourth largest medical center in the Delaware Valley, with a total complement of 800 plus beds, announces an exciting program to help nursing Associate and Bachelor Degree candidates in the pursuit of their career goals.

These special $3000 to $5000 grants are to be used for tuition, books and living expenses. Any remaining funds will revert to the student to pay additional educational expenses.

Currently, grants are available in one of two formats:

ONE YEAR GRANT

Bachelor Degree candidates will receive $2500 for each two consecutive semesters. Associate Degree candidates will receive $1500 for each of two consecutive semesters. Students must be entering the Senior year of the Bachelor Degree Program or the second year of the Associate Degree Program.

TWO YEAR GRANT

Bachelor Degree candidates will receive $1250 for each of four consecutive semesters. Associate Degree candidates will receive $750 for each of four consecutive semesters. Students must be entering the Junior year of a Bachelor Degree Program or the first year of an Associate Degree Program.

All qualified, interested students may call (215) 660-7444, or write for details to Mercy Health Corporation.

Grant recipients must agree to join the staff of either the Misericordia Hospital, Fitzgerald Mercy Hospital or Mercy Haverford Hospital of Mercy Health Corporation for 18 consecutive months immediately following graduation. The number of grants in any discipline and hospital assignment will be based on Mercy Health Corporation's requirements. During this period you will be paid the prevailing salary along with appropriate fringe benefits according to policy.

To be eligible, you must enroll as a FULL TIME student for each semester grant funds are paid and have received satisfactory high school and/or college grades.

Colombo, defense key 'Nova comeback

By ANDY FITZPATRICK
Sports Editor

Winning Ugly. That typifies 'Nova's come-from-behind 22-14 Yankee Conference win over Boston University. It definitely was not pretty, but for Head Coach Andy Talley's No. 2-ranked Wildcats, it is their fourth win against no defeats.

"We really came out flat," said Talley. "The layoff [one week off] really hurt. B.U. is a team that we have beaten rather handily in recent years and we were just not up for it. The team has to realize that teams are playing us harder this year."

Down 14-3 at halftime to the 0-4 Terriers, 'Nova came out of the locker room a totally different team from the one that sleepwalked through the first half. Led by charged-up quarterback Tom Colombo, who replaced Brad Parpan, the 'Nova offense picked up the intensity, but it was the defense that made the big play.

The spark that turned the game around came on B.U.'s third play of the third quarter. On third-and-four from its own 45-yard line, the Terriers were looking for a first down when Cat linebacker Delmon Robertson intercepted a pass and streaked into the end zone for a much-needed TD that cut the score to 14-9.

"Right now we're better on defense," said Talley. "It was a big turnaround for us because it was a score, not just an interception. Anytime the defense scores, it's a big lift."

After another interception by linebacker Curtis Eller, 'Nova kicker William Hoffman connected from 42 yards and then from 27 yards out to give the Cats a 15-14 lead which was more than enough for the No. 1-ranked defense in the Yankee.

Offensively, Talley started Parpan at quarterback instead of the incumbent Colombo. However, after a sluggish first half by the entire offense, Colombo came in and completed nine of 14 passes for 114 yards and moved the offense on three scoring drives. So then, who is the starting quarterback?

Talley is leaning towards Colombo for tomorrow's game but is planning on playing both. This situation provides the offense with two capable quarterbacks. However, as a whole, the offense has struggled all season long.

One reason for the ineffectiveness is the depletion at the running back position. Vernon Smith left school for personal reasons in August. Kevin Mosley is out at least another four weeks with a broken hand and freshman Eric Hunt has a nagging ankle injury, leaving him questionable tomorrow. That forces Talley to play fullback Jeff Johnson at tailback.

With the lack of stability in the running game, the passing game has suffered. Defenses are laying back on Colombo, forcing him to throw into double coverage. Parpan has a very strong arm but does not have the same experience and confidence that Colombo has gained through leading the offense.

One way to generate more offense is to pass the ball to All-Yankee tight end Scott Donald. Donald, who had three receptions for 21 yards against B.U., rarely drops a pass and requires at least two defenders to tackle him. He must become much more of a threat on offense.

As the offense continues to work out the kinks, the defense continues to shine. The secondary did not miss a beat with the insertion of Matt Smith for the injured Barry Alvis. Smith led the team with nine tackles.

The return of starting linebacker Andy Cobaugh only strengthens an already solid defense, which will have to be at its best tomorrow at Connecticut (2-2), a team that always plays 'Nova tough.

Notes: The Cats have won 18 of their last 21 football games and hold a 10-game home winning streak ... The Delaware Watch: The Blue Hens (3-1, 3-0) defeated New Hampshire 42-22 in Yankee play. The conference showdown is next Saturday at 1:30 p.m. in Villanova Stadium.

Thomas shuts out five straight; field hockey now 8-4

By ALEX SCOFIELD
Staff Reporter

If you walked past Villanova Stadium last week and heard the thundering sound of wood being hit, rest assured you were hearing a practice session for the Villanova field hockey team. With an 11-day break between games, Head Coach Jackie Gerzabek knew exactly what she was going to practice with the team.

"We've been having difficulties scoring," said Gerzabek. "We've only been winning games 1-0 even though we get around 30 shots on goal. We're going to hear those (back)boards all week."

Though the Cats may need to undergo some fine-tuning, they have plenty to feel good about in their off-week. With a 1-0 win at home against St. Joseph's and a 2-0 road victory against La Salle, the 'Nova stickwomen have extended their winning streak to five games and improved their record to 8-4.

Finishing a three-game homestand, the Cats hosted the St. Joe's Hawks Sept. 29. In front of a large crowd, the two teams played an intense game, which was made all the more so when it went into overtime tied 0-0.

> We've been having difficulties scoring. We've only been winning games 1-0 even though we get around 30 shots on goal. We're going to hear those [back]boards all week.

> Head Coach Jackie Gerzabek

Throughout the game, co-captain Melissa Rea kept the St. Joe's defense on its toes. Rea led both teams with 14 shots (11 inside circle and 3 outside circle).

In the overtime period, the ball spent a good amount of time on both halves of the field. On the defensive end, sweeper Kathy Pearce and goalie Chrissy Thomas came up with big plays on threatening St. Joe's drives.

Late in the OT period, 'Nova co-captain Marianne Connelly initiated the winning score, firing a shot on goal. The shot was deflected, but left wing Bree Hawthorne was there to rebound the ball into the cage at 12:41 and give 'Nova the 1-0 win.

Two days later, the Cats put their winning streak on the line at LaSalle and came away with a 2-0 victory. Despite the score, however, this was a tough win for 'Nova, which had to defend 18

Zajac leads runners by example

By SEAN KELLY
Staff Reporter

The term role model has become almost synonymous with athletes, especially those who have performed at levels exceeding greatness. While many of these performers are appropriately categorized as being exemplary people, too many times when these athletes are regarded as being ideal human beings just because they excel athletically. Perhaps the best role models to look for in athletics are the unsung heroes.

Carole Zajac, who only recently has received recognition for her greatness, is a modest athlete who, as her proud Head Coach Marty Stern sees it, "should be looked up to by all Villanova students." In only her junior year, she is the nation's No. 2 collegiate women's cross country runner. This is something that many Wildcat students are not even aware of; however, her attitude towards life would not let that bother her.

Upon her arrival from high school, winning was nothing new for Zajac, who was coming to a school that had just won a national championship the previous year. In fact, the young and inexperienced freshman's resume showed that she was a two-time Pennsylvania Class AAA high school cross country champion. Not bad for the young recruit, but she still had to ascertain her greatness at the college level. It was not long, though, before she did exactly that. At the end of her successful first year in college, Zajac emerged as one of the nation's finest runners, placing 14th at the NCAA Championships.

"None of us ever expected Carole to produce as much as she did," Stern said.

Zajac's excellence in cross country running was in no way put to rest in her sophomore year. Actually, she stepped up her performances tremendously in only one year. She was runner-up to teammate Sonia O'Sullivan in prominent races such as the Paul Short and William & Mary Invitationals. Zajac was Villanova's third finisher in both the Big East and ECAC Championships.

> Carole leads by example. She has a clean life and she keeps herself very healthy.
> Head Coach Marty Stern

Unquestionably, Zajac's greatest accomplishment in her young career as a Wildcat also came in her sophomore year. In a meet with the country's elite runners, Zajac finished second at the NCAA Championships. This was an even greater achievement considering the only woman placing in front of her was once again O'Sullivan, who literally could have beaten anyone in the world.

Even though Zajac had been exposed to a full year's worth of college competition, Coach Stern admits, "I was still surprised at everything she was able to accomplish."

It may seem as if now that O'Sullivan has graduated, Zajac can finally start running outside of her shadow. Put

Pub shut down

By JENNIFER FAUSTMAN

A sign tacked to the front door stated simply, "Thank you everybody. We will miss you."

With that brief statement, the management of John Barleycorn's Pub said goodbye. The popular watering hole located on Lancaster Avenue in Bryn Mawr officially closed its doors Oct. 16 because of financial difficulties, according to a former employee acting as a spokesman for the owners.

"Let me say first off, that the LCB [Liquor Control Board] had nothing to do with the closing," said Greg Gallagher, former entertainment manager better known as "D.J. Greg."

"It's no secret that the previous owner, who I will not name, ran up a huge debt," said Gallagher. He added that the current owners of the bar knew nothing about the debt when they purchased it last year.

They found out about the debt when they were denied a transfer of the liquor license into their names, said Gallagher, who added that no license could be issued until the debt was cleared.

"No one had any idea that this was going on," said Gallagher. "I mean, it was like ... Bam. We found out two days before the closing."

Gallagher said the staff was really saddened by the closing. "It was like a family, and we liked having you in our house," said Gallagher, who observed that when he went into other bars, he got the feeling that students were an annoyance to the management.

Unfortunately, chances that the bar will re-open are slim. No liquor license can be issued until the previous owner's debts are cleared, said Gallagher. He added

The gender equity issue works to give women's sports the same opportunities as men's sports at all colleges and universities.

'Nova sports review gender equity

By LARISA EPATKO
News Editor

Gender equity in intercollegiate athletics is an issue rising in importance. Title IX of the Equal Education Amendment Act of 1972 represents a workable set of legal standards by which gender equity can be measured.

The National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) held hearings April 9 on the subject of gender equity. The hearings served to bring into public focus the extent to which sports programs are dedicated to serving the interests and abilities of both male and female student-athletes.

The 1992 NCAA survey showed that participation of males in athletics exceeds females by ratios ranging from 2.24 : 1 in Division I to 1.87 : 1 in Division III.

The study also showed that institutions in Division I and II provide athletically-related financial aid to male and female student-athletes in almost exactly the same proportion as male/female participation.

The average proportion of spending on men's programs compared to women's programs, however, exceeds the ratio of male to female participants in Division I but not in other Divisions. "The proportion of recruiting expenses for men's programs exceeded the male/female participation ratio by an even greater number," according to the NCAA report.

Villanova University started a committee two years ago to review the University's situation as related to Title IX. The outcome of the committee's study was that the University is in compliance with Title IX, said MaryAnne Dowling, compliance officer for the Athletic Department.

Gender equity is a separate issue because it is not a regulation but a proposal that may be enacted, according to Ted Aceto, director of the Athletics Department.

Title IX ensures equal opportunity for participation in sports, and the number of scholarships are in direct proportion to the number of participants, said Dowling. Gender equity looks at the number of males and females enrolled in institutions and guarantees equal participation in athletics and scholarship, she said.

DuPont Pavilion will hold the University's first "Midnight Madness" tomorrow from 10 p.m.to 1 a.m. to celebrate the first day the men's basketball players can practice as a team.

According to NCAA rules, basketball teams may start practicing together Nov. 1. "Midnight Madness" will include activities up to midnight when the team will have its first official practice.

Doors to the pavilion will open at 10 p.m. with the event's sponsors giving away 2,000 T-shirts to students. Music will be provided by Dr. Dre of "Yo MTV Raps."

The student competition will begin at 11 p.m. on the main court. Some contests include foul and half-court shooting, dribble racing, best banner, dunking and beat the coach.

Students can win tickets to DuPont and Spectrum games, airline tickets, gift certificates, guest appearances on Head Coach Steve Lappas' show and other prizes.

The players and coaches will be introduced at 11:45 p.m., followed by the 20-minute scrimmage between the blue and white. After the basketball program, the DJ will start up the music again until the end of the night.

"Midnight Madness" is an event brought to Villanova by Lappas. Manhattan College, where Lappas used to coach men's basketball, will continue its version of the rally.

The Athletics Department of Manhattan will hold "Late Night with the Jaspers" for its 3,500 students to celebrate the Jaspers' 1992-93 season.

"It is important for the players to know that they have a large support group from the beginning of the season to the end," said Jeff Bernstein, Sports Information director.

St. Joseph University also has a rally that will "relate everything to basketball and Halloween

Students left homeless after overnight blaze

An early-morning fire destroyed a home rented to five Villanova students on 30 S. Warner Ave. in Bryn Mawr Oct. 26, according to Harry Knorr, chief of the Lower Merion Township Fire Company. One student sustained injuries.

The fire began in the kitchen at approximately 12:50 a.m., said Knorr who added that its cause was still under investigation. Four students were present in the home when the fire started, according to Knorr.

"We were sleeping when it started," said Cathy Evenson, a junior who was injured as she fled the house. She said her roommate, junior Christine Norkevicius, awakened after smelling smoke and realized a fire had started.

"She woke us up, and then the fire alarms went off," said Evenson. They went to the kitchen and saw flames spreading up the rear wall of the home. "We panicked, and tried to smother the fire ourselves," said Evenson.

Norkevicius called the fire department from the home, according to Evenson. When they realized the fire was spreading, the students left the kitchen. "I guess my roommates got out of the house," said Evenson. "I ran back up to my bedroom on the second floor thinking I could save things."

"All of a sudden the electricity went out, and I couldn't breathe," said Evenson. "I realized I had to get out of the house." She pushed through a window in her room, climbed onto the roof of the front porch and jumped into the bushes below.

Evenson ran to the home of another student who accompanied her to Bryn Mawr Hospital, where she received five stitches and treatment for smoke inhalation. Doctors advised her to stay for observation, said Evenson, and she remained hospitalized for two days.

Firefighters from the Bryn Mawr Fire Company, the Ardmore Fire Company and an air unit from Gladwyne battled the flames until approximately 4 a.m., said Knorr. The fire caused $70,000 in damage to the student home, and $30,000 in damage to an adjoining residence, according to Knorr.

"We lost almost everything," said Evenson. "Bikes, stereos, rollerblades and computers were destroyed."

Fire officials allowed the students into the home the following day to see if any items could be saved, said junior Michelle Gerdoney, one of the residents.

Gerdoney said that University officials have been extremely supportive. The Rev. John Stack, O.S.A., offered them temporary campus residency and assistance in locating a new residence, she said.

FAU Foundation Paid Lavish Expenses

BOCA RATON, Fla. — Records recently released by the Florida Atlantic University Foundation show that funds went to pay for lavish dinners and a country club membership for the school's president.

Generous pay raises for a select few at the school and air fares for spouses of school officials have also come under public scrutiny at the urging of the Florida Board of Regents.

The foundation's spending practices and subsequent investigation prompted several contributors to quit the group's board in April, 1991, and direct their contributions to other universities.

The records reveal that President Anthony Catanese, whose annual salary is $127,513, also receives $52,500 in foundation perks.

This year perks included a $12,000 social membership at the exclusive Boca Raton Resort and Club, a $918.75 dinner with former Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis, a $1,000 membership to the Florida Symphonic Pops and a $3,490 trip to Australia with his wife, Sara.

"These expenditures are totally defensible," said Lynn Laurenti, director of FAU public relations. "At a large institution like ours, the president can't take a visiting head of state to McDonald's for dinner."

Justices Reject Student Fee Case

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Supreme Court refused Oct. 5 to bar universities from using student fees to finance groups that some students oppose.

The court, without comment, rejected an appeal by a group of State University of New York students.

The students maintain that use of such fees violates their free-speech rights and object to part of their mandatory student activity fee being used to support the New York Public Interest research Group (NYPIRG), a non-profit research and environmental advocacy group.

"There were eleven plaintiffs," said Ken Goldfarb, spokesman for the university. "We are pleased with the Supreme Court ruling. You have to understand that NYPIRG reflects a wide range of views and serves an important function. The courts have recognized that funding them is a proper use of these fees."

The students, said Goldfarb, filed an appeal in which they stated they were "opposed to NYPIRG's causes and methods, and were dismayed to find themselves financing them."

Suspect Arrested in UF Rapes

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — A man suspected of sexually assaulting two female University of Florida students in their dormitory room has been arrested and was being held on a $500,000 bond.

Elbert Jones, Jr., 34, was picked up shortly after warrants were issued against him for sexual battery with a deadly weapon and armed burglary.

Jones is accused of attacking the women around 1:30 a.m. Oct. 7 after the women stepped outside the dorm for a cigarette break. The attacker slipped through a security door after them and chased them to their room. The women told police the man threatened them with a toy gun.

Greeks host Halloween party

The University hosted a free Halloween party for area ghosts and goblins, ages 1 to 8, on Oct. 27 in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center on campus.

Refreshments including cookies, candy and apple cider were served to the children, and there was coffee and doughnuts for the parents. Activities included games such as pin-the-tail on-the-pumpkin, dunking apples on a string and a costume contest. Prizes including toys and candy-filled pumpkins were awarded for the best costumes. Participants were asked to bring their own treat bags.

Villanova's sororities and fraternities sponsored the annual trick-or-treat event.

Task force raises AIDS awareness

By KATE SZUMANSKI
Assistant News Editor

The University AIDS Task Force, composed of faculty, staff and student members, was reconvened last year to increase AIDS education in the Villanova community, said Gary Bonas, assistant director of Student Activities and chairperson of the AIDS Task Force. "Our goal is to promote AIDS awareness on campus and to break down the many stereotypes Villanova students have toward HIV," said Sean Ferrier, student member of the task force.

A 19-member AIDS peer education program under the direction of the AIDS Task Force provides Villanova students with correct information regarding the AIDS virus, said Sue Phillips, an AIDS peer educator. Each one hour presentation conducted by a team of two peer educators includes the showing of a film and a question and answer session, added Phillips. The peer education service will be evaluated over the year to monitor and judge its effectiveness, said Ferrier.

"A peer education program did exist on campus in 1988-1989, but it petered out because the management in charge of the task force either left campus or pursued other interests. Peer education fell through the cracks," said Bonas. Because there is a definite need for AIDS peer education, Richard Neville, the vice president of Student Life, suggested the task force reform on campus, added Bonas.

The peer educators were selected in an interview process and are in a constant process of extensive training, said Ferrier. Training includes studying an AIDS resource book, viewing video presentations, attending information meetings and participating in group activities, said Phillips. The peer educators also met with representatives from the Delaware County AIDS Network, AIDS counselors and people living with AIDS during the initial training phases, said Ferrier.

"The most important aspect of the education process involves desensitization, which means reaching the point where the educator feels comfortable talking about HIV and sexuality. The best and most relevant points of the training process have been incorporated into the Villanova AIDS

Economist discusses moral implications of failed economy

By JEN BORDA
Staff Reporter

The department of economics sponsored a lecture by Dr. Walt Peterson Oct. 15 titled, "A Social Economist's Search for Justice" in the Connelly Center Cinema.

Peterson has been associated with the University of Nebraska for over 40 years as both a student and a faculty member. He is currently an economics professor at the University of Nebraska and is currently the president of the Association for Social Economics. The association has focused on the ties between economics, human dignity and ethical values and was designed to explore the moral questions involving justice in economic affairs.

"In the view of many, economics should only concern itself with efficiency, how to get from A to B the cheapest and best way. This does not involve value judgement, it is impartial and scientific," said Peterson.

"Economics is not a value-free science. Economists cannot avoid coming to grips with such value loaded issues like justice and equity in economic affairs."

Peterson said that one of the nation's biggest economic problems is a lack of jobs and inequality in the distribution of wealth and income. He said the economy has been in a depressed state for the last 19 years. Peterson used the term "silent depression" to describe these developments.

"It is silent because the deterioration is slow and insidious," said Peterson. He defined it as a depression because, "it has been continued for a very long time and because it has affected so many people."

Since 1973 the annual average rate of growth for real hourly and weekly wages has been in decline and for the first time since World War II production of services, the production of goods also has declined, said Peterson. "This is a white-collar recession as well as a blue-collar recession," said Peterson.

Peterson listed three causes for this silent depression. First is military spending for the last 40 years consisting of over 75 percent of the government's real outputs. Another reason is the downturn in investment in public capital, the infrastructure of the nation. Finally, he blames the steady loss of well paying jobs in manufacturing which has consequently caused the disappearance of the middle class standard of life for millions of American families.

Professors named to two endowed chairs

By LARISA EPATKO
News Editor

The first two endowed chairs in University history were awarded to Dr. John Caputo of the philosophy department and the Rev. Michael Scanlon, O.S.A., professor of theology.

Endowed chairs are established by members of the Villanova community who donate money to the University. The administration decided this year which professors would receive the endowed chairs.

Caputo received the David R. Cook Endowed Chair in Philosophy. He has taught philosophy at Villanova for 24 years and specializes in the work of Heidegger.

"I feel very honored and hope the University has more [endowed chairs] in the future. It's just a question of time," Caputo said.

Caputo is the author of three books on Heidegger and will have two more books published in 1993. He has written over 50 articles dealing with her meneutics, deconstruction and post-modernism.

Caputo is currently the executive co-director of the Society for Phenomenology and Existential Philosophy and a member of the National Board of Officers of the American Philosophical Association. He also was president of the American Catholic Philosophical Association.

Cook, whose gift established the endowed chair, is president of Turkey Hill Minit Markets. He currently serves on the University's board of trustees and the steering committee of the Villanova Campaign.

Scanlon received the Josephine C. Connelly Endowed Chair in Christian Theology. He taught Systematic Theology at the Washington Theological Union before coming to Villanova this fall.

Scanlon won the University's Arts and Sciences Alumni Medallion in 1986. He served as a trustee of Villanova from 1988 to 1992.

Scanlon was co-founder and second president of the Washington Theological Consortium and a former president of the Catholic Theological Society of America.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTIONS

Villanova students have often shown great enthusiasm for presidential elections, but the preferences of earlier generations may surprise their contemporaries. Until recently Villanova students showed a strong preference for the Democratic party in presidential contests, in contrast to strong support for Republican candidates in the past two decades.

Although most students could not actually vote for president until the 26th Amendment enfranchised 18-year olds in 1971, the local campus newspaper, the Villanovan, has held presidential preference polls, with only a few exceptions, since 1932. In October of that year the newspaper observed that Villanova students had long preferred the Democratic Party. Although it gave no explanation for this phenomenon, it is well-known that Catholics, and especially Irish Catholics, were then and for several decades thereafter one of the largest and most powerful constituents within Democratic ranks. This allegiance, coupled with the crippling depression of the 1930s, gave Democrat Franklin Roosevelt a landslide in the student poll in 1932. FDR trounced the Republican Herbert Hoover by 376 to 51. Socialist candidate Norman Thomas picked up an astounding 135 votes. In 1936 Villanovans delivered another stunning victory to Roosevelt, who out-polled Alfred Landon by 4 to 1.

By 1940 Roosevelt's popularity slipped as Villanovans objected to his bid for a third term and his movement away from isolationism in foreign affairs. That fall students favored Republican Wendell Wilkie by 56 percent to Roosevelt's 43 percent. Because of the wartime emergency, the Villanovan did not conduct its presidental poll in 1944.

The postwar years found Villanova students returning to the Democratic standard, and in 1948 they defted conventional wisdom by favoring the Democrat Adlai Stevenson ever the immensely popular Dwight D. Eisenhower by a margin of 64 percent to 32 percent. In 1956, when the contest was again between Eisenhower and Stevenson, Villanovans narrowly selected Eisenhower.

The old Democratic preference, combined with the Catholic faith of John F. Kennedy, assured Kennedy a good following among Villanovans, who gave him 67 percent of the vote, with only 27 percent going to rival Richard Nixon. In 1964 they delivered almost as much support to Democrat Lyndon B. Johnson in his race against Barry Goldwater.

There were no presidential polls among Villanova students in 1968 or 1972, but in 1976 the Villanovan reported that students favored Republican Gerald Ford over Democrat Jimmy Carter by 49 percent to 22 percent. The next three elections revealed similarly strong support for Republicans: In 1980 Ronald Reagan defeated Carter by 42 percent to 21 percent and in 1988 students preferred George Bush over Michael Dukakis, 55 percent to 21 percent. Although there was no poll in 1984, it is clear that the majority of Villanova students remained loyal to Reagan in 1984.

This shift to the Republican Party at Villanova reflected a nationwide preference for the GOP during these years. It also may be attributed to the greater wealth of Villanova parents, many of who have left the political home of their Catholic ancestors.

Campus buildings undergo widespread construction

By MOIRA DONAHUE
Staff Reporter

Vasey Hall is to undergo construction and complete upgrading in the near future. The plans are in the designing and programming phases now.

James E. Zaleski, director of engineering for Facilities Management, said that none of the plans are definite and they depend upon funding.

To combat the classroom shortage on-campus, the second floor will consist of all classrooms, including a lecture hall that will hold 90 students. The second floor also will have a modern language lab and a seminar room.

The first floor will hold the graduate, university college and multicultural offices. The theater will remain in the basement.

The entire building will be equipped with air conditioning and additional bathroom facilities.

Some changes will follow in accordance with the American Disabilities Act (ADA). The entire building will be readily accessible for students, professors and staff who use wheelchairs or have any other type of physical disability. Additional plans include the construction of an elevator.

The entire building will be equipped with air conditioning and there will be additional bathroom facilities provided.

Zaleski said, "Vasey Hall will be like a brand new building." The contract for Vasey Hall will go out for bidding in the immediate future, he added.

Construction has been completed in Tolentine Hall, including the relocation of the executive offices of University Vice President Dr. Helen Lafferty. The Academic Affairs office and Research offices were also relocated. All of the new offices were moved into over fall break.

Zaleski said that the construction in Tolentine created no inconvenience with regular student activity.

Newly formed club elects officers

By LAUREN WURST,
Staff Reporter

The Communications Club held elections for their executive officers Oct. 14. This event marked one of the preliminary stages involved in organizing a club at Villanova.

For many years communication students felt the need for a club to tackle the numerous opportunities involved in the field. This semester will mark the first that such an organization will be present on Villanova's campus.

"Communications is a rapidly growing industry, people are recognizing its importance in everyday experiences," said secretary Caroline Lavin, senior communication arts major.

According to the club's proposed goals and objectives, "The Villanova Communication Club is an organization created by, comprised of and orchestrated by Villanova University students with a sincere interest in the field of communications. The members are dedicated to promoting the various disciplines within the field of communication."

The club was formed by a steering committee of volunteers aided by Dr. Terry Nance and Dr. Edward Lordan. Once elected, the club's officials will put into motion the club's goals and objectives.

The organization is comprised of eight committees including; the Publicity Committee, presently working on the Solarcat project, the Speaker Committee and the Fund Raising Committee. The club will also provide a newsletter that will be available following each meeting. Meetings will take place once every two weeks.

"One of our main goals is to improve relations between students and faculty within the Communications Department," said Rachel Megna, vice president.

The communications club is open to all majors. "We encourage people from any area to join, the more diverse a group we have the richer the organization will be," added Lavin.

The officers are: President Lauren Wurst, Vice Presidents Rachel Megna and Kristen Conner; Secretary Caroline Lavin; and Treasurer Karen Kodumal. Lordan and Dr. Mackey-Kallis, both communications professors at Villanova, are the faculty advisers.

Student Government encourages voting

By JENNIFER CASTELLI
News Editor

Transportation will be provided for students to and from the polls on Election Day Nov. 3, said Student Government President Ken Batchelor.

Three vans furnished by Student Activities will be running every hour on the half hour and at 1 p.m. from 7:30 a.m. to 8 p.m., said Pat Kennedy, a Student Government executive member and a liaison for the Clinton/Gore presidential campaign. Students can meet the buses at Bartley circle.

Student government sponsored a voter registration drive earlier in the year and they want students without cars who registered to have a way to get to the polls, said Batchelor.

"We feel that it is our role as Student Government to serve the students by helping them to get out and vote," said Batchelor.

"We want to make voting a lifetime habit for people. If we take them to vote now, hopefully they'll keep going back year after year," said Kennedy.

Students who have previously registered to vote can cast their votes at three different sites depending on your campus residence. Main campus residents will be voting at Radnor High School; south campus residents will be voting at Radnor House Condominiums; and Moriarty Hall residents will vote at the Agnes Irwin School.

Professor Chi discusses fate of communist China

By ANNIE BLOCK
Staff Reporter

Professor Yin Liang Chi has lived in China most of his life and has witnessed many of the political changes in his country. He is from Shang-hai and currently teaches Chinese culture and language at the University.

China is a communist country slowly moving towards democracy. Previous to communist control, China was led by Chiang Kai-shek of the Nationalist Party in 1926. During the late 1930s, the Japanese entered and controlled China for some time.

With the outbreak of World War II, China sided with the allies, and the Americans occupied some of Chinese territory. Then, in 1949, with the leadership of Mao Zedong, China turned communist.

Chi believes that China has one of the most promising economic futures. When thinking of a communist country, many people tend to associate it with hunger and poverty, but for China this is not the case.

According to the Asian Wall Street Journal, China's GNP growth for 1992 is 11.5 percent, and has an estimated 9.2 percent growth for 1993. This is remarkably good compared to other countries such as Japan, Chi said. Its approximate GNP growth for 1992 is only 1.8 percent.

China has now adopted a socialist market economy, Chi said. It is moving China more towards capitalism, which Chi does not completely support, but also is lending to a more democratic state. For this reason, the people of China strongly support the idea of a market economy, he added.

Culture, said Chi, is a large aspect of China. He believes that the existence of communist control has caused the loss of many of China's most important values. He lists five of these values, and believes they would save any troubled society: selflessness, kindness, sincerity, moderation and good actions.

Although some of these values are still practiced in China, Chi believes that because of communism, these ideas are forced on the people instead of coming from the heart.

China does not consider itself communist and many of the leaders ideologically label the country socialist; this is considered the first stage of communism, said Chi.

The leaders of China are politically traditional, but they are listening to the people, he said. They want to create a more open-minded China, a democratic China, but they want to move slowly, he added. They do not want chaos, like the incident of Tiananmen Square in 1989, and they are reluctant to lose their power, Chi said.

The Chinese government looks at and modifies everything before it reaches the public, said Chi. All the big issues are controlled; whatever the government believes to be safe and somewhat interesting is what is printed and televised.

He has noticed, however, more interest and discussion among his countrymen. People used to never talk about political issues with one another, everyone just accepted the way things were, but now people discuss important issues among family and friends. They discuss change," he said.

Western concepts had been unknown to China for many years. Now, some of these concepts are reaching China and making an impact.

Chi wants China to adopt the positive aggressiveness of the West and he admires how the West "gets things done."

Local book shop hosts readings

By TOM COLLINS
Editor in Chief

Borders Book Shop & Espresso Bar will host the second in a series of open readings for poetry and prose Nov. 2 at 7:30 p.m. The event, titled Campus Writers Open Reading, gives students a chance to read their work to an audience, according to Dr. Eli Goldblatt, a Villanova English professor and co-coordinator of the event.

The first open reading, held in early October, was attended by over 100 students from Villanova, Haverford and Rosemont, Goldblatt said. He expects "no less than 70 for this reading," with members from Swarthmore, Temple and possibly the University of Pennsylvania attending this time.

"The poetry read is really varied," Goldblatt said. "Some poems were personal, others sexual. We had some political poems. Even what the students read from varied. Some read them from manuscripts. A couple of people read from notepads. It was very energetic, and it should be again."

About half of the 27 presenters at the last meeting were from Villanova, Goldblatt said. He believes the Villanova community does not give itself enough credit for the creative writing and artistic talent present on campus.

"I really think there is a desire for more art on campus," Goldblatt said. "A lot of people on this campus are talented and interested that we don't recognize. A lot of people talk to me about there possibly being art and music courses here. This open reading provides students a chance to display their talents."

"I was pleasantly surprised at how many people seemed genuinely interested," said Karen Campbell, a junior English major who attended and read at the first meeting. "The students seemed really excited that Villanova did something like this."

"I thought it went very well," said Michael Knab, a senior Honors/English major. "A lot of people enjoy poetry at Villanova. There is a facade that says it isn't cool, but I know it's not the case."

Approximately 30 people will be able to read in the allotted time. The sign-up time is 7 p.m. Those who do not wish to read are invited to listen and enjoy, Goldblatt said.

Computer Fair

University Press Release

See the latest in personal computers, printers and software at the annual Computer Fair sponsored by UCIS on Tuesday, Nov. 3, in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m.

Representatives from a variety of computer companies, including IBM, Zenith Data Systems, Apple Computer and local computer stores will demonstrate their products and answer any questions.

Many different types of computers, printers and software will be displayed, including laptop computer systems, laser printers and popular software.

All Villanova students, faculty and staff can take advantage of discounts of up to 40 percent on selected computer equipment and software.

There will be demonstrations using computers for academic applications including gradebook programs, exam marking, database searching, graphics and electronic mail.

An information booth operated by UCIS will answer any questions concerning what kinds of computers are used at Villanova, how to order computer equipment and explain the meaning of any computer lingo you may hear at the fair.

Dept. reviews gender equity

The University also formed a task force led by Dr. Daniel Regan, of the philosophy department, to review gender equity and official guidelines once they are set up, Aceto added.

The Athletics Department is working to improve unsatisfactory conditions with the funds that are available, according to Aceto. The women's basketball team's locker room was recently moved to duPont with similar facilities as the men's basketball team's locker room.

The male to female ratio at Villanova is 55 to 45 percent, said Aceto. There are 13 male sports to the 11 female sports. "Some schools have dropped men's sports [to create a balance with the women's sports], but we hope to avoid that and instead maybe add two sports," Aceto said.

Title IX has a checklist to judge schools' compliance with this law. The areas include equal equipment and supplies, travel allowances, access to tutoring, coaching, locker rooms and facilities, medical service, housing and dining facilities, publicity, scholarships and recruitment.

Players on both the men's and women's teams receive $20 to $25 as daily travel allowances. The individual team determines its means of transportation, said Dowling. For instance, the men's basketball team chooses to fly, while the women's basketball team prefers riding in a bus, she added.

The division of the sport is taken into account when determining the amount of funding, said Aceto. The men's soccer team is in the Big East, which requires them to travel more than the women's soccer team, he said.

Teams are allowed to do fundraising, except in the stadium. "Both men's and women's teams raise money, but the women are not as agressive," Aceto said.

The men's and women's lacrosse teams clean the stadium to raise money for trips. "We have to be careful not to do the same fundraising as other sports," said Meg Harlan, coach of women's lacrosse.

Women's lacrosse is the youngest varsity sport, since it has been in existence for only four years. The Athletic Department will address the needs of women's lacrosse, such as locker room facilities, as soon as possible, said Dowling.

Another issue covered under Title IX involves academic assistance. Tutoring is available to student-athletes on an equal basis at the University. It is up to the students if they feel they must use it, Harlan said.

Equal numbers of coaches for men's and women's team also would be considered under Title IX. At the University, the men's sports have 12 full-time and six part-time coaches, while the women's teams have two full-time and five part-time coaches. The men's and women's track teams share three full-time coaches.

"I think track is one of the few sports where the women's team gets more publicity than the men's team," said Judy West, a track coach. Women's track is three time national champions and has sent five members to the 1992 Summer Olympic Games.

Seven of the men's full-time coaches instruct the football team, which eventually will have to be addressed, said Aceto, calling it the "biggest stumbling block" to the gender equality issue.

Dowling said the College Football Association is frightened, because they see gender equity as a direct attack on football. One team with about 100 players throws off the balance between the total number of male and female players, she added.

A solution to the gender equity issue would be capping the number of players for each sport, said Aceto. Set numbers of players would guarantee equal privileges for the men's and women's teams.

Setting the number of scholarships sounds agreeable, said Harry Perretta, head coach of women's basketball. Thirteen players would get scholarships, which is enough for the 12 to 15-member team, Perretta added.

If institutions are found to violate Title IX, their federal funding can be withdrawn. In all cases to date, schools found violating Title IX have agreed to comply to the law rather than lose funding.

tutes, facility improvements and capital projects, including construction of the Connelly Center, according to Stephen Bell, director of Public Relations.

The awards grant the professors discretionary funds for professional uses, including research and travel. Scanlon is presently doing research for a paper to be presented at his installation Dec. 2. The paper will focus on post-modernism and theology.

Caputo will present an oration on post-modernism and philosophy at his installation in February 1993.

Both Scanlon and Caputo teach humanities seminars. Next semester Scanlon also will teach a graduate course entitled Theology of Freedom.

"Villanova emphasizes the disciplines of philosophy and religious studies," according to the Mission Statement. These two departments are "central to the mission of the University as a Catholic and Augustinian University," Scanlon said.

"Villanova has come of age in the last 10 years because the world around us has changed, and the academic market has allowed Villanova to be more selective," said Caputo.

Once the professors retire, their awarded titles will be passed on to the next recipients of the endowed chairs.

Father Shawn Tracy to lead retreat for disabled

University Press Release

In keeping with the spirit of Thanksgiving, the Rev. Shawn Tracy, O.S.A., director of Villanova University's Campus Ministry Office, will lead a special Handicapped Encounter Christ (HEC) retreat for disabled people on Nov. 20, 21 and 22.

With its local base on the Villanova campus, the Villanova HEC chapter is the central organization for the Delaware Valley. Retreats are held at the Variety Club in Trooper, Pa., where the facility is fully accessible for disabled individuals.

The HEC retreat addresses the needs of men and women 17 years or older with physical and visual disabilities, whose physical needs prevent them from participating in a standard religious retreat. HEC is open to able-bodied individuals as well. HEC does not teach doctrine but the spiritual activities match those of other retreats — Masses, liturgies, songs, confession. The HEC retreat is different from more traditional retreats, however, because it explores, in the context of faith and in a communal atmosphere, the joys and struggles faced by persons with disabilities, Tracy pointed out.

"HEC is a liberating, celebratory experience," said Tracy. "HEC challenges people with disabilities to ignore the attitudinal barriers that society erects towards them."

The retreat weekends are designed to stimulate participants who nurture their relationship with God by meeting and communicating as equals. Retreatants take part in informal roundtable forum discussions where they sit, listen, talk and pray. Non-verbal creative communication through art, music, and other media also encourages freer expression.

"It is a rare opportunity in the lives of these folks when they find their differences affirmed and respected," said Tracy, who has been involved in the HEC program on campus since its inception at Villanova in 1977.

About 70 individuals, many from out of state, have participated in past retreats. An equal number of able-bodied volunteers are needed to assist with this year's HEC retreat.

AIDS awareness

video geared to suit campus needs," said Ferrier.

The AIDS Task Force has sponsored poster and button campaigns "to make the Villanova community aware that we are on campus to answer questions," said Ferrier. The posters and buttons have received a positive response from the campus, said Ferrier. Phillips said the posters and buttons have generated "a mixed response from the campus community. Some people are taking it seriously and some are misinformed. Also, many people are not afraid of AIDS which genuinely surprised me."

Bonas said a second poster will be distributed shortly. "A series of six posters will be distributed over the course of the year," said Phillips.

"One in every 30 college students is HIV infected. We want to make a difference, inform people and be there for students. Students usually find their peers more approachable and are more willing to talk openly with them. Through the Office of Student Activities, we would like campus organizations to request our services," said Phillips.

"Villanova students are generally nervous concerning the increase in HIV. It is unfortunate that the need for AIDS education at Villanova is more urgent now than five or six years ago. Data about HIV growth hit home this point and the administration here is dedicated and committed to the permanence of the AIDS Task Force on campus," said Ferrier.

Everyone has been very understanding, said Evenson, who noted that friends began dropping off clothes, notebooks and money the day after the fire.

Norkevicius, Evenson and Gerdoney shared the home with two other junior students, Karen Abad and Kim Bell. Although they are uncertain where they will live, they are staying with friends for now, said Evenson.

"I don't know what would have happened if she [Norkevicius] had woken up five minutes later," said Evenson. "I'm thankful we're all okay."

night," according to Vince Nicastro, director of Ticket Information.

The Halloween theme will include performing magicians, a costume contest and haunted house, along with the inner squad game and introduction of the men's and women's basketball teams and coaches.

It is important for the players to know that they have a large support group from the beginning of the season to the end.
Jeff Bernstein, Sports Information director

St. Joseph's basketball program also will include a presentation of the Big Five trophies and a social for season ticket holders.

This is the third year St. Joseph will hold the event. "Since we have no football team and no Homecoming, this is the fall event that has substituted for that," Nicastro said.

A crowd of 10,000 is expected at the University of Kentucky's 11th annual Big Blue Madness. The theme for Halloween night is "Big BOO Madness — A Monster Bash."

The event will begin at 11:30 p.m. with the rally and entertainment. Video screens will be installed inside Memorial Coliseum for fans to view a musical video spotlighting the 1991-92 Wildcats' season.

Doors close once the Coliseum reaches maximum capacity. Last year, fans lined up 36 hours before the event started, according to the Sports Communications office.

The University of Massachusetts at Amherst also expects a "packed" Curry Hicks Cage for the rally, said Ruthie Drew of Sports Information.

The program includes contests and prizes. Then, the lights are turned off and the players are spotlighted with a brief synopsis of each one.

This is UMass' fourth year with John Calipari as the men's basketball head coach, Drew said. The night will end at about 2 a.m., she added.

that the debt is "more than you or I could spend for three years of college."

Students expressed disappointment over the closing. "It's too bad," said junior Kristen Morgan. "We've been going there since freshman year."

"I met my girlfriend there three years ago," said another student who wished to remain anonymous. "It's sad that we won't be able to go back there in years to come."

Other students were concerned about what will happen in other bars. "Now Smokes and Kelly's are going to be way too crowded," said senior Nani Ruan.

"It's always sad when a local business closes its doors especially in a recession," said the Rev. John Stack, O.S.A., dean of Students. He thought that Barleycorn's was a nice place for students to congregate. "I know students will be disappointed, but they will find other places to go," said Stack.

Barleycorn's will be missed greatly, said another student. "No more happy hour, shooting pool downstairs and dancing to the music of D.J. Greg."

"Oh well," he said with a sigh, "We'll miss you too, Barleycorn's ... but look out Erin Pub because here we come."

Lindback Teaching Award

Who: All Sophomores, Juniors, Seniors

Where: During Pre-Registration

When: Nov. 2-Nov. 13

Why: Two Lindback awards of $1,000.00 each are given annually for distinguished teaching at Villanova University. Undergraduates (except freshmen) and faculty members will vote for three nominees each. The names of four candidates receiving the largest number of student votes and the three receiving the most votes in the faculty canvass will be sent to a five-member committee of previous Lindback Award winners. This panel will rank the finalists on the basis of statements submitted by the seven finalists dealing with goals and methods of their teaching. The President of the University will select the two Lindback Award winners based on the list of nominees and the committee's recommendations.

Previous Winners of the Lindback Awards are:

Armenti, Angelo, Jr. (Phy)
Athinaios, Andreas (Eco)
Clarke, James J. (Eco)
Clay, Alvin A. (Acc)

Which candidate? You decide.

After much thought and heavy debate, the Villanovan has decided not to endorse a presidential candidate. We feel that since you pull the lever, you must make a responsible decision based on your own criteria.

Frankly, we are searching ourselves. We find ourselves in the same boat as many of you — young, full of questions and deserving debate. As individuals, we have spent the past months scrutinizing the candidates, defining and redefining our opinions and forming some conclusions.

USA Today made no endorsement, and cynics scoffed that the editors lacked courage to take a stand. Others complained that they shirked a journalistic responsibility. Maybe these charges were valid regarding a major newspaper.

Still, we subscribe to the same argument the editors of USA Today outlined: it's your decision. We think that you should be in good position to make a decision by now. After all, there have been opportunities for you to become informed.

Connelly Center sells daily newspapers that not only contain editorials but report what the candidates actually say. The library holds partisan journals that articulate powerful conservative and liberal opinions. Your peers have gathered on campus to offer their opinions, and many have shared their choices with you in our editorial pages.

There are two things we say here with certainty and force. First, make conscious and deliberate decisions. Don't base your choices on empty rhetoric or inflammatory charges between candidates. (The posters sponsored by Villanovans for Clinton/Gore that say "Think about the nine El Salvadorans who were killed by guns supplied by President Bush" exemplify a sensationalized sound bite.)

Second, make sure you vote. None of this matters if you don't pull the lever.

Midnight Madness brings excitement

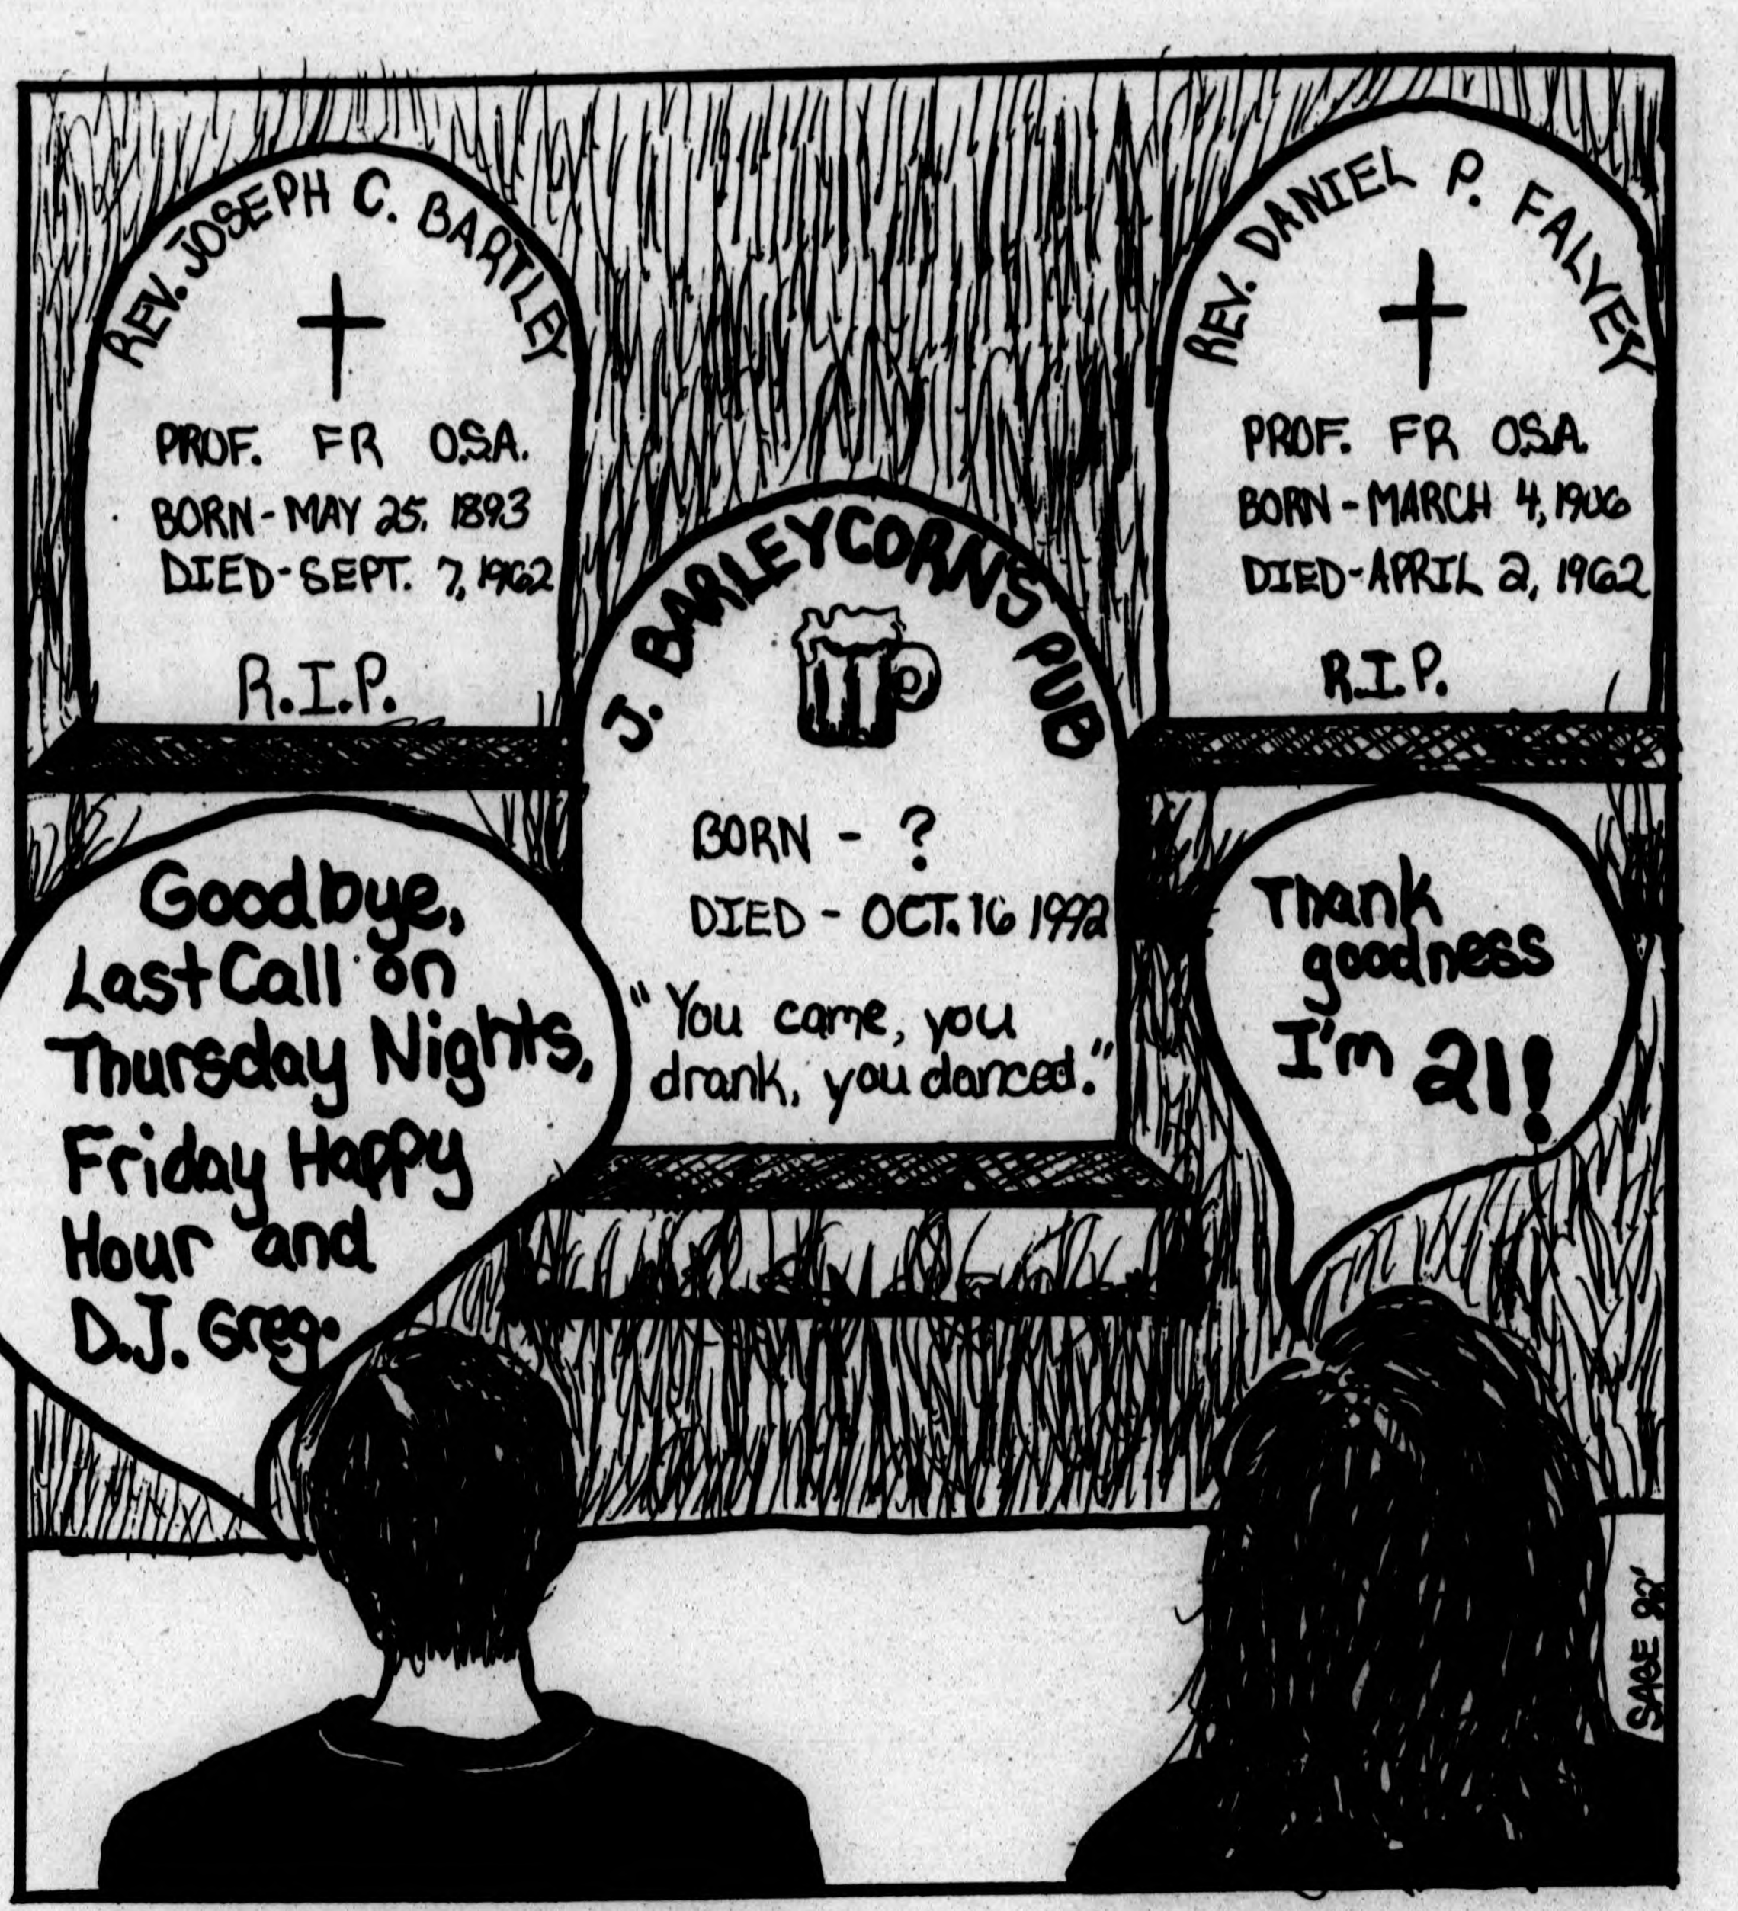
An annual Villanova tradition has returned. This time, though, it will begin differently. Midnight tomorrow, the 1992-93 edition of the Villanova men's basketball team will officially begin practice. And for those who consider college basketball and their beloved Wildcats a way of life, the first annual Midnight Madness provides a chance to support their team and welcome another exciting year.

Appropriately named, Midnight Madness will be an event. It will allow students an opportunity to display their school spirit. The basketball program, Student Government and the Student Programming Council among others coordinated the event. Planned events include student basketball contests, giveaways and the music of Dr. Dre of "Yo MTV Raps." The doors to another season of Wildcat basketball in duPont Pavilion open at 10 p.m.

Midnight Madness also gives the students a chance to greet a whole new basketball team during a 20-minute scrimmage. New Head Coach Steve Lappas, who brought the event with him from his coaching job at Manhattan, and his enthusiastic staff will be introduced to the students for the first time. Lappas brings optimism and a new style to the school. An assistant on the 1985 national championship team, Lappas returns to 'Nova for his dream job.

Also, new faces abound in the 'Nova lineup. Jonathan Haynes, Kerry Kittles, Jamie Gregg, Eric Eberz and Roscoe Harris are newcomers who should have an impact. With experienced players like star Lance Miller, James Bryson and Calvin Byrd, Villanova has a chance to be very exciting and successful.

The madness begins tomorrow.



LETTERS

Don't blame Bush, beware of Clinton

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to a letter that appeared in the Oct. 9 issue of the Villanovan. In a letter to the editor, Paul Abeln and his crew cite Jonathon Kozol and his book Savage Inequalities to validate their support for Bill Clinton. Kozol alleges that the Reagan/Bush Administrations have set the United States back 50 years in social policy regarding civil rights for ethnic minorities. The facts refute Kozol's allegations. For example, during the 1980s the number of black families earning $50,000 or more increased by 30 percent, while the black middle class increased by almost one-fifth, to 4.3 million families. During the Reagan/Bush years, Hispanic household incomes rose by 67 percent, and Hispanic poverty levels and unemployment fell. In contrast, in Bill Clinton's Arkansas, at least 80 percent of black families have incomes less than $25,000 and 25 percent have incomes less than $5,000.

Once again citing Kozol, Abeln and friends charge that American education has been "set back 100 years." On the contrary, President Bush has taken the lead in the effort to revolutionize the American school system. Bush, along with the nation's governors designed the "America 2000" strategy which provides for the testing of students to meet world-class standards in core academic subjects. Bush believes the goal of education should be to teach students, not to keep education bureaucrats in business. Meanwhile, back in Arkansas, as a result of Bill Clinton's education policies, three out of four Arkansas high school graduates require remedial courses as college freshmen, twice the national average.

While Abeln and crew assert that Bush "sabotaged the Rio Summit," Bill Clinton's record on the environment pales in comparison with the real accomplishments of George Bush. To begin with, Bush believes that environmental protection and economic growth must go hand-in-hand. Therefore while balancing the needs of our industry and economy, President Bush proposed and signed the Clean Air Act, the most comprehensive and innovative pollution legislation in the world. In addition, President Bush has added almost 8 million acres to our nation's parks, forests, wildlife refuges and wilderness system.

On the other hand, Bill Clinton's environmental record is shameful. The 1992 "Green Index" ranks Arkansas dead last in the nation for the quality of state environmental initiatives. Clinton's state ranked last in automobile gas mileage, 45th in energy use and production, and 42nd in transportation efficiency. In all fairness there are a few categories in which Clinton's Arkansas ranks near the top. His state is ranked 3rd and 9th respectively in per capita toxic chemical releases to surface water and the discharge of ozone depleting emissions. In an attempt to compensate for this pathetic environmental record, Clinton chose a radical environmentalist running mate, Al Gore, who advocates the abolition of the internal combustion engine and cites the automobile as America's greatest national security threat.

While it is very impressive that Abeln and friends managed to read Kozol's book between the four of them, perhaps they should have invested a little more time researching the issues. Bill Clinton maintains he wants to do for America what he has done for Arkansas. Can we really afford this? George Bush is a proven leader who possesses the knowledge, integrity and experience necessary to guide America into the 21st century. He deserves our support and the opportunity to once again lead our nation for the next four years.

Why deface logo?

To the Editor:

I was interested to read of the "modified" Sesquicentennial logo in the Oct. 9 edition. I'm glad students see the importance of questioning administration policies.

However, it is important that they realize that, as the Rev. Edmund Dobbin, O.S.A., stated, "You need to spend money to raise money." I think it would be interesting to find out how many of the five students receive some source of financial aid from the university. It is also important not to bite the hand that feeds you.

Clinton offers us reforms that put people first

By PATRICK B. KENNEDY

Let me ask you a few questions: Do you really care about the environment, homelessness, education and human rights? Do you want to change our economy from a defense-based one into a peacetime one? Do you want health care reform? Do you want all Americans to stop working more for less pay?

If you answered affirmatively to any of these questions, then you would be performing a great disservice to yourself and your country in voting President George Bush back into office. In the case of the environment, nearly every leader of every country, including Fidel Castro, gathered in Rio this summer to put an end to the devastation of our environment. After finally deciding to attend, Bush used his strength to weaken any treaty he signed. Furthermore, Bush only spent 54 hours in Rio, thus showing his blatant disregard for environmental concern of U.S. citizens as well as his claim to be the "Environmental President."

As for the issue of homelessness, the figures are much more disheartening. When Ronald Reagan took over, approximately 38 cents for every military dollar was spent on low income housing. By 1985, 19 cents was spent for every military dollar. By 1990, the Bush Administration had decreased that amount to 3 cents for every military dollar. Currently, there is a 12-year waiting list for low-income housing. Are these people really homeless by choice? The only solutions offered by the Federal Government are band-aid, short-term solutions.

Education in America is also dismal. Funding for the Head Start program is limited to 4-year olds. What about the others? Kids in East St. Louis, Ill. have to share books for their classes, which take place in gymnasium locker rooms at times. The state has much of the blame for circumstances such as this, but the White House is also to blame.

President Bush and his Administration have become violators of human rights, both directly and indirectly. Bush has provided El Salvador and Nicaragua with money for arms that are used to fight off so-called "communist rebels." In 1989, six Jesuit missionaries were killed in El Salvador by guns supplied by Bush's Administration. We have sent billions of dollars to these countries and many more to postnatally abort thousands. In voting for George Bush, you will be allowing these socially unjust deaths to continue.

Bush has failed to convert our defense-based economy into a peacetime one. He has failed to offer tax incentives to businesses for reinvestment, rather he has given them unfair tax breaks assuming that they will reinvest. Many never do. Let us make those earning over $200,000 a year pay their fair share.

As for the health care issue, Bush has given tax breaks for drug companies. He has let health care costs skyrocket due to the strong insurance lobbyists. We must make health care "a right, not a privilege," according to Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton.

Finally, we need to offer job training for high school and college dropouts so they can support themselves instead of having to be supported by welfare checks. By doing so, we can cut crime rates drastically. By providing educational job-training we will give these Americans a second chance.

To summarize, if you care anything about the aforementioned issues, you would not vote for any candidate other than Bill Clinton. Clinton offers us reform that will put people first. Bush has neglected Americans for too long. He has imposed social injustices by way of his bureaucratic administration. We cannot afford four more years of social injustice. We cannot afford to put George Bush back in the Oval Office.

Now for those of you voting for Texas billionaire Ross Perot, you are obviously convinced by Perot's oversimplistic view of the economic mess our country is experiencing. According to the New York Times, in its endorsement of Bill Clinton, Perot supporters are "romantic voters who wish politics could be as simple as business and who wish bitter differences could be resolved on command." You seem to have this feeling that Perot can clean up the mess in Washington and end the stalemate. On the contrary, he wil stalemate Congress even more.

In conclusion, Clinton is the only candidate who offers a viable solution to the problems that the United States is facing. His biggest flaw, according to many, is his tendency to be ambiguous when challenged on questions of his personal life. Nevertheless, his devotion to human rights, his desire to put people first and his vision to change America for the better make Clinton the only choice for president. That is why the New York Times, The Philadelphia Inquirer, The Philadelphia Daily News, The New York Daily News, The Boston Globe, The Washington Post and many other newspapers have endorsed Clinton. They are obviously well educated about Clinton and the other candidates. They know which candidate has the most to offer the people of America. Now you do, too.

Trickle-down economics work well

By MAT TOENNIESSEN

Bill Clinton and the Democratic Party in general can be heard to claim over and over that during the Reagan and Bush presidencies "the rich got richer, and the poor got poorer." The fact is that this is simply not true.

First, there were more millionaires created during the 1980s than any other time in U.S. history, but these new rich found that they also paid a much higher percentage of their income in taxes at the same time the Reagan tax cuts of 1982 took millions of poor off the tax rolls completely.

Second, the official designation of "poor" in this country is misleading. Poverty in this country is listed as someone who makes $13,500 or under. However, this figure does not include as income government spending on the "poor" from welfare, food stamps, Aid to Families With Dependent Children (AFDC), housing subsidies or Medicare/Medicaid. If these benefits were counted as income, as they should be in official figures, then the average "poor" person in this country would have total income of between $24,000-$27,000 per year! In fact, during the Reagan/Bush years of 1980-1990 non-cash spending on the poor, as described above, climbed from $18 billion in 1980 to $139 billion in 1990. If these benefit amounts were officially recognized as income by the government there would be far fewer people designated as poor in this country.

Recently, Harvard University completed a study for the U.S. government that looked at the economic results of each president since 1949. This took into account inflation change, unemployment change, interest rate change and the Misery Index (inflation added to unemployment). In this "Report Card on the Presidents," Ronald Reagan came out on top, with rankings of 1 and 2 for his two terms. George Bush ranked fifth, and Jimmy Carter ranked eleventh, the worse score. This points out that Bill Clinton is wrong when he says that George Bush has the worse economic record of any president since World War II.

What really bothers me about the "rich get richer, the poor get poorer" attack is that we have now made it wrong for people to become rich. Once upon a time in this country people strove to become rich and were applauded for it. Now we chastise and attack those who succeed in this country. We overtax incentive to invest and earn through a high capital gains tax rate, which effects all people through housing sale taxes and lack of business investment, and we refuse to acknowledge that "trickle down" economics does and has worked, as the Reagan/Bush years have shown. In fact, from 1982 to 1991 exports increased 92.6%, GNP increased 32%, employment 19.5% and per-capita income 18.8%. In addition, 18 million new jobs were created during Reagan's years. This hardly constitutes a failure for trickle down economics.

Today we yell and scream about an unemployment rate of 7.8%. What we should remember is that this means the 92.2% of the people who want to work in this country are working. Plus the unemployment figures also include the 1 million new illegal immigrants added to the country's population yearly, so small increases are normal.

It is time for Bill Clinton, the Democrats and the liberal media to stop lying and tell the truth about what most economists believe were the best 12 years of economic growth in the country, with 92 straight months of economic expansion — the Ronald Reagan and George Bush presidencies.

Vote for Bush because Clinton lies and Perot buys

By STEVE ARANEO

If you ask most Villanova students why they are voting for Ross Perot or Bill Clinton, you might hear something like, "Because he is the only one who can save our country," or "We let the Republicans destroy America for 12 years. Now it is time for a change." The two words "save" and "change" have been a major part of these two campaigns, but they should not be.

Perot and Clinton have done a good job convincing us how bad things are. After their third debate, I began to wonder if ending it all right then and there was my best alternative. I wondered if anyone could really help me, or if we were all beyond the point of no return.

After all, that is why Perot is here anyway. The American people called on him to save us, right? America is a "ticking bomb," he says. At this point, it really would not surprise me to see "Ross Perot for President — Save the U.S.A.," on a campaign poster.

And Clinton, well how else could a lowly Arkansas governor rise so high so fast than by convincing us that we are on the brink of disaster? Can't we decide for ourselves how we are doing? It is something we have to answer every day anyway. I feel like the next time I ask someone, "How are you?," they might respond, "Just ask Bill Clinton."

Clinton stares. He smiles. He says, "Now it is time for a change," and we believe. I could almost understand if the candidates were running for office in Bosnia. It is definitely safe to say it is time for change in Bosnia. But how much do we really want to change America?

Of course there are things that need improving, but this is still the place to be in the world. You do not see homeless Americans running across the Mexican border in search of a better life. The unemployed do not head straight for Japan or Germany to find a job. If things here are so bad then why is it that every day people migrate here from all over the world, while for millions of others living here is just a dream? Why are we still the best country in the world despite our recent economic problems? Clinton or Perot can not help you with that question because the answer is George Bush.

In any election, the challenging candidates blame the incumbent for all the bad and do not ever give credit for the good accomplished during his or her term. Why are we believing them this time?

Can we actually blame the recession on a Republican admnistration and not give credit for the end of the cold war to 12 years of Republican leadership? Apparently we can when we have a president who has not explained to us why we are in a recession, and who is too modest to take credit for literally ending the threat of nuclear disaster to this country.

As an international business major here at Villanova, I feel it is my obligation to let my fellow classmates know how things are in the rest of the world right now, and how that affects the United States. Clinton would give his last grey hair to convince us that the president is responsible for the recession, but it simply is not true.

In case you did not know, the entire world is economically depressed right now. We are doing better than most, so of course we can buy more foreign products than other countries can of ours. How can we possibly export to countries whose citizens are having trouble putting food on their children's plate?

So there is a trade deficit. Big deal. The way out of this recession is to get Europe and our other markets out of depression. That is exactly what President Bush is doing. Clinton says if Bush worried as much about his own country as he does about the rest of the world we would all be better off. I could not think of a more ignorant thing to say. If we listened to Bill, Sadaam Hussein and Mikhail Gorbachev might just be the world's most feared leaders right now.

Do not listen to Ross Perot's "ticking bomb" absurdity. The reason we have a huge national debt is because of the defense spending of the Reagan-Bush administrations. This caused the Russians to go bankrupt just trying to keep up with us, thus ending the Cold War. I wonder if Perot understands what the debt would be had we gone to war with Russia.

Now that the cold war is over and we cut defense spending, Clinton has the nerve to blame Bush for the loss of jobs. George Bush was the one who is saving the defense contractors by negotiating such deals as the one between Saudi Arabia and MCondal-Douglass, which alone save us over 10,000 jobs.

My fellow Americans, we cannot blame the president for a problem the world is facing. We can't let Bill Clinton lie his way into office, and we cannot let Perot buy the presidency with his commercials either. George Bush earned his way to the top. He ended the cold war. He is keeping this country going. And if this country does need to be saved, President Bush is the man for the job.

Match Your Wits Against the Political Scientist

Test your political savvy! Predict which presidential candidates will win each state and which candidates will emerge victorious in a selected few senatorial races plus the voting percentage that independent candidate Ross Perot will receive. Complete below.

On the map place a B for Bush, a C for Clinton, or a P for Perot within each state (or box for that state) according to which presidential candidate you feel will carry that state.

Return your scoresheet to the Political Science Department, 202 Saint Augustine Center for the Liberal Arts before 5 p.m., Monday, Nov. 2, 1992.

Prize: $25 and an acknowledgement in the Villanovan to any challenger who beats the best score of any political science professor.

Student says, "Get off that beaten path."

By PETE SHAUGER

In a world where even your best friend has been known to flush the toilet while you were taking a shower, trust is a rare thing. Fingers can hardly be counted on anymore. Things are not as they seem. Nothing is concrete.

Nothing is concrete? Why, that's absurd. Here at Villanova, everything is concrete. Though our campus cannot boast of having unruly city streets and crime laden alleys we can surely be proud of the hundreds of cute little concrete paths entwining our campus.

For those of you who are not familiar with the intricate Villanova path system, a "path" is a strategically placed series of concrete slabs laid down for the purpose of cutting corners. Here at Villanova, the shortest distance between two points is not a straight line, it is a path. However, for reasons unexplained, possibly a little too much of that "altered" wine, the original path architects created no walkway that led to anywhere of importance. Therefore, for over 100 years, countless baby paths have been built so that people could actually walk in the direction they were headed.

Oh, I just hate corners. If it weren't for some of these paths, I might have to walk an extra 14 feet out of my way to get to my destination. But there aren't always concrete paths that I can travel on. Once out of sheer laziness I was forced to round a corner, and I fell into a deep state of depression and misery until my fearless friend, Chad, rescued me and put me back on the concrete. And herein lies a problem: sometimes in order to avoid really sharp corners, we must get off the established path and wander aimlessly. We must cut corners at all costs, however, without paths we are lost.

Fortunately, in order to prevent the aimless wandering of the students (there is already plenty of that), more and more paths are being built or are being planned to be built. Several weeks before it was constructed, I told Chad and my other friend Tom (Tom — making his debut appearance in a 'Student Says' column) that I had a premonition that there would be yet another path in front of St. Augustine's. And sure enough my dream became reality.

Don't be misled, though. Most of these paths do not actually lead anywhere, just to other paths. It is still purely luck if you make it to your destination, but you don't have the messy problem of aimlessly wandering, or the awful after taste.

But this is merely the fluffy, cosmetic aspect. The Villanova path, unlike typical paths which selfishly take you where you want to go, takes on an environmental and spiritual responsibility. Before they pour the concrete, they wait to see where potential paths may be laid. Usually, a trail of trampled grass is an indication that people have been walking on it. As a result, if no concrete path is laid, then someone must reseed and fertilize it every season. The concrete path protects the unborn grass seeds because the seeds are not planted at all. Therefore the absence of grass promotes a celibate campus. Don't you get it? No one wants students fertilizing each other, so an example is set by pouring concrete over the grass. Kind of makes me shudder. Not only are the paths telling us where we should walk, but they are subliminally telling us that if we have sex we will be buried alive in concrete. I am surprised the entire campus has not been paved yet.

Inevitably, we must yield to the power of the path. It knows the way to our hearts and yet has the power to guide us to the toilet. We must not speak maliciously or joke about the path. The path senses insincerity through the callouses on our feet and will not hesitate in tripping us. On a lighter note, selecting the right path can also save you from working too hard. Isn't it interesting to note that the base of the word apathy is path. Coincidence? I think not.

Pete Shauger, English major, the infamous "Student says."

COMMENTARY

Don't let midterm returns give you an ulcer.

By LAINIE CURTO

Many students learned a vital survival skill this past week at Villanova. In addition to the exhausting pre-break week of mid-term exams, students must also learn to deal with those somewhat less-than-desirable grades that get turned back to us, and which seem to mimick our very attempt at success. As a freshman, I can probably relate to the distraught, frustrated and utterly helpless feeling that comes over a student as they stare at that one sneering, cold mark on a test page that will become a permanent blemish on a previously flawless record.

After several desperate attempts to obtain a higher grade, whatever the case may be, you come to the realization that what is done is done, and no matter how persistent your efforts, you can not turn back the clock. In this experience, which, unfortunately, has not been limited to one single incident, I have found myself resentfully muttering the all too familiar phrase, "It's just not fair." You might even say that it has become an integral part of my vocabulary, which seems to be steadily expanding with the introduction of a variety of colorful words and phrases, due to my "broadening eductional horizon.".

But even my own constant insistence that every teacher is out to sabotage my future, a conclusion that has gained great support among many of my friends, cannot allow me to pass off my less than adequate grades as mere circumstance, and claim to be a "victim of the system." Instead I have found great comfort in the popular excuse that lays blame for failure on the student, the real deservee.

"It's really very simple Mom. You see, it's just that I overstudied." Or a related spinoff of that, "I studied all the wrong stuff — I spent hours covering all the material that the teacher went over and it wasn't even on the test, can you believe it?" Frankly, no.

Skimming over notes 10 minutes before the test is not exactly "covering the material." In fact, the only thing you are likely to accomplish is to totally confuse yourself at a point when you simply do not have time to "go back" and figure out where you went wrong. As soon as you sit down to take a test, you know if you're prepared or not. All your knowledge, or rather the lack of, slaps you upside the head and leaves you with either a great sense of security, or in a flailing, panic-stricken cold sweat, respectively.

Being the optimistic individuals that we are, however, we inevitably continue to believe that maybe, just maybe, "I pulled this one off." In fact, this futile attempt to reject the reality of failure does not cease to permeate our thoughts until we actually receive the final grade and come to grips with the harsh truth. I say harsh because in a (quote) "highly competitive" university, which costs over $15,000 a year to attend and which will ultimately be the foundation of our job base, every grade is crucial. At least, that is what I used to think.

Until very recently I had this great fear of failing, a feeling that one failing grade on a test would directly affect my future and set me back, irreparably, in my academic success here at Villanova. What I failed to realize, until after I went through all the famous excuses and added a few more to the list, was that it is all right to mess up once in a while. It took hours of pointless "what if's" and "if only I had's" to put things into perspective and accept the fact that I won't always do the best, and I will, at times, fail.

It is times like these that the true test comes to the student — the test of character. Smiles come easy when everything's going your way, but just how pleasant are you to be around after an "F" comes back on a test you studied all night for? For most, this is a time when experienced friends know to keep their distance. Although you know that you're bound to make mistakes, even when you have tried your best, (after all, "to err is human ...",) you continue to mercilessly batter yourself until you feel the punishment is sufficient.

Depending on your personal level of self-persecution, this torture, which seems to be typical of most over achievers, can last for hours, days, or even weeks. In most cases the student will survive such an attack with little permanent damage, save possible exhaustion and frustration, due to the hysterical rage that usually accompanies such academic trauma.

In all seriousness, however, this type of compulsiveness can lead to anxiety, high blood pressure, ulcers and, in extreme cases, neurosis disorders. Speaking not as an advisor, or a psychological counselor, but as a fellow over-achiever, I suggest you save yourself a little mental and emotional hell, and relax. Grades are, of course, important, but one "screw-up" isn't going to ruin your life.

We all came to Villanova to learn, with hopes that our knowledge would help us to attain the goals we have set for ourselves later in life. One lesson our professors cannot teach us, however, is how to deal with that problem which confronts us most often — discouragement. We have always been taught to learn from our mistakes, and now is the time that we must put this advice to work, for our own salvation.

We cannot continue to dwell on past errors, academic or otherwise, for to do so would to become, in effect, our own worst enemy.

So, with this in mind, try to keep stress at a minimum during this mid-term-return season, and turn this hell week into a swell week ... and have a Happy Halloween!

For information on these and other scholarship opportunities, please contact the financial aid office.

Work in Germany for One Year

Positions are available for graduating seniors from any of the Villanova colleges to work as English assistants in Catholic boarding schools in southern Germany. Some familiarity with German is among the criteria, but this is for your own comfort. It is not necessary for the intrinsic work. This is a wonderful opportunity. For details contact Dr. Van Allen, Religious Studies Department, ext. 4766. Formal applications should be completed and submitted by Dec. 1, 1992.

Rare Books Exhibit

As part of the Sesquicentennial commemoration, an exhibit of early printed works by St. Augustine and other early eminent Augustinians is on display on the second floor of Falvey Memorial Library until Dec. 15. The exhibit is free and open to the public during the library's regular business hours. For information, call the Special Collections Librarian at 645-4273.

Volunteer Panama

Over the Spring Break, Villanova Volunteers of the Campus Ministry office will again organize a volunteer service trip to rural Panama for Engineering majors or fluent (or very good) Spanish-speaking students, faculty and staff. Work will be in design and heavy building/construction. There will be four preparation meetings (attendance required) for those going: Nov. 16 at 5 p.m. in Haverford Room; Dec. 14, Jan. 25 and Feb. 15, 6-7:30 p.m.

Mexico Volunteer Trip

Over the Spring Break 1993, Villanova Volunteers will coordinate a volunteer service trip to Merida, Mexico (the Yucatan). There will be four preparation meetings (required attendance) on Nov. 4, Dec. 2, Jan. 27 and Feb. 17 (all 7-9 p.m. in St. Rita Chapel). For complete information, please be sure to attend the Nov. 4 meeting. Sponsored by Campus Ministry office.

Latest Screen Version of Hamlet

The 1990 film adaptation of Shakespeare's "Hamlet," featuring Mel Gibson, Glenn Close and Alan Bates, is the upcoming offering in the Fall 1992 Cultural Film Series, "From Stage to Screen." It will have four screenings in the Connelly Center Cinema, on Villanova's main campus: Nov. 7 at 7 p.m.; Nov. 8 at 3:30 and 7 p.m.; and Nov. 9 at 7 p.m. Admission is $2 for Villanova University undergraduates and $3 for the general public. For more information, please call 645-4750.

Volunteers Needed

Students, faculty and neighbors are needed to work on the Handicapped Encounter Christ (HEC) retreats. These retreats offer a Christian faith experience for disabled adults who otherwise would not be able to participate in a retreat because of their need for physical assistance. Please contact Margie Kernicky in Campus Ministry at 645-4080. The retreat takes place from Nov. 20-22. An informational meeting will be held on Nov. 2 at 7:30 p.m. and a pre-HEC Liturgy on Nov. 17 at Margie Kernicky's apartment: Radnor House 117, 1030 E. Lancaster Ave., Rosemont.

Scripture Reflection

Get to know other students. Take some time to reflect. Discover how the Gospel speaks in new and exciting ways. Our meetings are relaxed and informal, Mondays 8 p.m. St. Rita Chapel. Sponsored by Campus Ministry.

Pray the Rosary

Pray the Rosary with us. All are welcome to join us Monday through Friday at 4:30 p.m. in the Main Chapel.

Kurosawa Epic to be Screened

"Ran," Akira Kurosawa's spellbinding blend of Shakespeare's "King Lear" and 16th-century feudal Japan, is the upcoming feature in the Fall, 1992 Cultural Film Series, "From Stage to Screen." The 1985 historical epic will have four showings in the Connelly Center Cinema at Villanova: Oct. 31 at 7 p.m.; Nov. 1 at 3:30 and 7 p.m.; and Nov. 2 at 7 p.m Tickets are $2 for Villanova undergrads and $3 for the general public. For more information call 645-4750.

Students travel and study overseas

By MARYANN PULLIA
Special to the Villanovan

Buckingham Palace is one of the many famous sites international students can find in London.

There are study abroad programs all over the world, spanning from Europe to Asia and including semesters at sea. Some programs offer internships that allow students to gain practical experience in the working world, while others offer a diverse curriculum. Villanova University offers several study abroad programs, and students can choose from hundreds of other programs sponsored by universities all over the United States.

When caught up in the busy life of a college campus, a student might ask the question "Why study abroad?" I spent last semester in London, England and another month in Siena, Italy. I now realize most students can never understand the meaning of study-abroad until they experience it themselves.

The changes a student goes through during a semester abroad are overwhelming. It can be compared to the change of adjusting from high school to college, facing new experiences and challenges.

"It allows you to see how you do on your own, in a completely new environment," said Ann Hammer, a senior who spent a semester in Australia. "It opens your eyes to a new way of life and changes the way you see things at home."

Often students feel that it would be a great experience to study and travel overseas, but they feel that a semester away from home is too long. They worry about missing their families and friends and think they will be missing out on activities at school. The biggest fear is being homesick. Since I grew up only an hour from Villanova, I had never been away from home for an extended period of time. When I was accepted in Boston University's internship program in London, I began to get nervous. My plans included the spring semester in London in addition to almost six weeks of traveling.

The first four days in London were the worst. I knew only three other students from Villanova on the program, but they were just acquaintances at the time. I thought I was alone. You just can not pick up the phone and call across the Atlantic — it tends to get expensive.

Fortunately, my homesickness passed quickly and I realized that most students were experiencing the same thing. I made some friends in class and we started to explore London. I ended up extending my stay in Europe an extra month and I enrolled in Villanova's summer program in Siena, Italy. My classes in Siena were excellent, especially the Renaissance Art History class, which occasionally was held in museums throughout Northern Italy.

The best thing I gained from my overseas experience is confidence. I feel like I can do anything now. The day I arrived in London, there was no one to meet me at the airport. The program had sent information, which included special papers to get through customs and directions to the school using the train system and the underground. I was so nervous, I didn't think I could find the school.

After being there for a few months things changed. I traveled through Europe using the Eurail system with different groups of people. Many times, due to jumbled plans or travel confusion, I ended up on my own. If someone were to tell me a year ago that I would travel through countries on my own, ignorant of language, culture and custom, I would not believe it. For almost all of my travels I was with friends, but I know now that I am capable of traveling by myself if I have to.

Students who have difficulty with the language they are studying can become fluent by immersing themselves in that culture.

Good resume writing skills will garner attention

By J. WRIGHT LEONARD
Special to the Villanovan

George Bush and Lee Iacocca have the jobs they've always wanted. And Elizabeth Taylor doesn't need a good job.

But you do. However, unlike big-time politicians and famous CEO's and movie stars, the people who can award you a good job won't seek you out. You have to find them and impress them. That's why resume writing is so important.

Picture this: A sales manager of a large corporation is having a bad day.

Last Thursday his top salesman submitted his resignation, leaving several large projects with major clients in mid-air. It will take weeks to smooth over the transition. There are conflicts between the marketing department and the advertising agency, and consequently a trip to Chicago is necessary next week. The new sales brochure has been delayed at the printer and won't be ready for Friday's presentation. His secretary is getting married over the weekend and will be on her honeymoon for the next two weeks, and there are four proposals that need to go out now. He asks himself, "What else could go wrong?"

Last Sunday he put an ad in the paper to fill the vacancy created by his top salesman's resignation, hoping to have preliminary interviewing completed before leaving for Chicago. He requested that interested parties send their resume to his attention. Today is Thursday — he has 279 responses. The question is how will he complete the initial interviewing by next Wednesday? He doesn't have time to read 279 resumes.

In looking at the responses, he can only scan each one, gathering what information he can in 15-20 seconds in order to get through all of them. This means that an individual is evaluated initially on the quality and clarity of their resume and that well-qualified people may be often passed over due to a poor resume. It also means that by developing a good resume, a lesser qualified person will have more of a chance of getting an interview.

Recent research indicates that 200-400 resume responses to an advertised position are common. In the very competitive market of today, smart individuals realize they need to employ every job search tool to their advantage. This includes a top-notch resume that works. You could have the greatest potential in the world, but if you don't sell yourself, you're going nowhere. Your resume is an advertisement for yourself.

The measure of the success of a resume is how many interviews it generates for you and there are several key ingredients that are crucial to its success.

1. The Hot Zone.

The top half of the first page of your resume is the Hot Zone. It will receive 10 of the 15 or 20 seconds of initial attention your resume will get. On a fast scan, the Hot Zone should contain all the information a person needs to decide whether to read the rest of your resume or reject it.

It should include your name, address, telephone number, position objective and general summary. It should not include secondary information such as vital statistics, personal information or affiliations.

The general summary should highlight those areas of your background that are relevant to your position objective. The point is to encapsulate your experience and perhaps highlight one or two of your skills and/or achievements. The goal, in several lines, is to grab the reader's attention with a power of skills or career achievements. This section should be in bold face and each point should be in bullet form, each on a separate line. It should be easy to read. It's not only having the right information in your resume that counts, it's having it where it can be quickly seen.

2. Responsibilities/Achievements.

This is one of the key areas that sets the truly great resume apart from the rest. It is important to distinguish your duties and also what you achieved. It is also important to briefly state how you achieved what you did. Concentrate on those achievements that relate to your objective. Pick two to four accomplishments for each job title or area of knowledge, and edit them down to bite-size chunks that read like a telegram. Write as if you had to pay for each word — pack as much information as you can in a short space. Prioritize your accomplishments, as they relate to your objective, and be sure to quantify your contributions — put them into tangible, profit-oriented terms wherever possible and appropriate.

3. Chronological or Function Format.

Chinese club expands

By GREGORY V. MENZEL
Staff Reporter

The Chinese Club is now officially open to all students who are interested in the culture. Although this organization has been around for the past several years, it only consisted of small, informal meetings. However, the club is now well-organized and has been planning many field trips to various places to celebrate the Chinese way of life.

Currently, the club consists of 30 students. Five of these members are Chinese and seven can speak the language. There are no dues or special requirements to join, and the club strongly encourages anyone with an interest to sign up in order to expand the membership. All who want to participate should visit the International Studies Office (I.S.O.) in Room 102 Corr Hall. The next meeting will be held in Connelly Center during the first week of November, and signs indicating the time will be posted around campus.

The Chinese Club has scheduled several more trips for the future.

Several trips have already taken place in the past two months. The group attended the dedication of a Buddhist temple on Oct. 4 in Cherry Hill, N.J. The festivities included fireworks, martial arts demonstrations and plenty of free food.

The students also had a chance to meet three masters of Buddhism who had arrived from Taiwan and mainland China. This trip allowed all members to learn about Buddhism first-hand instead of just reading about it in a textbook. The club believes such activities serve to diminish the mysteries of the religion. The trips give everyone a better understanding of the religion by allowing all to partake in the event.

The group traveled to Chinatown Oct. 10 to celebrate Nationalist Day. In 1940, the Chinese leaders fled China and escaped to Taiwan at a time when their land was being taken over by Communists. So, this holiday is actually an "Independence Day" for Taiwan. The club members joined the celebration by enjoying "dim-sum," a Chinese luncheon buffet.

Other historical dates are recognized by the club. In late September they celebrated Confucius' birthday. Also, February will mark the Chinese New Year

Villanova's Greek system kicked off the holiday season with spirit on Monday night at the eighth annual community Halloween party. Trick-or-treaters of all ages flooded the Villanova Room of Connelly Center to play games, win prizes and, most importantly, stuff their bags full of candy.

The event, sponsored by the Panhellenic and Interfraternity councils and organized by philanthropy chairpersons Melissa Moore of Delta Delta Delta and Joe Cooper of Delta Tau Delta, boasted an expected crowd of about 300 children from the surrounding area. "It's a lot of time," said Moore, "but it pays off."

Each fraternity and sorority present had its own uniquely decorated stand and different treats to offer. "It's very rare that the entire Villanova Greek system gets together as a group," said Dave Lakner of Sigma Alpha Epsilon, "It shows that the system can work together."

Moore explained that the children were divided into three age groups to be judged on their costumes. Five prizes were given out to each group, in costume

Annual Fall Review puts NROTC on display

By TARA CAMPITIELLO
Staff Reporter

The annual Naval Reserve Officer Training Corps (NROTC) Fall Review was staged Tuesday, Oct. 13, most appropriately for it was the 217th anniversary of the U.S. Navy. Even more civilians were able to appreciate the dedication, tradition and obvious precision of Villanova University's NROTC Unit.

The military parade is a tradition dating back to ancient times. The ancient Romans believed that their forces were able to quickly maneuver if they were in step, for the best drilled units were usually the victors. Fall Review evaluates the preparedness of the passing units by judging their ability to march. This year's reviewing officer was Dr. Robert J. Casey.

Casey graduated from Villanova University and the V12 program, the predecessor of ROTC programs, in 1944. He presently teaches three mechanical engineering courses at Villanova.

Before the passing review, the Drill Exhibition by "Whiskey Company" was presented. This premiere Drill Team has received first place honors at Cornell University's NROTC competition as well as sixth place in a field of 30 teams at Tulane University's NROTC Competition. The Drill Team's highly regarded reputation has earned it invitations to parades such as the New York City St. Patrick's Day Parade and other local social and sporting events.

"Our young men and women have done an outstanding job. Most people are still asleep while these young people are hard at work. Fall Review instills a sense of pride in what the unit has accomplished. It also sets standards and motivates our newest class to do well over the next four years," Gunnery SGT L.C. Jones, U.S. Marine Corps said concerning the performance of the four companies, "Whiskey Company," "Alpha Company," "Bravo Company," and "India Company."

Expert lectures on economy

By CAROLYN POPPE
Staff Reporter

Many Americans fear for the fate of the country, feeling the effects of a sunken economy. Since they will be taking this feeling to the voting booths on Monday, the recent visit to Villanova by a social economist could not have come at a better time.

Dr. Wallace C. Peterson, president of the Association for Social Economists and professor of economics at the University of Nebraska, recently gave a lecture called "A Social Economist's Search for Justice." The presentation was given Thursday, Oct. 15, in Connelly Center Cinema as part of the Sesquicentennial Celebration.

As a social economist, Peterson emphasized values and justice within the economic system. He evaluated the economy by taking unemployment and inequality in distribution of wealth and income into account. In this way, social economists "put a human face on economics," he said.

But in doing so, Peterson showed just how "anemic" the present economy is. The unemployment rate has gotten ridiculously high, and wealth, which has almost always been poorly distributed, has reached its unbalanced extremes. Now poorer families receive a smaller piece of the pie and the richer obtain even more wealth than before.

Peterson attributed these injustices to our economic state, which he titled a "Silent Depression." Productivity and growth have shown a steady decline and remained low for the past 19 years. He also pointed out that, in production, services have fallen just as much as goods, differentiating this economy from the recession during World War II.

Peterson reasoned out the downturn for his student and faculty audience. He explained that no governmental policy exists that will iron out injustices as long as our rate of growth is so low. Policy actions can be taken to bring an end to the "Silent Depression" and resolve economic injustices at the same time.

His proposal contained three elements. He stressed the importance of a comprehensive system of national health insurance. He feels that social economists need to organize a new way to distribute health care that would be fair, efficient and guarantee a minimum standard for every person.

He also pointed out the need for a complete overhaul of the federal taxation system. He offered a plan for a new progressive taxation process, based generally on a flat rate. The new system would be fairer and so much simpler, he explained, so that "everyone, including Ross Perot, could file their taxes on a postcard."

But the element of government policy that he emphasized most was investment in the infrastructure. Peterson feels that increased spending on the improvement of roads, bridges, buildings, sewer systems and other works would produce numerous jobs with adequate pay for the unemployed. He paralleled this kind of production with the immensely increased production for the military that came about during World War II. He felt that infrastructure investment now would revitalize our industry, having immediate and lasting impact on productivity growth.

Peterson rejected the idea that our country desperately needs a new agenda for economic change, like FDR's New Deal. Instead, he offered ideas on how to practically bring back productivity that represent "simply good economics."

All that our country needs now, Peterson said, is "dedicated and imaginative political leadership" to acknowledge the injustices and inequalities in our economy and help even them out. Peterson was unsure whether or not that leadership is on the horizon, but he called people to action. Americans must do away with their apathy and overly-negative view of our government, he said. Instead, we must be aware of what kind of action will bring us out of the slump and be willing to make changes

World-renowned Argentinian pianist, Migel Angel Scebba, performs at St. Mary's Chapel.

Pianist performs

By BEN ALFONSI
Special to the Villanovan

As part of its Sesquicentennial Celebration and the Beresit II Conference, Villanova proudly hosted "The Music of Two Worlds," a piano recital by renown Argentinian pianist, Migel Angel Scebba. The event was presented in St. Mary's Chapel Oct. 9 to a crowd of Villanova students and faculty as well as visiting Spanish professors from around the world.

This artist's international resume has been divided between two worlds, from his formation in his native Argentina to his performances in France and Spain. From South American to Europe, Scebba' music has been respected and enjoyed by many aficionados of classical music. He has received world-wide critical acclaim.

The program was divided into two parts, The Music of Spain and The Music of Latin America. Among the highlights from Part I of the program were Baroque sonatas by the Rev. A. Soler and the Rev. J. Gales. After completing the Spanish compositions, Scebba went on to play a mixture of music from Latin America in Part II of the performance. The featured pieces were Ignacio Cervantes's "Six Cuban Dances," Piazzola's "Three Tangos," and Sonata Number One by Ginastera.

Scebba's skill as a pianist was evident as his music rang throughout St. Mary's Hall. He elegantly played through a difficult repertoire of classical pieces to an attentive audience, revealing the masterful relationship of pianist and public.

according to their lunar calendar. The I.S.O., Asian Society and Chinese Cultural Society plan to have a meeting with the Chinese Club at Dougherty Hall for the occasion. This meeting will give group members a chance to see how this important holiday is celebrated in China.

The Chinese Club has scheduled several more trips for the future. In March, the Chinese Club plans to visit a Chinese pagoda in Reading, Pa. The pagoda is a museum which holds historical Chinese artifacts and paintings. The Chinese Club hopes the trip will prove to be educational as well as enjoyable.

The students can learn how Chinese people lived years ago, and observe and appreciate the different styles of artwork which are displayed.

In late March or early April, there will be an excursion to the Chinese Embassy in Washington, D.C. Students will have an opportunity to meet and dine with the Chinese ambassador and several other representatives.

The Chinese Club extends an invitation to all students, welcoming them to the new club and advising them to take advantage of all it has to give. Kevin Iredell, president and founder of the Chinese Club, summed it up well, saying, "The Chinese Club offers new and diverse ways to learn about Chinese culture through field trips and interaction with Chinese students."

categories such as "Most Pretty" and "Most Creative." One large prize was given out for the best overall costume.

"It's a chance for all the kids in the area to see Villanova students and to don their costumes," said Chrissie Berrardi, a member of Delta Delta Delta.

The parents were very enthusiastic about the event. "I think it's wonderful!" and "I love it!" were common reactions. One parent who has been coming for years noted that it was a safe way for the children to enjoy Halloween. Another mentioned it is a positive way of bringing the community and school together.

However, one parent captured the sentiment best. "Children always remind us how wonderful life is."

A resume can be the difference in getting hired

advantageous in the following situations:

- When the name of your last employer is an important consideration.
- When you are staying in the same field as prior jobs.
- When your job history shows real growth and development.
- When prior titles are impressive.

With a functional resume, you are identifying your skills and areas of experience. Use several separate paragraphs or sections, each one headlining a particular area of expertise or involvement. All should be packed with selling points. Employers are listed at the end of the resume. The functional resume is advantageous in the following situations:

- When you want to emphasize capabilities.
- When changing careers.
- When entering the job market for the first time or re-entering after an absence.
- If career growth has not been good.
- When you have had a variety of different unconnected work experiences.
- When you have had a series of jobs for short periods of time.

4. Sex Appeal

Certain words or phrases create more interest than others. They are attention grabbers, and add a sparkle all their own to your resume. For want of a better term, you can say these words have "sex appeal." (This has nothing to do with sex or sexism.) For instance, you should use active verbs wherever possible, not passive. Here are some other examples of sex appeal:

- Say "$5 million Sales Increase" not "Sales Increase."
- Say "Export Sales Management" not "Sales Management."
- Say "Key National Accounts" not "National Accounts."
- Say "Successfully Started Up" not "Started Up."

5. Graphics

The packaging of your resume is critical. Graphically, your resume should convey a well-organized, uncluttered appearance and be easily readable, with the most important information highlighted in such a way that it cannot be overlooked. Ordinary typewriters cannot accomplish this. The best job is done by a computer publishing program utilizing capitals, underlining, italics, indenting and bullets and various type sizes to direct the eye to the powerful parts of your resume.

The resume that works will demonstrate your ability to produce results; communicate your proper worth; and increase your chances of obtaining the one-on-one with the decision maker you want to meet.

Your attitude is key also. Rather than concluding that there are too few jobs and too many job seekers competing for them, you should take the opposite view. There are over 8 million employers in the Country, and a good percentage of them right in the Delaware Valley. Surely you can find one employer among them with the right job for you.

participated in an Indoctrination Ceremony which officially welcomed "India Company" into the battalion.

Commanding Officer Capt. H.S. Stoddard, U.S. Navy said, "This class successfully sustained the tremendous mental and physical strain of their initial six-week training. Although ranks have thinned due to the decreasing size of the military and the availability of scholarship funds, these cuts in quantity in no way reflect the quality of our newest group."

Stoddard, with the assistance of Casey, presented individual awards to certain exceptional members of "India Company."

The following persons were recognized: Midn4C C. Logan, Motivation Award, Midn4C S. Lees, most improved, Midn4C G. Means, Overall Midshipman, Midn4C M. Robertson, Drill Award, Midn4C W. Clah, Physical Training Award.

Further attention was paid to the industriousness of the unit by Battalion Commander J.B. Picco.

"Tremendous planning and coordination was involved in organizing Fall Review. All 145 students were carefully inspected beforehand, even uniform appearance is critical. This year we chose to hold the ceremony during the week as opposed to usual Saturday scheduling so that NROTC may receive more exposure," Picco said.

As a liaison between staff and students, Picco, with the assistance of other members of the midshipmen battalion staff, coordinates NROTC involvement in Hunger Awareness Week, Blood Drives, Career Day, and a national annual Drill Competition.

Top 10

Straight from the political malcontents in 201 Dougherty come predictions for the Top 10 write-in candidates most likely to appear on voters' ballots on Election Day.

10. Frank Purdue (It's a common mistake. Purdue and Perot: Separated at birth?)

9. Madonna. She has no skeletons left in her closets for the media to expose.

8. Luke Perry. Oh, wait ... teeny-boppers can't vote.

7. Sinead O'Connor, or is she going for the papacy?

6. Howard Stern. Can you imagine "Hail to the Chief" ... bongo style?

5. Rollie Massimino, just because he hasn't been in the Top 10 recently.

4. John Barleycorn. Let's let someone with experience deal with the national debt.

3. Marvin Martian. International diplomacy is easy with an Illudium Q-36 explosive space modulator.

2. 'Nova's own Dr. Food — Everybody's got to eat.

And the No. 1 choice for write-in candidates come Tuesday's election is:

1. Woody Allen. There are some family values for you.

Studying abroad

Sherryl Croitor, a senior who spent a year studying at the University of Rome, was able to enhance her language skills by living in a dormitory with Italian students and taking all of her classes in Italian. "By being thrown into a new culture and language I had no choice but to learn the language," she said. "Most people leave a country and look forward to speaking English," said Croitor. "But I want to continue speaking Italian and master the language."

Enrolling in a program is not easy. Students are required to attend a preliminary information meeting on campus. In the library there is a book titled "Study Abroad" which lists programs all over the world for every major. It is similar to applying to colleges all over again. Villanova does not do all the work for potential study abroad students. This emphasizes the fact that, once in another country, no one is there to do the work for students when they are overseas. Students learn to take care of their own problems.

I completed an internship while I was in London in my field of interest — public relations. I was able to work full-time for eight weeks, and I learned the basics of the enterprise. Studying abroad, with or without an internship, is an excellent resume booster. It displays your ability to adapt to new environments, survive in a new culture, and sometimes even communicate in a different language on a daily basis. Now I am also aware of the many international work opportunities — from the Peace Corps to English education and corporate jobs.

At this time last year, I was concerned that I was not going to survive six months in Europe. Today, I am looking into year-long programs in Australia, New Zealand and some developing countries. Many students would like to study abroad, but because they never make the effort to find the answers to their questions, they never do. Once you decide to go, do not let anyone or anything stand in your way. You may never have the chance to travel and learn in this way again, so do not let the opportunity pass you by.

Students studying abroad flock to Leaning Tower of Pisa.

An eating disorder is not about food or weight. It's about not fitting in. Not feeling loved. Not being good enough.

Eating disorders–anorexia, bulimia and compulsive overeating–are more common today than ever. They strike mostly women, and can appear at any time from the early teens to middle age. Often, they're triggered by a move toward independence: going away to college, getting married, getting divorced.

All the will-power in the world won't cure an eating disorder. For that, a patient must heal her damaged self-esteem and learn healthier ways to cope with anxiety and stress. And that takes help. Expert help.

That's why the Eating Disorders Program at Belmont Center for Comprehensive Treatment is staffed by a compassionate community of professionals. Psychiatrists, psychologists, nurses and dieticians, all focused on helping our patients deal with food in healthier ways. Therapists work with patients to heal the causes of their eating disorders. A simple exercise like tracing the outline of her body can help a woman develop a more realistic image of herself.

Nurses and dieticians help patients learn to control the foods that once controlled them. By supervising them as they plan, shop for, cook and eat healthy meals together.

And when patients leave Belmont's supportive environment, outpatient therapy helps build on the progress made during their stays.

The name Belmont may sound new, but we've been helping keep families together for more than 50 years as Philadelphia Psychiatric Center. Recently, we changed our name to fit better with our broad range of treatment programs, both inpatient and outpatient, for emotional problems and addictions.

If you've been using food to try to fill the holes in your life, isn't it time you figured out what's really missing? Call Belmont at 215-456-8000 and talk to someone who knows what you're going through.

Madonna stretches musical capability

By ERIC CHEUNG
Assistant Entertainment Editor

Madonna is back! And she's more controversial then ever before! Her brand-new book on alternative sexual practices called Sex coincides with the release of her first studio album in three years, Erotica. Madonna's hope is to liberate the world from its "sexual hang-ups." Her book accomplishes this task far more overtly than her album, whose sole purpose is to liberate Madonna from . . . well . . . Madonna. The album takes bold new steps with the goal of reinventing Madonna's musical career.

Erotica represents an evolution for this goddess of pop music. Instead of resting on her laurels and releasing more songs that follow the same pop-formula of previous hits, Madonna experiments with the hard-core dance sound. Producers Shep Pettibone and Andre Betts take Madonna into new territory — the club scene — where beautiful melodies give way to driving dance beats and unrelenting bass lines. However, if the single "Erotica" is any indication (according to Billboard's ranking system, it was top 10 within two weeks of its release) the public is ready for whatever Madonna puts out. Madonna's popularity will not diminish because of her new musical direction, in fact it might even bring more fans to join her formidable legion of followers.

Upon initial listening, it seems like Madonna has completely lost her mind. Her songs are far more urban than anything she has done before (especially since such dance music depends heavily on drum beats, ultimately making the songs sound repetitive). But this is the reaction of one expecting a Madonna-sound from the past. Madonna from the past is over, so make way for the new-and-improved Madonna. She is always pushing forward to stretch her musical capabilities. After a few more spins of the CD, Madonna is obviously evolving while keeping faithful to her old fans.

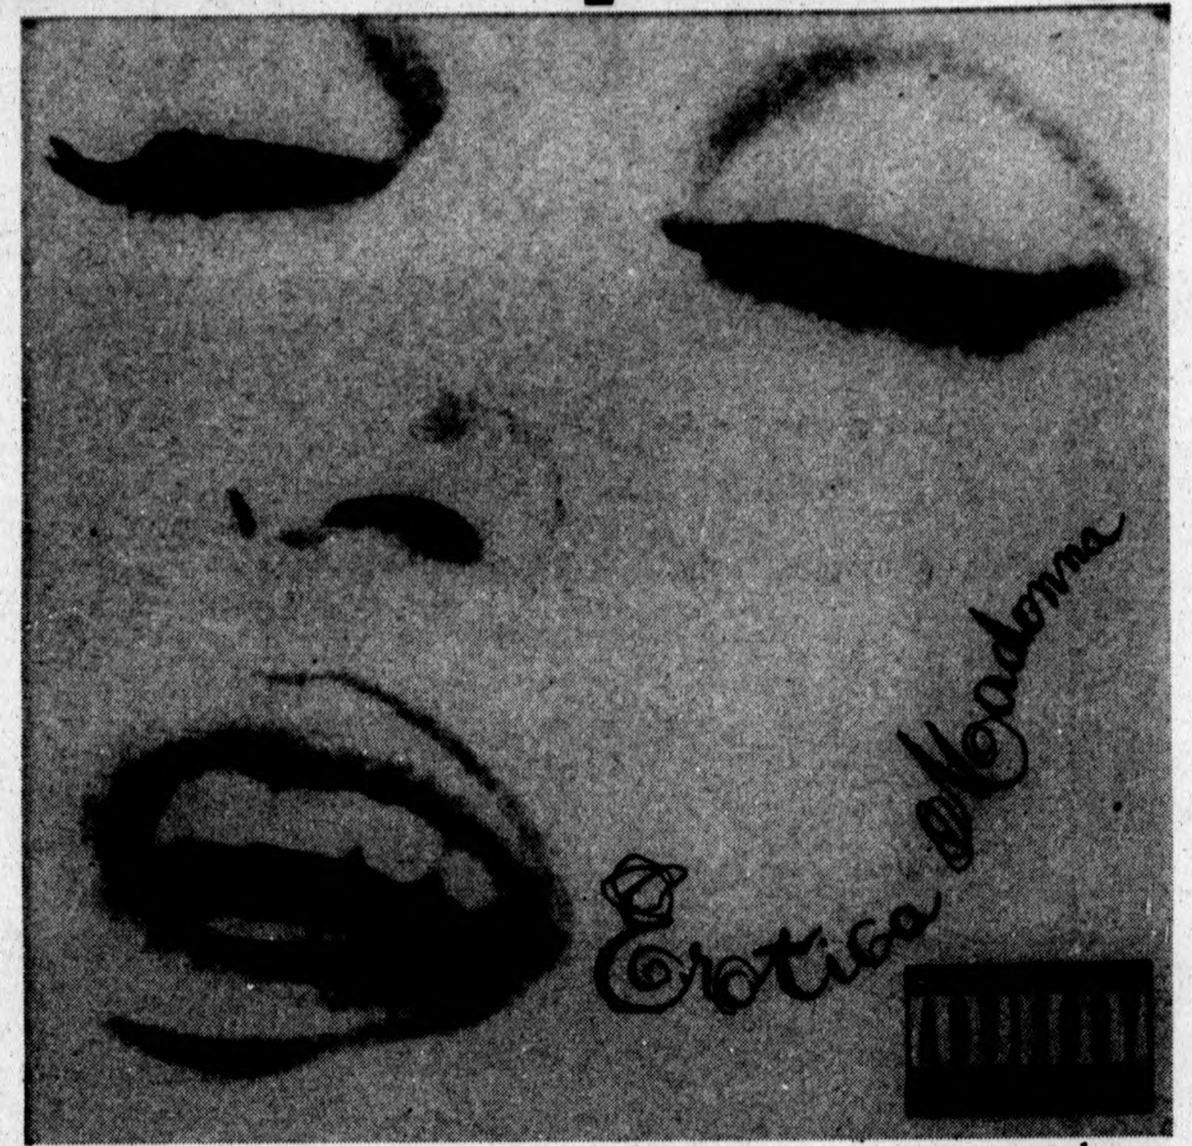
Introspective singles from the past are gone; this is an album for those who want to dance. The title song "Erotica" finds Madonna continuing along the recent sounds of "Vogue" and "Justify My Love." However, there is a tinge of the "older Madonna" with the single "Deeper and Deeper." Here we find a happy medium between her new sounds and her previous style of a stronger melody-line. "I can't help falling in love/I fall deeper and deeper the further I go," she belts out in one of her most confident performances to date. This single will no doubt receive a sickening amount of airplay, and it will rightfully deserve it.

Lyrically, Madonna is in fine form as is to be expected. "Erotica's" innuendos pale in comparison with "Where Life Begins" which talks about how ". . . dining out can happen down below." Such is the reason this album has been smacked with an Advisory Label. Unfortunately, such songs seemed to be more of a novelty item than anything truly substantial.

Elsewhere, Madonna proves her writing abilities. She talks about the gloomy life of a prostitute in "Bad Girl," a friend who dies of AIDS in the maudlin "In This Life," and how words become meaningless in relationships — "Words." "Thief of Hearts" features Madonna as a violent avenger against the girl who stole her boyfriend: "Bitch! . . . You're a thief of hearts/And now you'll have to pay/Which leg do you want me to break? . . ."

Of course, strong lyrics and themes in Madonna's music has been one of her trademarks. As an artist and an individual, she is obsessed with continually changing her image. Erotica provides all the evidence that this trend is in full effect musically. Madonna goes from house music "Words," to reggae/hip-hop with the socially conscientious "Why's it so hard," and even into the realm of rock power-ballad "Rain." Still more striking is how she changes her own singing voice from song to song. Madonna's desire to become a movie star brims with determination in each and every one of these tracks. Every song has its own character and vocal style. She becomes a sultry, '60s singer (complete with light, wispy vocals) in "Fever," then quickly switches to a more immature/bubble-gum sound in "Bye Bye Baby" and she finally ends with the semi-Suzanne Vega appeal in "Secret Garden."



Perhaps the only downfall of this entire album is her increasing experimentation. Madonna has been able to produce her own brand of not-exactly-rap with her most recent tunes. In the spirit of innovation, a bulk of this album is dedicated to her speaking rather than her singing ability. Sadly, some of her songs would do better as a poetry recital in a be-bop cafe rather than on this album. But who can blame a girl for experimenting?

No doubt questions will arise about Madonna's latest motives. Some will be turned off by her current ventures, disturbed by her frank sexual views. Others will find her new music to be a desperate attempt to catch up with the current scene, already filled to capacity with dance music. Meanwhile, Erotica and Sex will sell millions.

For better or for worse, Madonna influences the world around her. By the time people figure out what Madonna is trying to do, she will probably come out with something even more shocking that will make current outrages acceptable. Erotica represents another carefully laid-out step for Madonna's dream of forcing herself into the minds of every living being on this planet. Even if this pretentious vision does not come to pass, Erotica will remain a worthy testimony to Madonna's unbelievable success.

Faith No More rocks the socks off crowd

By THOM ARNO and MARK McCREARY
Staff Reporters

I truly feel sorry for all the Villanova students that left for their fall break before Saturday night, because they missed a great show. Faith No More and Helmet rolled into Upper Darby Saturday to "rock the socks off their young teenyboppers" at the Tower Theater. And believe us, there was more than one pair of socks rocked before the night climaxed.

Helmet, a very fresh band out of New York City, met a crowd that left only the blind unable to observe that those in attendance were there for Helmet as much as they were for Faith No More.

Meantime, their second full-length LP, is a clear anthem of where music is headed. This "wall-o-sound" technique is driven by fast guitar, leaving out the worthless self-indulging solos, and very present, very loud even, do we dare say, dominating drums.

Page Hamilton, the vocalist, songwriter, guitarist and the backbone of Helmet says he believes in "Musical economy. With one idea, you can develop a song instead of stringing a bunch together. The essence of Helmet is musical economy. Stripping it all down to the bare essentials, not overdubbing 15 guitar solos and turning something good into a totally overworked pop song."

And the sound of the CD should give you every indication of exactly how Helmet sounds in concert. The capacity crowd, with amazingly few lobby stragglers, stood for the entire set while they ripped through each cut off of Meantime.

FAITH NO MORE

A before-the-show interview gave us the exact feeling of what was going to be in the air for the set, and it was true to its impression. These level-headed, friendly and exhausted musicians made it clear what they were going to offer the crowd: a 10-song set, 40 minutes lone, and music to give you the necessary reason to stay on your feet. Hamilton stood center-stage, left-foot forward, ax at side and bouncing to the incessant strums of guitar. To make this a perfect image in your mind, check out the "Unsung" video, getting not nearly enough air time on MTV.

Speaking of videos, they just shot their second, for "Give It," and should be playing on your cable-accessed boob tube before you know it. As far as seeing Helmet in the near future, you'll have to wait until they return from their three-week tour of Europe with Ministry and Septula. After that we suggest you check your local listings. Until then, check out Meantime.

Faith No More has a slightly longer history than the three-year-old babies, Helmet. Faith No More orginated in 1982. It released two LP's, We Care a Lot, and Introduce Yourself, before current lead singer Mike Patton joined in 1989. Patton came from his high school band, Mr. Bungle, and all that can really be said about Bungle is that it is for the "keen listener." It is an incredible CD, but in no way, shape or form is it for every listener. It defines what Mike Patton is, and if you are seriously into Faith No More, and have not already heard Bungle, then it's recommended.

After Patton joined, Faith put out The Real Thing in June of '89, and finally reached platinum in October of '90, largely backed by its number five single, "Epic." Later, in December of '90, Spin, Rip, and Music Express all named Faith as "Band of the Year," strongly predicting the status this band deserves. They toured variously until February of '92 when they released their wonderful creation, Angel Dust.

That brings us to the Faith No More that rocked the Tower on Oct. 17. They described themselves as, "a hippie hate band. We were sort of opposite of what a hippie love band might be. Disillusioned young people who hated their families and themselves, playing ugly music with ugly singers to ugly people, purposely playing sh___y music because we thought we were not good enough to make a serious go at it, laughing at what a funny joke it was to be hated so much by some, and what a funnier joke it was to be loved by others."

But the Faith No More of today is loved by many, and gaining the due respect which they so deserve. The show was very intense, staying true to the album, with Patton making full use of the entire stage. Patton and Roddy Bottum (keyboards) kept constant contact with the crowd, cracking jokes at the seats and "nice little rows" in the Tower, and laughing at stage crashers being shoved back in the crowd by security. They ripped through such known (at least to the crowd) songs as "Midlife Crisis," "Be Aggressive," and "Epic." The set was cut short after the stage was bombarded by hundreds of front-section fans, with the band finishing their song, despite the disturbance. Missing from the line-up was "A Small Victory," "Smaller and Smaller" and "Falling to Pieces."

Even with the show getting cut short by over-excited girls and testosterone-driven teens flourishing the stage, it was still an amazing show. Still, we feel so bad for all the poor Villanova kiddies who opted to escape to home as soon as possible, because it was an event well worth toughing out the extra day.

SET LIST: "Caffeine," "Death March," "Land of Sunshine," "Zombie Eaters," "Midlife Crisis," "As the Worm Turns," "Chinese Arithmetic," "R.U.," "Surprise You're Dead," "Be Aggressive," "I'm Easy," "We Care A Lot," "Jizzlobber," "Woodpecker From Mars" and "Epic."

"You know, it's so ridiculous. If I don't call my parents every Sunday at exactly 5 o'clock, they think I was kidnapped by aliens, or something. Anyway, one Sunday me and Mark, we decide to take-off and check out the city. So we're hanging out and I look at my watch. 5 o'clock. 'Night' spotlights NYC

Entertainment Editor

There is a certain anonymous power that is possessed by the average citizen in the city. Each person is faceless, without identities, wandering through the urban jungle without leaving so much as a dent in the landscape. Once gone they are forgotten. Every so often, one man might have the abilities to rise above the city's oppression and leave a mark. "Night in the City" follows the dream of one man, and its ultimate conclusion.

Harry Fabian (Robert DeNiro) has been a sleazy ambulance-chasing lawyer for his entire career. His specialties included trumping up injuries, filing a lawsuit and then settling out of court for a tidy sum. The story of his life could be traced from scam to scam, talking his way out of the fight situations in which his schemes always seemed to trap him.

Fabian's favorite hangout is "The Boxer," an upscale New York restaurant and bar that collects a wide array of cast-offs and minor celebrities. Every night Fabian walks up to the bar and rattles off about anything to anyone who will listen. While juggling his many cases and angered debtors, he is also having an affair with the bartender's wife (Jessica Lange).

After visiting a local gym, Fabian has an inspiration. Why not take all these young boxers, dress them up with nifty nicknames and flashy clothes, and put them in a ring? One promoter's license later, Fabian is ready to bring back the glory days of the sport. While the expected profits would set him up in the "big time."

The only way Fabian can possibly pull this off is to talk faster and deal harder than he ever has before. He uses anyone and everyone, including the woman who loves him. By pooling his own meager resources and soaking his friends and acquaintances, Fabian nearly realizes his dream.

To gain an edge on the unscrupulous competition, a promoter named Bobo, Fabian recruits Bobo's older brother Al as his partner. Al has contacts in the boxing world and proves invaluable in ironing out technical details. Bobo threatens Fabian with death if Al's heart should give out. Fabian nods and continues on his quest.

But surviving on wits and clever talk only stretches so far. As fate and his enemies conspire against him, Fabian clutches at last chance after last chance until all avenues are exhausted. His adulterous girlfriend stands loyally by his side, but she is ruined even as she clings desperately to her ideal standards he can never reach.

"Night in the City" takes a hard look at the gritty underside of human nature and its place in the city. More than that, it is a deep anlaysis of its effect on one man, Fabian, as he desperately tries to make up for a lifetime of concessions. DeNiro is stimulating as the expressive machine-gun mouth Harry Fabian, but Jessica Lange is uncharacteristically soft as Fabian's love interest. The film whirls through frame after frame of convincing footage, but the message is lost amongst the barrooms and back alleys. The viewer is never able to see the true heart of Fabian or the rough edges of Lange's character, both essential to understanding their actions. "Night in the City" provides some insights, but overall cannot ride onthe laurels of its stars alone.

FAST FORWARD: The sleaze continues with a film abut tabloid photographers of the '40s. "The Public Eye" stars Joe Pesci as a composite of real-life "artists" who captured the seamy underside of life on film, often at the expense of their subjects. Turned from scavenger to hero, Pesci snaps death scenes and shootings, adultery and scandal. "The Public Eye" opens next week.

REWIND: "Batman Returns" again, this time on video. The summer's most overblown hit, with Michael Keaton as the caped crusader, Danny DeVito as the warped Penguin and Michelle Pfeiffer as the slinky Catwoman. While the expensive scenery might have been impressive on screen, television might not be so flattering. Compared to the first, "Batman Returns" lacks some of the comic lustre that made the original shine. In its place is more action and violence but less emphasis on the characters. "Batman Returns" simply gives the audience what it expected, but no more.

The Farm Stays upbeat

By COLEEN KENIREY
Assistant Entertainment Editor

The Cutting Edge

The Farm, a Liverpool band who first gained popularity with last year's smash "Groovy Train," have reemerged with their sophomore effort, Love See No Colour. They have again teamed up with producer Graham McPherson, formerly of the early '80s British export group, Madness. McPherson also guided the band's virgin release, Spartacus.

Although the band did not categorize its initial musical concoctions as strictly dance music, their sound appears to have evolved in that direction. They have made more extensive use of keyboards and sampling on this album, giving it a rhythm-focused orientation. With Love See No Colour, The Farm have developed in the direction of a Happy Mondays style. The common trait that remains, however, is the upbeat and carefree current which charges through every track.

The Farm's new songs are not for those who desire meaningful and deeply poetic lyrics. Vocals are instead used as an instrument and words have been chosen for their sound quality. Many lyrics rhyme or follow an intonation pattern which complements the music itself. The words do serve their purpose well, especially through the frequently repeated choruses accentuating the beat of each song. "Mind," "Rising Sun" and "Words of Wisdom" in particular have melodic, although somewhat mindless, refrains.

Besides some brief commentary on American society in "Rising Sun" and "News International" and some musings about the values of history in "Suzy Boo," little attempt is made to promote causes or win ideological battles. "Good Morning Sinners" does actually provide a limited fragment of anti-establishment social criticism: "Values from Victorian England/Taken to urban decay/How do you think that would ever succeed/In the mind of the new breed." The main goal of The Farm is danceability, not political or philosophical tirades, and this goal they achieve.

Although most of the songs follow this Pet Shop Boys type of dance-pop, Love See No Colour is not monotonous. Some unusual elements are lurking in the corners of these tunes. "Tooth Fairy," a slow song with a more melancholy and somber mood, begins with Beethoven's "Moonlight Sonata." "Mind" offers a focus on background vocals, reminiscent of some of Erasure's early recordings. "Good Morning Sinners" employs a subtle hip-hop-ish backbeat, taking the album in yet another direction.

The best track must be "Creepers," a well-deserved homage to the classic psychological thriller, "The Shining." This song would be perfectly at home as the background music in a horror movie. Excellent samples of Jack Nicholson's wicked laugh echo through the song as well as the familiar deep-throated screeches of "redrum, redrum." By far the supreme cut of Love See No Colour, "Creepers" trails off with the repetitious line, "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," evoking the eerie pivotal scene of the movie.

No strangers to cover songs, after having created their own club rendition of the Monkees' "Stepping Stone," The Farm's new album features their take on "Don't You Want Me." This is a weak version compared to its predecessor, the early '80s Human League pop hit. A vocal dialogue between a male singer and a female singer attempts to repeat the formula of the original, but it just does not measure up. The catchy synthesizer quirks which made the song a chart-topper are washed out in The Farm's muted version.

Love See No Colour is basically a good second outing for these musicians. As Keith "Doc Love" Mullin has pointed out in the past, The Farm have had to rely on their musical talents to bring them success, since they come up a little short on the attractiveness factor. Thus, when touring around their hometown, the band members would wear t-shirts featuring the slogan "Ugly as F*#@." This little band has, however, overcome their two biggest handicaps: ugliness and comparisons to that other little band who put Liverpool on the map. And as is evidenced by Love See No Colour, they are doing just fine.

FRESH CUTS: Paul Weller is a fresh British face who has just released a self-titled debut. Weller's sound greatly reflects that of Lenny Kravitz, as typified by "Uh Huh Oh Yeh," a title which sounds like something Kravitz would have chosen. On "Remember How We Started" Weller's voice is strangely similar to Kravitz's, increasing the likelihood of comparison.

The reason the two artists' sounds are linked is probably due less to Weller's admiration of Mama Said and more to the fact that he is delving into the same era which Kravitz himself still inhabits.

Androgynous Prince remains king of funk

By MAURA RURAK
Assistant Entertainment Editor

Prince and The New Power Generation rock the air waves once again with their sexually explicit Androgynous. Prince, the self-proclaimed King of Funk, slams through a crazy mix of hip-hop lyrics and hard-core funk sounds with the help of a rhythm and blues based back-up band. "The Jams" include 18 new tracks ranging from the techno-club mix "My Name Is Prince" to the melodic "7." Prince and The New Power Generation explodes on the funk scene with their usual style for the outrageous.

Androgynous is the album that will bring Prince and his crew back into the limelight. The tracks have a strong commercial appeal, however twisted by Prince's musical imagination. Always one for experiment, Prince pushes the limits of the traditional genres. Heavy brass dominate the background while techno and electronic tunes are mixed into the final copy. "My Name Is Prince" is the perfect example. Already a club hit, the track is basic with its hip-hop beat and funky Prince flair.

Prince slams through a crazy mix of hip-hop lyrics and hard-core funk sounds.

"Sexy M.F." has caused some expected controversy. With the M.F. standing for "Muther F*!.*," the song did not pass the censorship committee. Overseas, the unedited version is being played on the radio. However, American listeners will have to settle for the initials to spark their interest.

Dealing with topics on sex, religion and love, Prince gets almost sensual with his lyrics. He tries to imply that dancing is a form of safe sex in "I Wanna Melt With You." "I got seven hours baby, so what you wanna do?/ This is safe sex — New Power Generation style/A funky little story about u and me/Gettin' busy for a while." This is not to say that Prince and The New Power Generation is tame. He rocks with the same sexual drive that inspired "Little Red Corvette" and "Darling Nicki."

Two songs contain the comments of a reporter. "Arrogance" begins with "The reporter has a question in the form of an answer: "What do u believe in? Who is your God? Is this reality or just another facade?" "The Flow" answers with "The reporter is unimpressed, Do you know that the princess is only 16 years old?" Prince is back in full form.

Androgynous is technically very good. Often times, the talent of musicians is overlooked because of a flashy appearance. Prince and The New Power Generation fell into this trap but now it looks as if they are trying to pull themselves out. Rooted in hot, funky rhythm and blues, Androgynous stands up to the standard set by previous Prince efforts.

Myles flirts with new style

By JOHN KAZMIERCZAK
Staff Reporter

One of the dangers of becoming a fan of an emerging artist is that you run the risk of disappointment. Natural processes of maturation dictate that the artists' style and sound begin to evolve and lose their edge to conform. This is largely the case with Alannah Myles' just-released second album, Rockinghorse.

Rockinghorse is a major departure from the straightforward pop/rock-oriented style Myles established on her 1989 self-titled debut, which earned her a Grammy. In her latest offering, she retains her patented throaty vocals, but substitutes slower tempos with a heavier reliance on bass guitar to achieve a more aggressive, self-assured tone. She has gained the confidence to slow her songs down. Only on "Tumbleweeds" does she revert to her previous motif of quick, light guitar and vocals.

Myles employs a talented backup arrangement, most having been carried over from her first album: David Wipper on acoustic guitar and mandolin, Kurt Schefter on lead guitar, bassist Will Lee, drummer Denny Fongheiser, producer and keyboardist David Tyson and a veritable busload of background vocalists. Because Myles is primarily a singer, she tends to rely on her vocals to provide the centerpieces for her songs. The only weakness in this formula lies not in her voice, which always remains supremely supple and seductive, but in the lack of intelligent, evocative lyrics. This lyrical weakness is primarily noticeable in "Make Me Happy" and "Rockinghorse," despite the enticing music, the lackluster lyrics keep the listener from fully enjoying the experience.

Alannah is at her best in her slow-to-medium paced ballads, principally illustrated with "Song Instead Of A Kiss" and "The Last Time I Saw William," a pair of thoughtful emotional pieces that allow Schefter and Wipper to show off their guitar and mandolin skills.

Any musician is taking a risk when changing an established style, especially one that won her a Grammy, and Alannah Myles may indeed trade in some old fans for new ones. While her new record lacks some of the integral bounce and unrestrained energy of her first album, Alannah Myles, it reflects both a more mature outlook and a greatly improved performance in terms of cohesion and talent. It may not earn her another Grammy, but this album is definitely a solid step in a new direction.

Field hockey now 18

By ALEX SCOFIELD
Assistant Sports Editor

A 9-4 record was not enough to land Villanova field hockey in the national rankings. Six consecutive shutout victories were not enough, either. Nor was a 3-1 Big East record. Ironically, it was not until the stickwomen lost two consecutive games that they were finally ranked in the nation's Top 20.

There was, however, a method to the pollsters' madness. After a seven-game winning streak, the Wildcats' two losses were both overtime contests against highly-ranked opponents from Massachusetts and Virginia. Two days after the Virginia loss, the Cats got back on the winning track by beating Lehigh 3-0. This raised 'Nova's record to 11-6 and landed them in the 18th spot in the nation.

The Cats faced the University of Massachusetts Oct. 16. After surrendering an early goal, 'Nova retaliated quickly when Verzera scored her fifth of the season and tied it 1-1.

"We're definitely able to compete with the top teams," said Co-Captain Melissa Rea. "There's an incredible pool of talent, and our ability really came out against UMass."

This ability was evident on the offensive end, where Massachusetts goalie Philippa Scott had to stop 20 'Nova shots to keep the Minutewomen alive. The game went into overtime, and remained scoreless in the first OT period. With 9:04 remaining in double-overtime, UMass' Ainslee Press finally broke the tie, giving her team a hard-fought 2-1 win.

The Wildcats struck first when they hosted Virginia two days later. Once again, 'Nova scored early in the game, going up 1-0 on a goal scored by the Bree Hawthorne-Rea-Verzera tandem.

For the second straight game, Villanova mounted substantial offensive pressure against a nationally-ranked opponent. Rea and Verzera bombarded the Virginia cage with 15 shots combined, and 'Nova had nine penalty corners.

The momentum shifted late in the second half when Virginia tied the game and sent it into overtime. With 6:23 remaining in the first OT period, Virginia scored the game-winner, giving the Cats another overtime loss.

The Wildcats took their frustrations out on Lehigh Oct. 20 with a 3-0 win. Rea scored at 2:04 into the game, and added a second insurance goal early in the second half. She now leads the team in points with 13 (eight goals, five assists). Senior Krista Saponara added the third goal with 25:16 remaining in the game.

Now that the Cats are finally recognized in the rankings, they can turn their attention to their impending Big East competition. 'Nova wraps up its regular season on Sunday at 2 p.m. when it hosts Georgetown, and should be a lock for selection in the league tournament next weekend.

"I think we can win the tournament," says Head Coach Jackie Gerzabek. "The girls want it a lot, and I think we're a better team than we were in '90," she said, referring to Villanova's last Big East championship.

Soccer drops three

By BOB TRAVISANO
Assistant Sports Editor

The downward spiral of the women's soccer team continued this past week with three straight losses. In their longest homestand of the season, the Cats went scoreless in their first two contests and only scored one in the third game. Riddled with injuries, the women were at a distinct disadvantage in the scoring department.

In the opening game versus Monmouth College, 'Nova lost 1-0. In a hard-fought game built on the Wildcat defense, Monmouth was held scoreless nearly the whole game until it scored with six minutes left in the game.

In game two of the homestand the Princeton Tigers visited the Wildcats. In another game of evenly matched competition, the teams did not score until the end of regulation. Both teams had 12 shots on goal and 10 saves. In the overtime period, Princeton scored with 11:50 gone, sealing its victory against a war-scarred Villanova team.

In the third game, Colgate proved to be a hard pill to swallow, as the Cats went down in defeat again 4-1. Colgate opened up with a goal less than two minutes into the game. For the rest of the first half, 'Nova held its opponents scoreless and equalized the score at the beginning of the second half. Unfortunately, Colgate decided to go on a scoring spree that would cap off a 4-1 rout with three unanswered goals.

Cats eye new season

By PATRICK MEILER

. . . Midnight Madness tomorrow night . . . The first ever-Midnight Madness at 'Nova will take place in duPont Pavilion tomorrow night. Needless to say this writer is excited. Is admission free, so hopefully duPont will be packed and rocking like it was at the Arizona game during the Gulf War in January of 1991. One might wonder why Villanova has abstained from this event in previous years. Here are a few reasons. First, Villanova's relationship with the community must have been considered. A public event at 12 a.m. on a Saturday night and on-campus? Round up the paddy-wagons. Also, practice used to begin Oct. 15, which usually marks our fall break. And lastly, to quote former point guard Chris Walker, "We were afraid of a poor turnout." Fears of a "close friends and relatives night" exist, but a promising recruiting class and an enthusiastic new head coach will hopefully inspire fans and students to turn out in droves. A strong turnout would start the Steve Lappas era off in the right direction.

This night should also impress and welcome Tyrone Weeks, a forward from Philadelphia who is making an unofficial recruiting visit. Last year at this time Kentucky invited four recruits to attend its Midnight Madness. All four came and all four committed to U.K. This writer hopes Villanova fans show their enthusiasm and support, have a great time, and help Weeks in his college decision.

. . . The preseason magazines are out . . . as expected, our Wildcats are picked to finish in the second tier of the conference. One cannot blame these various writers on their choices. Villanova lost three to graduation, fared poorly (3-8) out of conference last year, and seemingly consists of marginal Big East performers, Lance Miller being the exception. On paper, 'Nova has five newcomers, four seniors, one junior and one sophomore. But, because of a new head coach and system, the club can be considered a group of freshmen.

. . . Some positive points about the Cats must be considered though . . . The new offense will benefit the cast of players. The club will be able to learn Coach Lappas' less structured motion offense much easier than if they were to learn a Rollie Massimino set play-type offense. This makes sense by the very nature of the two offenses. The new offensive system will encompass a common setup, but offensive creation and freelancing will be encouraged. The old offense, on the other hand, consisted of the point guard walking the ball across the timeline. He would bark out a set play and the Cats would run it. When the play did not materialize (as was the case much too often in recent years), it would be a clearout for Lance Miller time.

The point here is that 'Nova will spend more time thinking about scoring than thinking about where they are supposed to be on the court. Learning this new offense will take time, but it should and will be easier in comparison to learning a Massimino offense. Hopefully this will benefit the freshmen in terms of playing time. It also should benefit the entire team in terms of shot opportunities. Villanova's set offenses have been stagnant in recent years because of an inability to create shots. From the sidelines, you got the feeling that when Greg Woodard did not get open from the screen, or when Marc Dowdell could not dump it down in time to James Bryson for example, the offense would be in trouble and have to scramble just to get a shot off. Fortunately, Miller was successful many of these times, but it is unfair to burden one player when the shot clock runs down. The new offense should benefit the entire team.

. . . One player sure to benefit from the new system is Calvin Byrd. His pressure defense and fastbreak finishing skills had been squelched under Massimino. His success has simply hinged upon those three or four times a game when he fired a 16-foot baseline jumper. Massimino was unable to utilize Byrd's skills in the offense. You cannot diagram a play where Byrd runs around six picks, and fires up a 17-footer. You can more easily envision a play where Byrd receives a pass and creates offense by beating his man off the dribble. Look for Byrd to drive the lane with success this year.

. . . It will be a welcome surprise when Villanova fans see a point guard (Jonathan Haynes) or wing player (Miller, Kerry Kittles, or Byrd) penetrate the lane with regularity. The Lappas offense will allow for this to generate naturally. You cannot set up a play in which the point guard beats his man off the dribble and dishes to an open forward whose man doubled over to help. Look for Miller, Haynes, and Kittles to drive and dish, and for Byrd to drive and throw it down. Players like Bain and Bryson will welcome an occasional open short to medium range jumper in this instance. It also will be pleasing to see Bryson or Bain post their men up in the natural flow of the offense.

. . . It is not unfair to say that Chris Walker's inability to beat his man limited the offense in recent years. One wonders how he would have fared under the Lappas system. In addition, had Woodard and Walker been physically quicker, would the Massimino offense have fared any better?

. . . The early-season schedule does not hurt either. The Cats do not play any national powers out of conference this year.

Delaware game turns into nightmare on Lancaster

By JUSTIN KESTNER
Assistant Sports Editor

Saturday, Oct. 17, was a typical brisk autumn afternoon. The wind gusted and swirled the colored leaves across campus. It was indeed football weather.

In the lots joining duPont Pavilion a few tailgaters gathered before noon to celebrate their weekly Saturday rituals. The lots seemed relatively sedated in light of the magnitude of the impending clash between No. 12 Delaware and No. 2 Villanova. Granted this was not Homecoming, but it probably was the biggest game Villanova has hosted since Andy Talley took over as head coach of the football team in 1985.

Half an hour before kickoff, the Delaware band practiced its routine on the field behind duPont. A mixture of jeers and cheers greeted the music as both Wildcat and Blue Hen fans voiced their support. Several people searched for tickets to the contest billed as the "game of the year" in the Yankee Conference, and perhaps in all of Division I-AA.

A sellout crowd packed Villanova Stadium to witness the event. But it was not by any means a partisan crowd. Because of 'Nova's Fall Break, there were almost as many Delaware faithful as 'Nova supporters present.

While the teams battled it out on the field, the fans engaged in verbal battles of their own. Thanks in part to the insulting remarks Blue Hen linebacker Mike Bandish made concerning Talley and several Wildcat players, what had always been a competitive rivalry became almost a backyard brawl. At least in some parts of the stands.

From the confines of the radio booth, a couple small scuffles could be observed, none of which grew into major confrontations. One obnoxious Delaware fan seated directly in front of the booth insisted on blowing an air horn and shouting profanities up into the booth on several occasions.

But despite the many distractions in the stands, the fans still focused on the action on the field.

'Nova fans rode an emotional rollercoaster as they witnessed three Wildcat turnovers and three lead changes in the game. But the toughest emotional jolt came late in the fourth quarter with 'Nova down by a point.

The stands erupted after the Cats made a critical third down conversion in which 'Nova tight end Scott Donald hauled in a deflected pass. A personal foul was tacked on the play after a late hit, giving 'Nova players and fans alike a huge shot of momentum.

But this momentum proved to be short-lived. A few plays later, 'Nova appeared to convert a third-and-17. But the play was called back because of two penalties on the Cats, and the thunderous cheers of 'Nova fans quickly gave way to the roar of the Blue Hen partisans.

Delaware was able to walk away with a slim one-point win, leaving both Wildcat players and fans with a bad taste in their mouths.

"This was pretty much the toughest loss we've taken," said 'Nova standout linebacker Curtis Eller.

One fan wearing a 'Nova cap and a Delaware sweatshirt summed up the contest by saying he was too emotionally drained to talk.

The Cats cannot afford to hang their heads. 'Nova could get another shot at Delaware if both teams advance to the playoffs, as they should. After two straight losses, the Cats are hungry for redemption. It is time for the team to step up its play and focus on making the playoffs.

The Cats must regain their intensity and eliminate the costly penalties and turnovers to which they have recently been prone. If they do not, it could quickly become a long and disappointing season.

California trio lead x- country

By LARRY LANZA
Staff Reporter

It took victories in each of its first two meets for the Villanova men's cross country team to earn respect as one of the top teams in the nation this season. Ironically, though, it was a second place finish in each of the past two meets that proved the Wildcats are for real.

In a showdown between fifth-ranked Villanova and a fourth-ranked Providence team that had lost to 'Nova Sept. 26 before returning to full strength to beat the Wildcats Oct. 12, Villanova turned in a strong team effort to finish second to the Friars in the Oct. 24 Big East Conference Championship.

Though its 23-point Big East loss to Providence was not as close as its six-point defeat to the Friars at the Oct. 12 Paul Short Invitational at Lehigh University, the Wildcats have succeeded in sending out the message that they can indeed take on a national powerhouse team at full strength and push that opponent to the edge.

"The team and I were extremely proud of our finish this year," said Head Coach Marty Stern. "Terrence (Mahon), Louie (Quintana), and Dave (Hartman) continue to lead the team toward being a force in the hunt for the NCAA's."

Once again finishing as the team's top three, Villanova's Californian trio of senior Mahon and sophomores Quintana and Hartman took places of, fourth, second, and 12th, respectively, to lead V.U. to its highest Big East finish since 1983. That year's Wildcat squad won the conference title before going on to become the last Villanova team to qualify for the NCAA Championships.

In finishing as the runner-up, 'Nova placed seven points ahead of third-place Georgetown (No. 15), the team that had beaten out Villanova for last year's Big East runner-up position. Behind Georgetown, it was Connecticut, Boston College and Pittsburgh. Finishing seventh through 10th were Seton Hall, Syracuse, Miami and St. John's.

Run over Boston's five-mile Franklin Park course, the Big East race saw Irishman Mark Carroll of Providence win the individual crown against a 100-man field by setting a new meet record of 23 minutes, 35 seconds. 'Nova's Quintana also went three seconds under the old record by finishing second to Carroll in 23:49.

After Friar Chris Teague crossed five seconds behind Quintana for third, V.U.'s Mahon finished five seconds later in fourth. Providence's Mark Burdis and Andy Keith then followed up in fifth and ninth, respectively, to lead P.C. to its win.

After Hartman finished 12th for Wildcats in 24:29, junior Mike Going crossed the line 17th (24:46) and sophomore Ken Nason finished 19th (24:55) to complete the Villanova scoring.

For 'Nova, the Big East marked a second consecutive runner-up finish to Providence and the development of a rivalry that appears headed into at least the next few seasons. At Lehigh's Oct. 12 Paul Short Invitational, Providence was fully recovered from the injuries that hampered them in its Sept. 26 loss to Villanova, but was just barely able to hold off the Wildcats.

Over Lehigh's hilly 6.2-mile (10 km.) course, Quintana led the V.U. charge by claiming his first collegiate cross country victory in 30:06. Running with a lead group of teammate Mahon and P.C.'s Carroll and Burdis, Quintana followed a surge by Mahon at the 4.5-mile mark and kept going all the way to the finish to claim the win.

Equally surprising to some was the powerful team effort V.U. turned in behind Quintana and fourth-place Mahon. Hartman dropped Providence's Teague to take fifth (30:55), Nason and Going took 17th and 19th (31:22 and 31:37) and Lamourie and Watson came in 37th and 57th (32:08 and 32:30), respectively.

Following last weekend's Big East Championship, the fifth-ranked Wildcats now have two more weeks of preparation before the IC4A/NCAA Region II Championships at Lehigh Nov. 14.

Rugby falls to 3-1; lose to Penn

By PETER SANDS
Staff Reporter

Coming off a successful opening win against Drexel University, Villanova rugby met St. Joseph's Oct. 10. The Wildcats pounced on the Hawks and controlled the game.

The first points were tallied by Kevin Braz on a penalty kick from almost fifty yards. St. Joe's retaliated with its own kick and tied it up 3-3. In an impressive run, Tim Kemple, Adam Pasieka and Tony Nashawaty combined to put 'Nova ahead. 'Nova handed St. Joe's a defeat, advancing to 2-0.

The Cats edged out a strong Temple University squad in their next contest 20-15. The Owls scored first, but the game went back and forth. The pack, consisting of Chris Friesenberg, Boy Gary, Tony Bolliger, Rob Colligan, Solomon Grundy, Dave Asker, Kemple and Nashawaty played superbly, driving into the try zone for 'Nova's first points. The Cats improved their record to 3-0 and an EPRU title was in sight. Only an unbeaten Pennsylvania team stood between the Cats and the title.

UPenn scored first and 'Nova came back with a penalty kick. Then, the Cats' visions of glory began to slowly fade as Pennsylvania's faultless play began to dismember the 'Nova team. Despite impressive play by the wing of Billy Bisconne, Joe Retro, Jay Lures, Jerry O'Connell and Braz, the Cats still lost, falling to 3-1.

"It was a vision quest, man. We had the tools, the heart, and the desire, but we came up a little short," said scrum-half Joe Baker.

Villanova next faces Swarthmore Nov. 1 at 1 p.m.

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Carole Zajac

This week the Villanovan recognizes Carole Zajac as the Athlete of the Week. The senior took first place at the Big East Championships Oct. 23 to help lead the cross country team to its fourth straight conference title. In the process, Zajac set a course record with a time of 16:46 over the 5000-meter race.

Zajac's consistency is one reason the Cats are currently ranked No. 1 in the nation and own a 25-race winning streak. She and her teammates will try to maintain their dominance as they await the NCAA Championships Nov. 23.

'Nova falls from contention

By MICHEL DAVIES
Staff Reporter

Coach Larry Sullivan faces a dilemma in the coming weeks. After losing two Big East games and one Philadelphia Soccer Seven game, it appears that 'Nova is out of contention to win either of the two leagues. The dilemma Sullivan faces is whether to give playing time to his inexperienced freshmen so that the team can be better next year, or to stick with his seniors and try to salvage the current season.

Although 'Nova does play in the Big East, another league that the team competes in is the Philadelphia Soccer Seven. This league, consisting of Penn, LaSalle, Philadelphia Textile, Temple, Drexel, St. Joseph's, and Villanova, is one in which 'Nova looked to contend. After previously beating Temple, LaSalle, and Penn, 'Nova only needed to beat Textile to assure themselves at least a co-championship.

Oct. 21 Textile came to 'Nova to play what would be the deciding game in the Soccer Seven. The Wildcats jumped out to an early lead as senior Eric Hinds knocked in junior Joe Roy's header. Villanova's defense was successful for the rest of the half, not allowing a goal. With a 1-0 lead at halftime, 'Nova looked to come out and put some insurance goals in the net, but the Cats never had a chance. Textile came out and scored two goals in ten minutes to take a 2-1 lead. An unproductive 'Nova offense was unable to score again and the 2-1 Textile lead turned out to be the final score.

Being beaten by Textile would all but mathematically ruin any chances to win the Soccer Seven. But 'Nova was still alive in the highly acclaimed Big East. Although they were 1-4 in league play, a record of 4-4 would still make it possible for the Cats to qualify for the tournament. The trip to Connecticut was therefore a must-win situation.

Unfortunately though, it was never meant to be. The team immediately fell victim to injuries. Freshman goalie "Ziggy" Zeppos collided with senior defenseman Jim Van Dusen. As a result both had to leave the game. Backup goalie Mike Guarino was forced to come into the game unprepared, and the Huskies scored 15 minutes later. The half ended with Connecticut leading 1-0.

'Nova needed to score one goal to tie UConn and send the game into overtime. But with only 10 minutes left in what was a stagnant second half, the Huskies added two insurance goals and went on to defeat 'Nova 3-0.

Now that the Wildcats are out of the Big East tournament and have no hopes of winning the Soccer Seven, Sullivan has to make a decision. With nearly eight seniors possibly leaving next season, there will be many slots to fill.

Upcoming games this week include contests against Big East rival Seton Hall and Providence. Look for younger players to get more playing time as Sullivan prepares for next season.

Midnight Madness

basketball team will make its appearance and run through some drills. A slam-dunk contest will follow at approximately 11:45 p.m. Then, as the magical hour approaches, the team will be divided into two squads and scrimmage for 20 to 30 minutes.

"We hope to kick off the year on a very positive note," said Assistant Coach Steve Pinone, a member of the 1985 national championship team. "This is a new era in Villanova basketball and we hope the students, community and alumni come out and support this team."

Hopefully, this year's first-ever Midnight Madness will generate the turnout that Lappas enjoyed last season at Manhattan College. Over 750 fans turned out for the festivities. This is especially impressive when considering Manhattan only has 2600 students.

"This is good for the school's morale," said Lappas. "The students are very important because there are no fans that can be more enthusiastic (at the games) than our students."

With plenty of free giveaways, a slam-dunk contest and a glimpse of the new Villanova Wildcats, Saturday's Midnight Madness will be exciting from start to finish.

"I hope that it will serve as a pep rally for the school," said freshman Jaime Gregg, "to see the upcoming team as it prepares for the season under Coach Lappas."

Yankee Conference

By FRANK SCHNEIDER
Staff Reporter

The eighth week of Yankee Conference play saw three teams extend their impressive winning streaks and this year's high scoring trend continue.

Boston 34 Rhode Island 21

Boston University earned its first win of the season over hapless Rhode Island 34-21. Boston University's offense clicked for the first time this season with quarterback Greg Moore leading the way. Moore was 33 of 54 passing for 306 yards and three TDs. This impressive performance earned him Yankee Conference Offensive Player of the Week honors.

The Terrier defense was led by John Schaefer. Schaefer is third in the Yankee Conference in tackles, averaging 12.6 per game. The Rams were led by All-American tight end Darren Rizzi. Rizzi had 8 catches for 132 yards to keep him on top of the Yankee Conference in receiving.

Delaware 37 Navy 21

Delaware defeated I-A opponent Navy 37-21. The Blue Hens' offense was led by Lanue Johnson, who only touched the ball eight times, but gained an amazing 159 yards. He rushed the ball three times for 42 yards and three TDs. He also had five catches for 117 yards. Delaware now has the best rushing offense in the Yankee Conference averaging 241 yards per game.

Towson St. 28
James Madison 21

James Madison continued its four-game losing streak with a 28-21 loss to Towson St. James Madison's defense continues to falter, having now given up 269 points in eight games. The Dukes also allow 478.4 yards per game of total offense. It is surprising that JMU has a plus-4 turnover ratio. Eriq Williams did reach an important milestone for the only bright spot of the contest for JMU. He now has over 7,000 total yards in his career (7,140: 4952 passing/2188 rushing).

Connecticut 37 Maine 30

Connecticut improved to 2-2 in the Yankee Conference with a 37-30 win over Maine. The Huskies had two of this week's Yankee Conference award winners lead them to victory. Gary Bailey was the Yankee Conference Defensive Player of the Week. He had 13 tackles and had a role in four turnovers. He caused a fumble, intercepted a pass and recovered two other fumbles. The Huskies also featured Rookie of the Week Zeke Rodgers. The freshman quarterback threw for 191 yards in his collegiate debut. The Black Bears were led again by Emilio Colon. He threw for 265 yards and two TDs.

New Hampshire 10
Northeastern 10

New Hampshire tied Northeastern for the only tie in the Yankee Conference, 10-10. One of the top performers in the game was Greg Lewis. The Wildcats' defensive back tied a UNH record with three interceptions. The feat places him fourth in the Yankee Conference in interceptions. Silas Calhoun, a NU defensive back, had 11 tackles and an interception on the other side of the ball in this defensive struggle.

Richmond 41 VMI 18

Richmond's offense continued its dominance with a 41-18 drubbing of the Virginia Military Institute. Richmond has the Yankee Conference's leading passer and rusher in Greg Lilly and Uly Scott, respectively. The Spiders average 35.6 points per game and 468 yards of total offense. They have already scored 249 points in seven games and are now second in the Yankee Conference behind Delaware.

Virginia 33
William & Mary 7

William & Mary was completely overmatched against I-A and 24th-ranked Virginia this week. The Tribe was destroyed, as expected, 33-7. The loss halted the Tribes' seven-game winning streak. They are still off to their best start in 10 years, however, and only allow 18 points per game.

Top 10 I-AA

By TODD LESKANIC

No. 1 Northern Iowa 27 No. 2 Idaho

Jay Johnston completed an 84-yard TD pass to Kenny Shedd to give N. Iowa a 27-23 lead late in the third quarter. Idaho cut the lead to one late in the fourth but missed a 62-yard FG that would have given it the win. With the win, Northern Iowa retains its No. 1 ranking while Idaho dropped to No. 3.

No. 3 Marshall 52 Tenn.-Chat. 23

Marshall quarterback Michael Payton threw for 191 yards and two TDs to lead the Thundering Herd to victory. Marshall wide receiver Troy Brown caught six passes for 114 yards and two TDs.

The Thundering Herd defense held the Moccasins to 249 total yards and forced two fumbles. Marshall moves up to No. 2 while Tenn. Chat. drops to 2-5, 0-3.

No. 4 Midd. Tenn. St. 30 SE Missouri 16

Tailback Brigham Lyons rushed for 111 yards on 15 carries and scored two TDs to give MTSU the victory. Kipp Bayless added another 88 yards on the ground and caught five passes for 72 yards and one TD.

SE Missouri had cut the lead to 28-16 early in the fourth quarter when an MTSU lineman recovered a fumble on a two point conversion. He proceeded to run it 90 yards to give MTSU the two points and the victory.

MTSU improves to 6-1, 5-0 while SE Missouri drops to 1-6, 1-4.

No. 5 NE Louisiana 28 NW Louisiana 18

NE Louisiana upped its record to 6-2, 5-0 and occupies first place in the Southland Conference.

No. 6 The Citadel 36 W. Carolina 31

Defensive back Dan Johnson's 51-yard interception return helped the Citadel overcome a second half deficit at W.C.U. The Citadel is now 7-1, 4-1 while W. Carolina is 4-3, 2-1.

No. 7 Delaware 37 Navy 21

Lanue Johnson ran for two TDs and caught five passes for 117 yards to give Delaware its fourth straight win. With the 117 receiving yards, Johnson broke the 17-year-old school record for most receiving yards by a running back in a game.

Junior placekicker Steve Leo was 3 of 3 including a record breaking 54-yarder.

Navy is now 0-6, having lost nine straight and 17 of its past 18 contests.

No. 8 Stamford Idle
Next week: vs. Alabama- Birmingham

No. 9 Richmond 41 VMI 18

Quarterback Greg Lilly completed 12 of 18 for 227 yards and two TDs to help Richmond to the rout of VMI. Richmond's leading rusher, Uly Scott, ran for 119 yards and two TDs. Also contributing was wide receiver Rod Booth, who caught three passes for 102 yards and one TD.

The Spider defense held VMI to 83 passing yards and forced six fumbles. Richmond is now 6-1. VMI is a miserable 1-7, 0-5.

No. 10 Youngstown St. Idle
Next week: vs. Eastern Illinois

No. 10 William & Mary 7 Virginia 33

Jerrod Washington ran for 197 yards and teammate Kevin Brooks added another 124 to give the Cavaliers the victory. Virginia's success on the ground was no surprise as its offensive line outweighed the Tribe's by 43 pounds per man.

The Cavalier defense held William & Mary to 22 rushing yards and under 150 total yards. Virginia is now 6-2 and 4-2 in the ACC. The Cavaliers are currently ranked No. 24 in the Division I-A rankings.

Tomorrow, 1:30 p.m.
TV: None, Radio: WXVU, 89.1 FM
Last Week: Massachusetts 13, Villanova 9
Boston U. 34, Rhode Island 21

OUTLOOK: This is a matchup of two teams trying desperately to snap losing streaks. The difference, though, is that for 'Nova, this game has post-season implications while Rhode Island is playing to build momentum for next year.

Another loss for 'Nova and its season also is probably finished. In the midst of a two-game slide, the Cats must put an end to the bleeding immediately, and there is no better place to start than against the struggling Rams.

Coming off a 34-21 loss to B.U., the Rams' losing streak has reached six games. The closest the Rams have come to winning was against Hofstra, when they fell by 10, 28-18. Meanwhile, the two 'Nova losses have been by a combined five points.

Despite the losses, Rhode Island comes into Villanova Stadium with nothing to lose and everything to gain. But this is the first time all season that the Cats' backs are against the wall. We will see how the Cats respond. Expect them to come out ready to play and dispose of the Rams as quickly as possible, something they have had trouble doing all season. Although mysterious spirits could be swirling around Villanova Stadium tomorrow, the Cats should romp.

Prediction: Villanova 27, Rhode Island 3

Golf wraps season

The Villanova golf team captured a fifth-place finish among 26 teams at the St. John's Invitational to complete its fall season. The tournament was held Oct. 17-18 in Farmingdale, New York at the par 71 Bethpage State Park Course.

The first day scores were high and 'Nova placed sixth due to a strong wind, but the second day the team was able to pull ahead of Loyola College of Baltimore, Md. Freshman Chris Fiordalis led the Cats, taking 16th place, while senior Chris Cox followed in 21st and junior Rob Booth took 23rd.

Coach Jim Spagnolo and team members were satisfied because, as co-captain Rob Booth said, "we beat most of the teams that usually give us trouble."

Seven team members qualified for the Big Five Championship held Oct. 26 at Cedar Brook Country Club in Blue Bell, Pa. Only four of the seven showed up as a result of some confusion and miscommunication, so the scores had to be dropped.

The team can now lay down its clubs and wait for the spring season to begin in March.

Water Polo improves to 12-9; seeded 5th in MAC Tourney

By ERIC WARREN

The month of October for the Villanova water polo team has been a month in which the Cats have continually broken new ground. The Wildcats are seeded fifth, the highest in the team's history, entering the Mid-Atlantic Conference Championships at Princeton this weekend. Villanova finished regular season play with a record of 12-9.

The Wildcat Invitational Tournament took place at the duPont pool Oct. 10-11. The first game pitted 'Nova against the Boston College Eagles. Excellent goaltending by John O'Keefe combined with four goals by Marc Verotsky and three each from Jim Floerchinger and Ryan Engstrom helped the Cats defeat B.C. for the second time this season 16-11.

The Harvard Crimson had beaten Villanova by one goal earlier in the season, so revenge was definitely on the minds of the Wildcats. However, the Cats struggled offensively, missing the goal six times in the first half. In the third quarter, 'Nova was able to pull ahead on a 4-0 rally, but Harvard's speed was the determining factor in the fourth quarter. Harvard's margin of victory was two goals as the final tally read 17-15. Verotsky and Paul Cera accounted for 10 of 'Nova's goals and O'Keefe had nine saves in the loss.

"Harvard is the type of team where if we played them 10 times, we'd win five and they would win five," said Head Coach Dan Sharidan.

A strong team from Iona College was Villanova's third opponent of the tournament. With the score tied and 35 seconds left on the game clock, Iona took a shot which 'Nova goaltender John O'Keefe blocked with his head, sending the game into overtime. O'Keefe had 17 saves in goal and Verotsky drilled home six goals, but three key kickouts by Pete Trout allowed Cera to score the game-winning man-up goal in the end.

"It was an outstanding game; it's the first time we've ever beaten a team from Iona," said Sharidan of this team's 14-13 victory.

Princeton's basketball team is famous for its tough half-court defense. This defense seemed to creep its way into the pool as Princeton swamped almost every 'Nova attack. Ranked No. 17 in the nation, the men from Princeton would not let the Wildcats get a shot off close to the goal. Princeton capitalized on every 'Nova mistake and prevailed by the score of 17-

"Jeff Brown was our best defensive player; he held the league's leading scorer to only two goals," said Sharidan. Verotsky and Cera combined for six goals in the loss.

Villanova traveled to the Bucknell Tournament Oct. 17-18. The first game gave the Cats a chance to avenge their last loss as they matched up against Princeton. The Tigers opened a comfortable lead early on, and rolled to a 21-11 victory. Verotsky tallied six goals followed by Floerchinger with three and John Driscoll added another two.

Slippery Rock, ranked No. 12 in the nation and possibly the best team on the East Coast was 'Nova's second opponent. Substitutions by both teams kept the game interesting as 'Nova tried to rest its starting six in preparation for the third game, and Slippery Rock tried not to run up the score. Nine different 'Nova players scored in the loss.

The final game of the weekend was the game the Wildcats had been waiting for all year. The outcome would determine the seedings at the Mid-Atlantic Conference Championships. 'Nova came out strong and was able to open up a 6-2 lead against Iona College. At halftime the score was 8-5, but the third quarter saw the Cats falling apart. They were held scoreless in the third quarter as Iona rifled in three to tie the game at 8-8. The Cats tightened their defense in the fourth quarter and turned the tables as they held Iona scoreless while scoring three goals, to win 11-8.

"We're right where I hoped we would be, I'm really proud of the guys," said Sharidan whose team is now in contention to qualify for the Eastern Championships.

Cats fall to UMass as offense falters

By ANDY FITZPATRICK
Sports Editor

What a difference a week makes.

When last we saw the Cats before Fall Break, the squad was 5-0 and ranked No. 2 in the nation. Despite injuries and the lack of a consistent passing attack, the expected season of greatness was still intact. All the Cats had to do was beat rival Delaware, considered the toughest team on the schedule, and the hopes of an unbeaten season would be probable.

Not anymore.

After losing a 21-20 heartbreaker against Delaware Oct. 17, the Cats could not get back on track in the slop at Massachusetts last Saturday. The 13-9 loss was the team's second straight and dropped its record to 5-2, 3-2 in the Yankee Conference. Nevertheless, the pollsters took into effect the close losses and ranked the Cats 14th nationally in the latest poll going into tomorrow's contest at Villanova Stadium against Rhode Island at 1:30 p.m.

And well they should have, considering that both games came down to questionable officiating. Replays showed that Delaware quarterback Bill Vergantino should have been called for a safety in the second half of the Cats' one-point loss. Then at UMass, a go-ahead touchdown pass from Tom Colombo to Straughn Lumpkin with six minutes left was nullified, as officials incorrectly ruled Lumpkin out of bounds.

On top of all this, the field at UMass was practically unplayable, as the game was played in the rain and mud. It did not help matters that 1,500 band members paraded on the field at halftime. Although this hampered the 'Nova attack, keep in mind that the Minutemen, now a surprising 5-1, played under the same conditions; something easily forgotten since they won the game.

Whether this is sour grapes or not, the Cats must go on with the season and put these two tough losses behind them. There is still time to salvage the season as the Cats control their own destiny — win their last four, make the playoffs; lose another game, goodbye Cats.

One way to do this is for the offense to start putting the ball into the end zone and taking some pressure off the defense.

In the last two games, the offense has produced just three touchdowns, failing to capitalize or settling for field goals. The efficiency in this department must be improved, and part of the problem is penalties. The Cats cannot win if they continue to beat themselves.

Speaking of teams that are struggling, Rhode Island (1-6, 0-5), has had problems beating anyone this year. The Rams have dropped six straight and are in serious jeopardy of not winning a conference game. This should be a great opportunity for the Cats, especially the offense, to get their confidence back and snap the two-game skid.

NOTES: The Yankee Conference made its presence known this week as one of the top I-AA conferences in the country by means of the latest Top 20 poll, placing four teams. They are Delaware (6), Richmond (9), Villanova (16), and Massachusetts (20) ... The drought continues at UMass as the Cats have not won there since 1978. On the other hand, 'Nova has never lost to Rhode Island, dating back to 1988 ... Look for the shuffling of quarterbacks to continue this week as Tom Colombo and Brad Parpan both could see action. Colombo is likely to start.

Flanker Harold Hart caught a nine-yard TD pass from quarterback Tom Colombo, but it was not enough as the Cats lost 13-9 at UMass.

Women race to fourth straight Big East title; Zajac takes first

By SEAN KELLY
Staff Reporter

Greatness is showing up in fours these days as the women's cross country team heads down the path towards the NCAA Championships Nov. 23. With a fourth straight national title still well in sight, the women have already captured their fourth consecutive Big East crown after dominating the field at last weekend's championships. Head Coach Marty Stern and assistant coaches John Marshall and Judy West also added to the streak after being honored with the Coaching Staff of the Year title for the fourth straight year.

Before the Big East Championships, however, 'Nova needed to take care of business at the Paul Short Invitational at Lehigh University earlier this month. The competition was familiar to the Cats as they faced Providence and Penn State for the second time this season. This meet was a big confidence builder for the harriers as their top five finishers ended the race among the top eight places.

Carole Zajac, who West said is, "the country's most recognized and accomplished runner right now," finished the race in first place at 16:29.7. This time she not only won her the race but also broke the course record previously held by Villanova graduate, Sonia O'Sullivan.

Not far behind the first and second place finishers were seniors Nnenna Lynch and Cheri Goddard who have been running extremely well. Lynch finished third, only six seconds behind the second place finishing Tracy Dahl of Iowa, while Goddard came in at an impressive fourth place time of 17:06.3.

As usual, freshmen sensations Meghan Flowers and Jen Rhines added to the dominating performance by the Wildcats finishing with fifth and eighth place times of 17:12.0 and 17:22.3. Villanova once again left an obvious gap between themselves and the second-place finishing Nittany Lions with 51 points separating their scores.

After a two week period of rest and recuperation, the Wildcats returned to the cross country path for the highly competitive Big East Championships. In what is arguably the nation's top women's cross country conference, the 'Nova harriers found little trouble taking charge of the lead positions. While the Cats' confidence level was quite high after commanding most of the Big East in previous invitationals, the anticipation as well as the pressure of capturing a fourth straight title was well at hand. The seniors, in particular, were even more excited because the conference championships were going to be their toughest test in retaining the 25-race winning streak.

"All of the girls were fantastic," said West. "Teams like Georgetown and Providence really psyche themselves up for the Big East Championships with this 'Beat 'Nova' attitude. Our girls really rose to the occasion. We're so happy with what they were able to do."

To no one's surprise, Zajac blew away the competition with a thrilling first place individual championship. Incidentally, her remarkable time of 16:46 was also a course record. Goddard and Lynch once again finished close to one another with fourth and sixth place finishes. Flowers and sophomore Becky Spies added to Villanova's final tally of 28 points with seventh and 10th place placements.

As the days become fewer in number towards the national championships in Indiana, the tension begins to build. There is an obvious presence of the streak but more importantly of the coveted NCAA crown. The coaching staff even admits that the more wins they get the more pressure is put on them. For now though, the team is staying focused on the ECAC Region 2 Championships on November 14 and on its one-meet-at-a-time mentality. After this meet, they can really start directing attention towards the ultimate goal of winning yet another national title.

Lappas era begins at midnight

By ED WASIELEWSKI

The 1992-93 Villanova Wildcats kick off their season at midnight Oct. 31, the first official day collegiate teams are allowed to practice under new NCAA regulations. Not only will this signal the beginning of the season, but this initial practice marks the beginning of a new era in 'Nova basketball, the Steve Lappas era.

Amongst the changes Lappas brings to 'Nova, he also wants to begin a new tradition, somewhat like football's annual Blue-White scrimmage. This new tradition is Midnight Madness.

"It's going to be an exciting night," said Lappas. "It's going to be a totally different way to begin the season."

The night will start at 10:00 p.m. with MTV's Dr. Dre spinning records for the student body. Over the two hours, students will be selected to shoot for prizes and play the coaches in a four-on-four game.

Following these activities, the

They come from California, Texas and New England. They cross the Atlantic Ocean from Ireland and the border from Canada. They are the 1992 Villanova men's and women's cross country teams. They are very successful. The women are ranked No. 1 in the United States. The men are currently ranked No. 5 in America. It is the finest distance program in the United States.

The athletes and coaches are very proud to represent Villanova. We travel extensively throughout America, including trips to Arkansas, Florida and Indiana. Wherever we go there are alumni cheering for us and rooting the Wildcats to victory. It is a classy group of people and a great team.

Running cross country for Villanova means waking up before the sun rises, taking an early morning run, going to classes, practicing for two or more hours in the afternoon, studying, going to sleep and then waking up the next morning to take an early morning run. On the weekends we travel throughout America, running in various cross country meets. The women race 5000 meters (3.1 miles) and the men race 10,000 meters (6.2 miles) on cross country courses that are typically held on golf courses or state parks. Both the men and women's teams have the toughest schedule in the NCAA, competing against teams that are consistently ranked in the Top 20.

Senior Terrence Mahon from California is a scholar-athlete. Not only was he named to the NCAA Academic All-American Cross Country team, but he captured the IC4A Cross Country Championship title last year. Louie Quintana, David Hartman, Ken Nason and Kyle Watsonhave established themselves as possibly the finest quartet of sophomores in America. Quintana alone qualified for and competed in the 1992 Olympic Trials in New Orleans. Michael Going, a solid junior from Long Island, has proven to be a vital link in the Wildcat chain over the years. Freshman Matt Lamourie from Canada has helped bolster our team and elevate them to its high ranking in the NCAA polls.

The women's cross country team is just as impressive as the men's. Junior Carole Zajac, the most distinguished distance runner in the United States, holds the 10,000-meter collegiate record. Nnenna Lynch, along with her Academic All-American honors, was the 1992 NCAA 3000-meter champion in outdoor track. Senior Cheri Goddard has garnered eight All-American awards. Reenie Ruopoli, a great veteran, has experienced a multitude of victories over her years, including the 1992 ECAC 800-meter championship. Seniors Lynch, Goddard and Ruopoli have never been on a losing team at Villanova and have provided invaluable leadership to their teammates. Fort Worth native Megan Flowers and Jen Rhines from New York have become the two finest freshmen in the country. Becky Spies, the 1991 National High School 1500-meter champion, is becoming one of the finest young runners in America and has helped us to many victories.

Even though these athletes do not have much personal time, they have found time to help the homeless in Norristown and in Philadelphia. They have donated clothing and shoes to the homeless and have helped feed the poor and hungry. They pray together, play together, study together and win together. All Villanovans should be very, very proud of this fine group of students. I know that I am the luckiest man in the world to be associated with these athletes.

Former U.S. Attorney General Meese analyzes election

By LARISA EPATKO
News Editor

A lecture entitled, "America at the Crossroads: Election '92" featured Edwin Meese III, former attorney general, Nov. 4 at the Villanova Room of Connelly Center.

Meese, who worked in former President Ronald Reagan's administration, spoke on the impact of Bill Clinton's election as president of the United States.

"The results of the election last night [Nov. 3] give us an important starting point ... Where does our country go from here?" said Meese.

At the beginning of campaign '92, most voters said they were dissatisfied with the candidates to choose among, Meese said. Some even said it was like choosing between airplane and hospital food, he added.

After the campaign, however, three out of four voters at the polls said they were satisfied with the choices they had, according to Meese.

The campaigning seemed to go on forever, Meese said, because instead of going in cycles, it was one continuous campaign. In June, H. Ross Perot dropped out, which made the remaining candidates renew their campaigning with vigor. Clinton's bus tour also took the Democratic campaign up to the Republic National Convention, Meese added.

"The effect of Perot on the campaign added interest to the campaign and made a new election of excitement," Meese said. "We've had third party candidates before, but I don't think any Independent candidate since Theodore Roosevelt has had such an impact."

Perot provided comic relief and raised important issues, particularly the federal deficit, which helped produce the large turnout at the polls on election day, said Meese.

"The large voter turnout was a great credit to our democratic system ... voter apathy seems a thing of the past," he said.

About 70 percent of voters polled said they believed the country was headed in the wrong direction, according to Meese. This was the first election since the end of the cold war, which removed the foreign policy issue as a major voting factor. The overriding issue in the campaign was the economy, he said.

> It is my hope that he [Clinton] will choose not to raise taxes because it will slow economic growth.
> Edwin Meese II, former attorney general

"Bill Clinton ran one of the best campaigns I've seen in a long time," said Meese. Clinton campaigned as a different kind of Democrat and made it clear that he did not fit the mold of Walter Mondale or Michael Dukakis, Meese added.

Clinton favors the death penalty, stresses the importance of supporting business and speaks of restoring the economy in a free market system, said Meese. These views mark a major departure from others in the Democratic Party, he added.

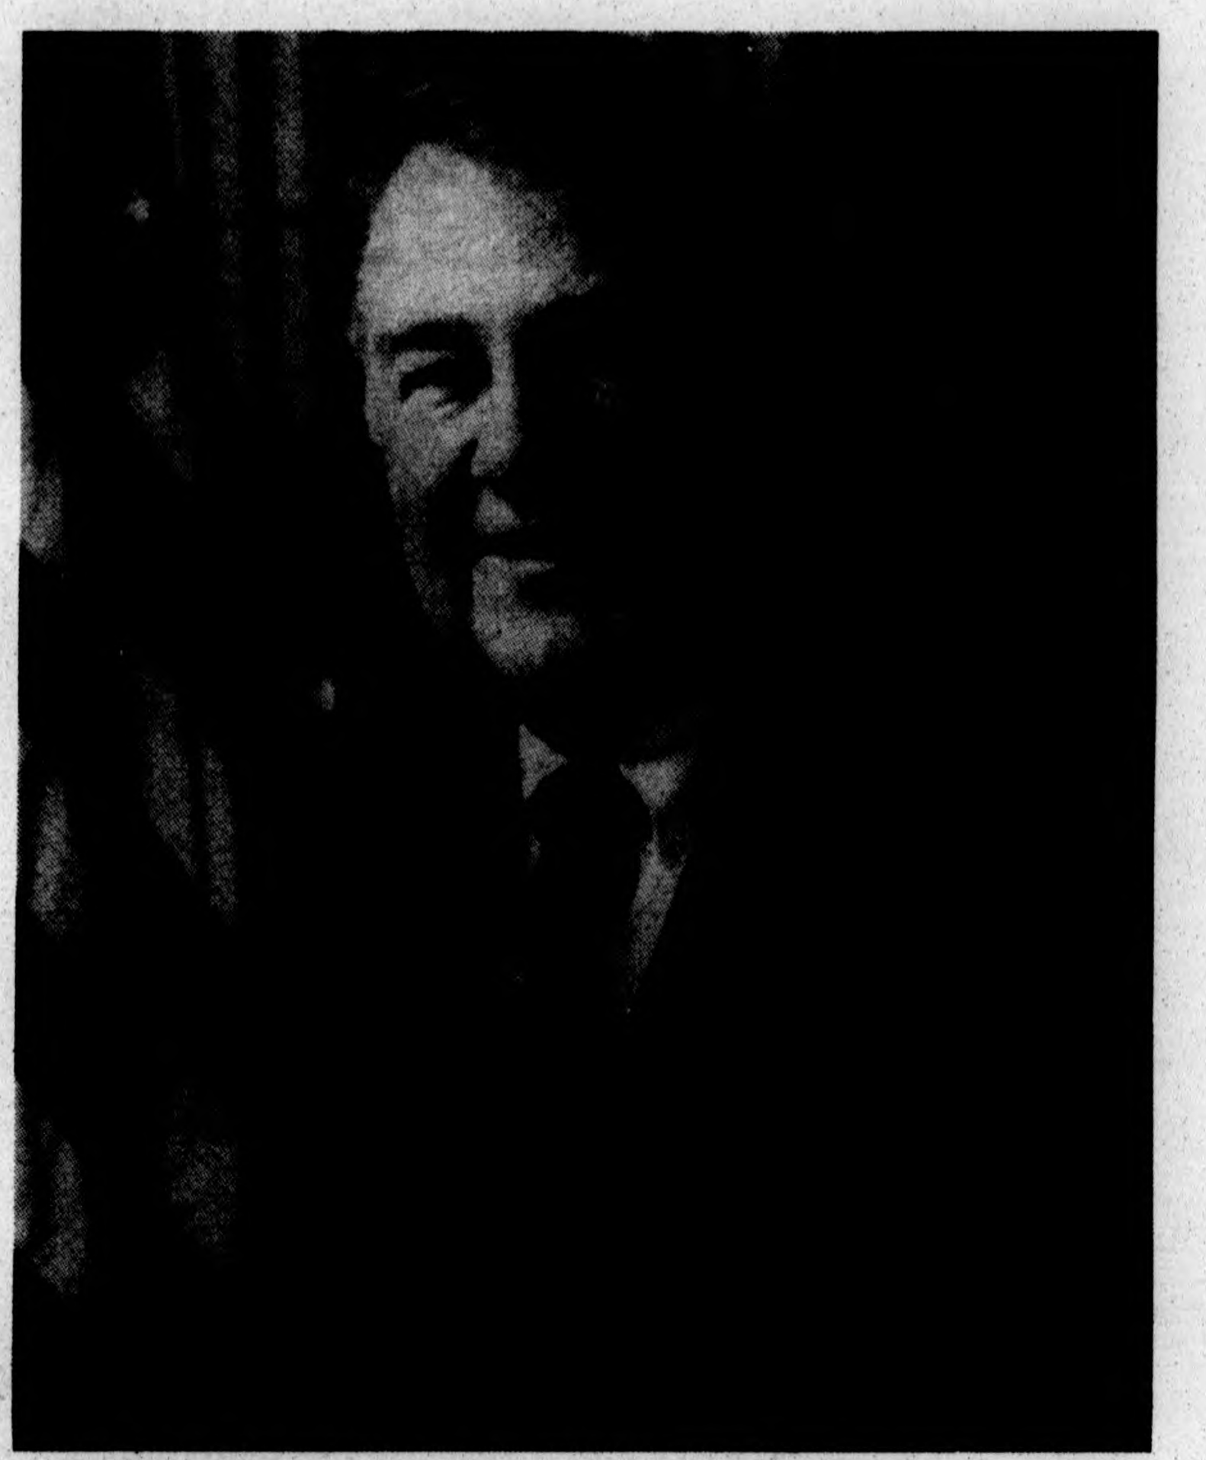
President George Bush decreased in popularity in 1990 when the budget compromise was made, which he admitted in retrospect to be a mistake, said Meese. Instead of helping the economy, the tax increase prolonged the recession, he said. Tax increases never lower the deficit, they only increase spending, Meese added.

Recent polls show voters are still concerned about issues, such as increases in crime, college tuition becoming more expensive, the education system worsening, and lack of opportunity for the younger generation, said Meese.

"Whenever there's change in the administration ... the expectation of the public is raised that something will be done to improve the nation's situation," Meese added.

Clinton's tax plan includes a raise in taxes from 2 percent of the population, or those annually earning $200,000. The problem is 2 percent of the population actually earns an annual salary of $66,000, according to Meese. He said "it is my hope that he [Clinton] will choose not to raise taxes because it will slow economic growth."

Meese also said he hopes Clinton will use caution when reducing the defense budget in order to maintain America's military status and the quality of men and women in the armed forces. After citing the Gulf War, Meese added, "We don't know when the next threat will arise."



Former Attorney General Edwin Meese III discussed the '92 Election on campus Nov. 4.

Special Olympians gear up for weekend of competition

President-elect Clinton vows to change America

By JENNIFER CASTELLI

After almost a year of personal and political rhetoric, Bill Clinton was elected Nov. 3 as the next president of the United States. The 46-year-old former governor of Arkansas will be the first president from the so-called Baby Boom generation.

Clinton captured 370 electoral votes, which included key states such as California and Pennsylvania. Voter turnout was also at a high, and exit polls cited the economy as the driving force behind the big numbers, according to the Nov. 4 edition of USA Today.

President George Bush conceded the election to Clinton in a speech on his return to the White House Nov. 4 by urging the American people to support the new administration. "The government goes on as it well should," said Bush, in a televised speech from the south lawn of the White House.

Other key elections in the country changed the shape and color of the U.S. Congress. Democrats gained 19 seats in the House and the number of women and minorities in Congress rose to its highest ever, 50 and 67 respectively. Most notably, Democrat Carol Moseley Braun of Illinois will be the first black woman senator.

"I think Bill Clinton will be able to work well with the new Congress," said Dr. Lowell Gustafson, political science. Several prominent members of Congress, includ-

University Senate holds third meeting

By KATE SZUMANSKI
Assistant News Editor

The University Senate held its third meeting of the 1992-93 academic year Oct. 30 in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

Senate member, the Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., delivered the Invocation address to begin the meeting. The minutes from the Sept. 25 Senate meeting were then unanimously approved. No questions were submitted under the Power of Interpellation, which subjects Senate members to explain official acts or policies.

The Senate announced the appointment of philosophy professor Dan Regan as a faculty member to the Athletic Advisory Committee. Regan will finish the remaining term of the Rev. Edward Hamel, O.S.A., who has retired from the ranks of full-time faculty. His term will expire in May 1994.

"The meeting of the Executive Committee of the Senate with the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees will take place Nov. 23," according to the minutes from the Oct. 30 Senate meeting. Senate Chairman Philip Maurone said notices had been sent to all departments asking for input on topics to be discussed at this bi-annual meeting.

The Senate Executive Committee will meet with the University President, the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., the same day. Maurone asked that any items the senators wished the Executive Committee to discuss at those meetings be forwarded to the Senate office.

Senator Alvin Clay said that the Senate Budget Committee had met and elected its officers for the upcoming year. "The committee reviewed the audited statements dated May 31, 1992 and spent some time discussing the actual expenditures vs. the budgeted expenditures, studying the variances. The student figure for recommended increases in student tuition and room and board is usually included in the first draft of the budget by the Administrative Budget Committee as well as the recommended faculty salary increment. The total faculty compensation package recommended this year is 9.5 percent. The Matthew Stuart, brother of accused killer Charles Stuart pleaded guilty Nov. 2 to helping hide the gun that his brother allegedly used to kill his pregnant wife in a hoax that inflamed racial tension and gripped the nation.

Charles and his wife, Carol, were found wounded in their car on Oct. 23, 1989. Carol Stuart, who was pregnant at the time of the incident, died that night. Their son, Christopher, who was delivered in emergency surgery, died Nov. 9.

Matthew Stuart first implicated his brother in the shooting a few months after it took place on Jan. 4, 1990. The next day, Charles Stuart apparently jumped from a bridge to his death.

Stuart, 26, was not charged with a direct role in the slaying. He was sentenced to three to five years in prison and five years probation. He will be eligible for parole after one year.

MOSCOW, Russia

Russian President Boris N. Yeltsin imposed a state of emergency yesterday on two regions along Russia's southern rim in an effort to stem the spread of ethnic fighting.

Fighting in the North Ossetia region this weekend left dozens dead and appeared to mark the bloodiest ethnic flare-up in Russia since the end of the Soviet Union — and one that Yeltsin and other political leaders clearly were determined to quell.

The turmoil in the area is caused by territorial claims on parts of Northern Ossetia by the Ingushis, who were deported from the area by Soviet dictator Joseph Stalin during World War II for alleged collaboration with the Nazis. North Ossetian nationalists, in turn, seek to join with South Ossetia, in neighboring Georgia.

WASHINGTON, D.C.

A presidential commission recommended Nov. 2 that military women must meet the same requirements as men if they are allowed to serve in combat.

The 15-member commission demonstrated that it was deeply split on whether women would be permitted to serve aboard aircraft combat ships and in combat aircraft.

The commission was established in March, a year after the end of the Persian Gulf War, to offer its recommendation on the politically explosive question of whether combat slots should be opened to women, and, if so, which ones.

The panel has spent $4 million. It has pondered the legal, ethical and political effects of opening combat jobs to women, as well as the impact on military effectiveness. In debates before voting on Nov. 2, commissioners overwhelmingly argued that combat effectiveness — not equal opportunity for women — should be the commission's foremost concern.

MONROVIA, Liberia

The Roman Catholic archbishop of Monrovia condemned rebel leader Charles Taylor yesterday for artillery attacks on the Liberian capital and blamed him for the killing of five American nuns.

Four people were reported killed by a mortar shell an hour before a requiem Mass for the nuns began, and three others died in a rocket attack later in the day.

The seven-nation West African military force that has been defending Monrovia for two years announced it would clear the city of armed Liberian factions that have been helping to fend off Taylor's fighters. Gunmen in the groups have been accused of robbing and terrorizing people in the city which has been swollen by refugees to twice its pre-war population of 400,000.

Taylor has denied responsibility for the slayings, saying that the area around their convent was controlled by rival rebels.

Leadership roles expand for women at 'Nova

By CHRISTINE FINGERHUT
Staff Reporter

The appointment of Dr. Helen Lafferty as vice president of the University brings the role of women in leadership to a new level at Villanova. The Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, University president, appointed Lafferty in July 1992 to the newly created position.

The vice president's primary responsibility is to coordinate the internal operations of the President's Office and to oversee programs and functions reporting directly to the President's Office.

Lafferty began her career at Villanova in 1981 as a part-time academic counselor. Although she had no specific career ambitions at Villanova when she first started, her position soon became full-time, which she believes indicated a significant change in attitudes about the importance of academic counseling at the University. In 1986 she became an assistant dean of Arts & Sciences, and then in 1988 she was promoted to associate dean of Arts & Sciences.

Lafferty claims that she has seen changes in the attitude towards women in administration over the years, particularly with the appointment of Dobbin as president in 1988. In his inaugural address, Dobbin outlined the promotion of women to leadership positions as one of the goals of his administration, she said. Lafferty believes there has been a concerted effort to look at highly qualified women candidates for faculty and administrative positions, as well as within the student body.

Lafferty says that although she expected comments about the need to have a "token woman" in a leadership position when she was appointed vice president in July, she found very few references to her gender among her male colleagues.

"Success depends on the quality of your work, and for me, this hasn't been a problem at Villanova," Lafferty said. "In terms of a role model, each individual must answer that personally. If I function as that, so be it," she added.

In terms of reaching out to other women at Villanova, Lafferty said that her contribution is to make it easier for other women to seek positions of leadership in the future.

"Lafferty is one of the most competent administrators we have at Villanova. She embodies a love for the University, and she is an eminent example who is an extraordinary administrator and equally extraordinary in her ability to affirm members of the academic community," said Dr. Barbara Wall, Director of Peace and Justice.

Wall believes that affirmation, the ability to see talent in a person and to respond in such a way that enables that person to take pride in who they are, is one of the most important gifts that women bring to positions of leadership.

According to Wall, the main goal is not to get more women into administration, but rather to get women who have a value system that is reflected in an administration.

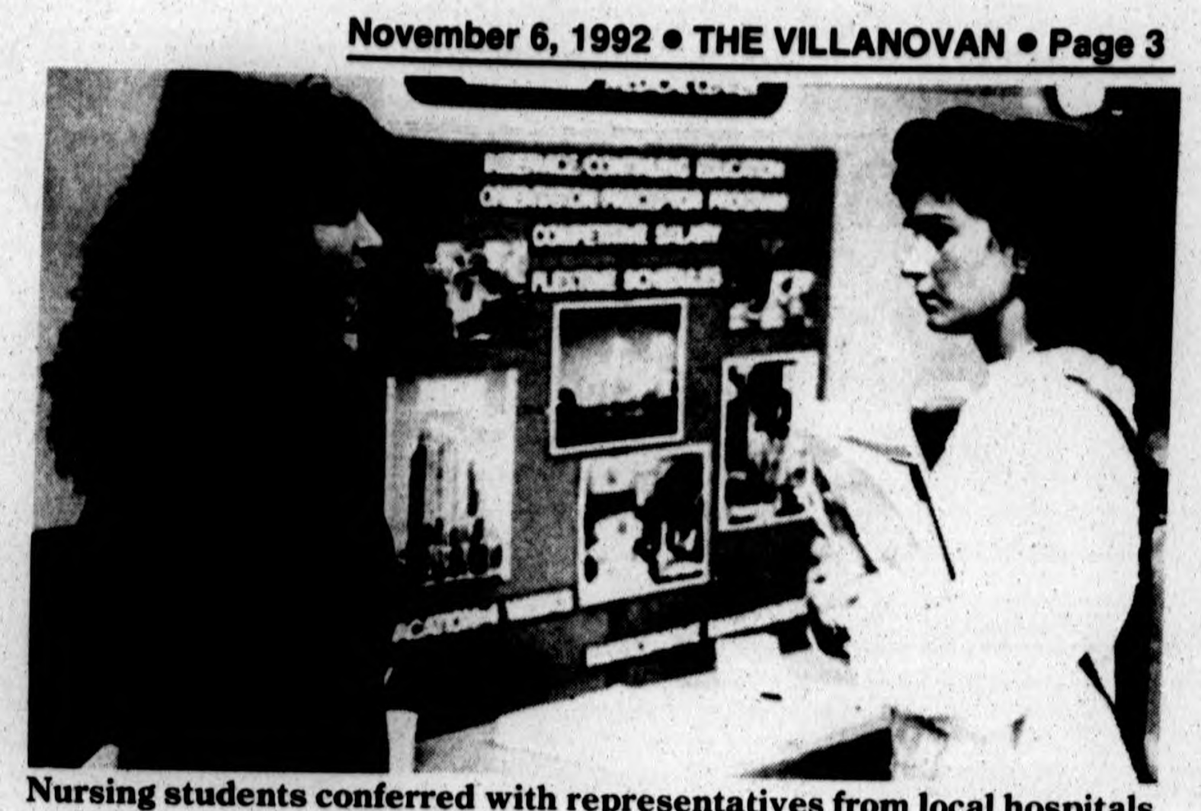
"I have a vision that the women hired in administration are committed to academic excellence, collaborative in decision making, and networking with others throughout the University — women who model leadership as a leadership of service among equals," said Wall. Wall said she agrees with Lafferty that inroads have been made with Dobbin to hire on the basis of quality and merit, and that there has been an attempt to address the issue of women in leadership at Villanova.

Wall is also the director of the women's studies program at Villanova, a program that she feels has been well received by both faculty and students. Although male enrollment in the program is approximately 15 to 20 percent, Wall believes that equitable distribution between men and women in the classes is part of the evolution of the program.

Wall began her career at Villanova in 1984 in the philosophy department, and like Lafferty, has seen changes in the role of women in leadership over the years. Such changes include the first woman chair of the religious studies department, the first female vice president of the University, as a woman and the evolution of the women's studies program and its contribution to University life.

Wall believes that as society changes Villanova will change, and that with more women in positions of national leadership, other women will be energized to act as role models. "It is just to provide women students with competent women role models as they leave this University," says Wall.

"You must spend time in retrospect of your four years at Villanova, and hopefully your experience has led you to conclude that you need to be satisfied with yourself and confident that you will make a contribution to make a difference. In doing this, you must be aware of the importance of your own self-image," Wall added.



Nursing students conferred with representatives from local hospitals on Nursing Career Day Nov. 3.

College of nursing sponsors Career Day

By JANE PAPACCIO
Staff Reporter

The University undergraduate nursing school sponsored a Nursing Career Day Nov. 3 to provide nursing majors the opportunity to meet representatives from various hospitals throughout the area and to learn more about specialized fields of nursing.
specialized fields of nursing.

There was an informational meeting from 10:15-11:15 a.m. in the Connelly Cinema where three nursing alumni spoke about their profession. The speakers discussed their personal specialty areas and explained the importance of specialization today. The nurses handed the floor over to nursing students for a question-and-answer session following each presentation.

The main event of the Nursing Career Day took place in duPont Pavillion from 11:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. Representatives from more than 105 hospitals and other health care organizations set up informational booths, allowing the nurses to gather information about many hospitals and also pick up applications. Although most of the hospitals were from this area, there were also hospital representatives from hospitals in New Jersey, New York, Connecticut and Massachusetts.

Program focuses on 'Nova playwright

By BETSY DONOHUE
Staff Reporter

"The Mayor's Wife," by Marian Hammonds Warrington, also known as Marian X, will be the second play in Villanova Theater's Sesquicentennial program of Villanova playwrights, entitled "Nova: A Festival of New Plays by Villanova Playwrights.

Warrington, currently working on her final nine credits of her first graduate degree at the University, describes her play as an epic covering a 50-year period in a family of women. "It's a complicated drama about paths of love, set against a particular political background in Philadelphia, around 1985 [the MOVE bombing]," said Warrington.

Warrington graduated in 1962 from Morgan State University in Baltimore with an undergraduate degree in English. Since then she has become a teacher, a mother and a student again at various schools.

The playwright said she is "eternally grateful" to Albert Benswie of the Theatre Center of Philadelphia, where her first four plays were performed. Benswie, who specializes in new artists' work, gave her the first opportunity to get her feet wet and freedom to realize her artistic vision, said Warrington.

"Warrior Stance: a Sex Comedy," also by Warrington, will open in February at the Freedom Theatre of Philadelphia. "It can be described as a prehistorical African-American battle of the sexes," she said. According to the playwright, it also served as much-needed comic relief after writing the quite serious material of "The Mayor's Wife."

"The Mayor's Wife" is her fifth full-length play and has been three years in the making. The play was inspired by a personal experience with a political fundraiser. "I began to think about what it must be like being married to a powerful political man," she said. The 50-year epic developed from there.

"The Mayor's Wife" will be running Nov. 11-15, and 18-22. Villanova University Theatre box office hours are 1-5 p.m., Monday through Saturday.

Presidential Visitors

Five presidents of the United States have visited Villanova over the decades. Two of them were in office at the time (William Howard Taft and Gerald Ford); two of them came to campus before winning the presidency (John F. Kennedy and George Bush); and one of them was a former president (Grover Cleveland).

The first was ex-President Cleveland, who arrived for the Villanova Commencement in 1902. Cleveland merely expected to receive an honorary degree and was surprised to find that he was slated to address the graduates. In his spontaneous remarks he proposed that one of the most important goals of higher education "should be the cultivation and maintenance of a high standard of American citizenship." He went on to congratulate Villanova for its devotion to this task, one that a Catholic college shared with all institutions of higher learning regardless of religious affiliation.

Eight years later President Taft spoke to the class of 1910. In his commencement address Taft paid high tribute to Pope Leo XIII, to the Roman Catholic Church and to its religious orders and their educational activities.

Nearly a half century passed before another U.S. president came to the campus, in this case a future president. It was in April 1957 that John F. Kennedy, then a U.S. Senator from Massachusetts, received an honorary doctor of laws during a convocation to dedicate Villanova's law school. Four years later when Kennedy was elected president, Villanovans remembered his visit to campus with special pride.

During the campaign of 1976, President Gerald Ford came to Villanova at the invitation of the Villanova Political Union. The organization had also invited challenger Jimmy Carter, but he declined. The Field House was jammed to capacity, as many men and women from the Philadelphia area converged to hear Ford. Although the Secret Service had promised to reserve seats for the Villanova faculty and others connected with the University,. the crowds made a mad dash for seats once the doors were opened and many Villanovans were left standing outside. Despite the local enthusiasm, Ford lost to Carter in November.

George Bush made a stop at Villanova during the presidential primaries of 1980. At that time he was running against Ronald Reagan for the Republican nomination. Speaking at the new Connelly Center, Bush began his address with a play on words by referring to his former opponent in the primaries, John Connally — of Texas. Bush then attacked President Jimmy Carter on numerous fronts. He also vowed to support family values, belief in God and service to the country. Bush subsequently lost his primary fight to Reagan but became Reagan's vice-presidential running mate and went on to win the presidency himself in 1988.

Future generations of students will likely witness other presidential visitors to the Villanova campus. The precise timing of such visits will be determined by the vagaries of American politics or the convenience of campaign itineraries.

Fraternity apologizes for racial slur

By College Press Service

A racial slur in a pledge pamphlet has resulted in a fraternity being suspended from the University of Georgia campus for an indefinite period.

University officials discovered that a printed pamphlet for Pi Kappa Phi fraternity contained the phrase "no niggers." An investigation revealed that some fraternity members knew about the slur and chose to do nothing about it.

More than 1,000 students signed a petition demanding that the fraternity be ousted from the campus. The petition was started by the university's chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The suspension resulted from an Oct. 22 hearing in which the fraternity exercised its option to have the case heard by an administrative officer rather than a student panel.

The fraternity can apply for reinstatement during the summer of 1993.

"I intend the time during this suspension to be spent learning and teaching the value of diversity in a modern university and to satisfy the expectations announced by your national organization and your local alumni," wrote William Bracewell, director of judicial programs who served as hearing officer on the case.

Pi Kappa Phi president James "Tripp" Ackerman III appeared at a recent meeting with the Black Greek Council and read a statement of apology by the pamphlet's author, and said the fraternity did not condone the material.

"The offensive statement was not condoned by the chapter president or the brotherhood," Ackerman said. "I regret that this situation may have caused others to form negative opinions about the Lambda chapter, the Greek community or the University of Georgia community as a whole."

The Greek organizations at the university reacted strongly to the incident, officials said. The school's sororities have refused to participate in Pi Kappa Phi's annual philanthropic War of the Roses football tournament this year.

The ruling against the fraternity was unexpected, although welcomed, said Jonathan Burns, managing editor of the Red and Black, the campus newspaper. "The students seem very pleased with the decision."

Pi Kappa Phi is the seventh fraternity to be suspended from the University of Georgia campus since 1980.

Phoney Baloney to Go, Please

Which student body calls in the most phony pizza orders to America?

The University of Georgia, Michigan State University and the University of California at Los Angeles share the honors, according to Domino's Pizza latest survey.

More than 400 drivers and managers of stores located close to college campuses were questioned in the informal study, which was designed to find out what kinds of pizzas were most popular.

An official at Domino's said that phony orders make up 1 percent of gross business in an average year. The company reports that drivers make a practice of auctioning off pizzas in dorms where orders prove to be a prank.

Students Explore Third World Culture

RIVERSIDE, Calif. — A group of La Sierra University (LSU) students shunned their affluent lifestyle and lived in life-size Third World habitats during a two-week experiment to explore life in other parts of the globe.

The nine habitats, designed by film set designers and built by LSU students, were on display as part of a project entitled "Global Village '92," sponsored by the Adventist Development and Relief Agency, an international organization that deals in disaster relief.

The students ate the same foods and quantities as the indigenous people would eat and experienced firsthand the realities of the kind of life lived by millions of people around the globe.

The Global Village featured homes from developing countries, and included an African Masai kraal, a South American floating reed house, a refugee camp dwelling, an Asian bamboo stilt house, an American homeless family living in a car, an inner-city tenement, a Brazilian tin and cardobard hut, a Southeast Asian refugee boat and an African outdoor school.

Students Protest Violent Crime

POTSDAM, Pa. — One thousand students from Clarkson University and Potsdam College marched in a peaceful demonstration Oct. 15 to protest the increase in violent crimes and sexual assaults in the area.

The protest was dubbed "Take Back the Night" by student organizers.

The crowd, including faculty and village residents, marched for one mile.

Only three weeks before the demonstration, the streets of Potsdam were the scene of a fraternity-related melee that involved hundreds of people after the local bars had closed.

"Instead of causing problems, it is time for fraternities to try to do something positive for the community," said Edward Dubois, a senior at Clarkson and a member of the Beta Tau fraternity.

Many of the students participating in the demonstration were from fraternities and sororities on both campuses.

"It is true violence against women has reached epidemic proportions in this society," said Katherine Wears, an instructor of accounting and law at Clarkson University. "The streets are not the only places we are required to take back."

Tuition rises

By College Press Service

The average student at a four-year public institution will pay a whopping 10 percent more for tuition and fees in 1992-93 according to a new survey from the College Board.

The average tuition fee and charges for in-state students was $2,315 at public four-year colleges or universities, the survey said, which comes to 10 percent more than in 1991-92.

The survey also states that tuition and charges at two-year public institutions averaged $1,292, which also reflects a 10 percent increase.

At private institutions, tuition and fees average $10,498 at a four-year college or university, and $5,621 at a two-year college, increases of 7 and 6 percent respectively over last year.

The increases were not as high as anticipated.

"Given the state of the economy and its impact on state budgets, many people expected much larger increases this year, particularly in the public sector," said Donald M. Stewart, president of the College Board.

Stewart pointed out that last year public colleges raised their tuition and fees an average of 13 percent.

While the College Board survey represents what students are actually paying, Peterson's, a company that specializes in information on American colleges and universities, recently announced that colleges are charging an average of 11.7 percent more in tuition and charges.

The Peterson survey also revealed that more than 60 percent of all undergraduates receive some form of financial aid, both merit- and need-based. Private institutions have the highest level of students who receive financial aid.

Colleges and universities nationwide try to help homeless students

By College Press Service

When John boards the bus after a long day of classes, he often falls asleep, not bothering to tell the driver to awaken him at the stop near his home. It's not because he does not care about getting home, it is because he does not have one.

John's situation is not an isolated case. Across the country, a growing number of college students are finding themselves in the ranks of the homeless, forced to juggle their dreams of success with the reality of survival.

"You have to go slow," said John, an auto mechanics student in his mid-30s at Santa Monica Community College in southern California. John, who holds a part-time job at the college, does not want his real name used because he does not want people to know he is homeless.

> Sometimes I sleep on the bus, taking the bus all the way into downtown Los Angeles and come back in time for classes in the morning. Sometimes I live in a motel for a week when I get paid. Sometimes I live in the streets. Sometimes I stay with a friend if he has a car.

"Sometimes I sleep on the bus, taking the bus all the way into downtown Los Angeles and come back in time for classes in the morning. Sometimes I live in a motel for a week when I get paid. Sometimes I live in the streets. Sometimes I stay with a friend if he has a car."

Although there is no official number of homeless students in the United States, estimates of the total homeless population range from a conservative figure of 500,000 to 3 million, according to advocacy groups.

Even with such a large number of students needing so much, only a few colleges have addressed the problem directly.

One of the largest efforts has taken place in Florida, where the state Legislature passed an amendment earlier this year that exempts homeless students from paying laboratory and instructional fees at state-supported community colleges and universities.

While Hurricane Andrew added a significant number of students to Florida's homeless ranks, college officials said the new law and Florida's sunny climate had already attracted many homeless people who want to be students.

"Our percentage of homeless is higher than the general population. We have about 100 [homeless students] here," said George Young, vice president for student affairs at Broward Community College, which has about 50,000 students on three campuses.

Efforts to help the homeless are also taking place in Massachusetts. Last month, Suffolk University in Boston awarded a homeless man with a four-year scholarship. Kevin Davis, 31, began studying finance this fall under the private university's annual Homeless Student Scholarship Program.

"I always wanted to go to college and now I can," Davis said in a statement. "I have a wonderful opportunity to build a new future."

Students are also pitching in to help other students. At Michigan State University in East Lansing, students have joined with a local philanthropist to open a food bank for students who may live off campus and who are having financial problems, including any homeless students. To encourage participation, 20 percent discounts at the bookstore are being offered to donors, while recipients can receive food without having to prove their need.

Despite these efforts to help homeless students stay in school, rising tuition, cost-of-living increases and continued low wages are forcing more students to choose between attending classes and having a place to call home.

For example, John is on his third venture as a homeless student since moving to California from New York. He became homeless each time because he could not afford to pay for housing.

"I had found a two-bedroom apartment with a South African student. He rented me a room for $280 and we split utilities," said John, who holds odd jobs and receives financial aid. "When the student finished the four years at UCLA, he was supposed to leave the country. I didn't have enough money to keep paying the rent,"

With only $400 a month in income from a part-time job and financial aid, John said he has just enough to pay for food and bills, such as storage for his belongings, a student bus pass and, ironically, a Visa credit card obtained at a student rate.

The inability to pay for housing is so serious that some college officials are opening the doors to their homes and offices to keep students in school.

Law School sponsors abortion symposium

University Press Release

The Villanova University School of Law will host a symposium on the recently adopted American Bar Association (ABA) resolution supporting abortion rights on Tuesday, Nov. 10, at 7:30 p.m. The symposium title is "Neutrality Versus Advocacy: Should the ABA Speak for Its Membership on Abortion?" and the guest speakers will discuss ABA Resolution 110 and what they believe to be the proper role of the ABA in the abortion debate.

Arline Jolles Lotman will defend the current ABA position advocating abortion rights. As an ABA delegate to the 1992 San Francisco Convention, Lotman voted in favor of the resolution supporting abortion rights. Lotman is a graduate of Temple Law School and currently practices municipal finance and transactional law in Philadelphia. Lotman serves as a consultant on gender discrimination.

Gerard J. St. John, a partner in the law firm of Schnader, Harrison, Segal & Lewis, will speak in support of neutrality on abortion rights. St. John, also a graduate of Temple Law School, is a past chair of the St. Thomas More Society (a Catholic lawyers association) and now serves as co-chair of the Respect Life Committee of the Society. As a member of the ABA Pro-Bar Committee for Abortion Neutrality, St. John successfully worked to have the ABA adopt a neutrality stance on abortion rights in 1990. Following the ABA's recent adoption of an advocacy position for abortion rights, St. John resigned from the ABA. St. John currently practices general litigation in Philadelphia.

The moderator will be William D. Valente, a professor of law at the Villanova School of Law. A graduate of the University of Pennsylvania Law School, Valente has taught at Villanova for 28 years. He has lectured on church-state relations, was a former president of the Board of Education for the Archdiocese of Philadelphia and served as a consultant for the National Institute of Education and the National Council for Catholic Education.

said. The soccer and volleyball competitions will be held on campus, while the long distance racing, equestrian and roller skating competitions will be held off campus at Belmont Plateau, Pegasus Equestrian Center and the Villanova Skating Rink, respectively, said Wynne.

Along with the various athletic events going on around campus there will also be a series of special events and performances taking place as well, Wynne said.

The Quaker City String Band will be performing at the opening ceremonies along with the Villanova Dance Ensemble, said Jennifer Santiago, media/publicity chairperson. The Dance Ensemble will also be performing at the Closing Ceremonies, Santiago said. A number of student groups will be performing on Saturday outside of Connelly Center, including the Villanova Twirlers, Poms, NROTC Whiskey Company and the Haveners, she added.

A large part of the Fall Festival centers around Olympic Town which will be presenting some new displays this year, Santiago said. Among these displays will be a computer provided by IBM which is capable of printing out what occurred on a particular day in history. Those visiting Olympic Town will be able to type in their name and date of birth and find out exactly what happened on the day they were born, said Santiago.

There will also be a display commemorating the 200th anniversary of the White House by a group called Very Special Art, Santiago said.

The weekend will draw to a close Nov. 8 at 12:30 p.m. when athletes, coaches and volunteers gather together in the stadium for the Closing Ceremonies.

Organizing the Fall Festival has been a long and involved process, Wynne said. Wynne was chosen as festival director in January. She, along with Lucyna Gorski, assistant director of Student Activities and Bud Derr of the Pennsylvania Special Olympics Organization chose their five-person management team, Wynne said. Wynne, along with the management team, then selected a 20-person festival committee, Wynne said. In total, the Fall Festival is completely organized by 26 students, two advisors and with the help of the Pennsylvania Special Olympics (PaSO) State Office, added Wynne.

"It's definitely our event. We do everything from getting donations to setting up the different events and organizing the ceremonies," Wynne said.

"It wasn't as hard as I'd expected it to be because everyone knew what a good cause it is," said Sheri Howarth, signs and transportation chairperson. "The most important thing is really how much it means to everyone. We just keep reminding each other that it's all worth it just to see a simple smile. The best part is knowing that we're really making them [the athletes] happy," Howarth said.

ing Newt Gingrich, have expressed a desire to cooperate with Clinton and this might "finally bring gridlock to an end, at least for a short time," he added.

For students, Clinton is interested in expanding the role of government in education, said Gustafson. This could mean more training and education, he said.

Clinton also brings with him a strong voice for environmental action in his running mate Al Gore.

"Under Clinton and Gore, environmental policy will change dramatically," said Dr. Adele Lindenmeyer, history. Environmental legislation, such as the Clean Water Act, will be in the forefront in the upcoming year, predicts Lindenmeyer.

"I don't think we'll be 'up to our necks in owls,' as President Bush has said," Lindenmeyer said. Clinton and Gore will take a "much bolder approach to environmental policy" than in years past, she added.

Other issues Clinton will be addressing are abortion and government spending. Clinton will most likely be supporting legislation to legalize abortion and take the decision out of the hands of the Supreme Court, said Gustafson. Also, Clinton will be cutting defense spending, Gustafson added.

student figure is awaited," according to the minutes.

Senator Mary Ann Griffin, secretary of the University Planning and Priorities Committee, said Senate members will be receiving the Annual Report of the Planning and Priorities Committee prior to the Nov. 20 Senate meeting.

"This has been done in order to address concerns about the limited amount of time the committee has to prepare the report. The committee will suggest a Constitutional change at a Senate meeting in the spring of 1993 which will allow the Priorities report to be presented at a second semester Senate meeting and will cover a two-year period. This approach would be more reasonable in that the report will be in to the Administrative Budget Committee before they start final work on the budget in the summer months," according to the minutes.

Maurone said "this would be a significant improvement in the time-frame in relation to the work of the Senate Budget Committee."

Student apathy shattered Nov. 3

Ironically, despite its craziness and downright viciousness, the presidential race leaves us with some hope. Many Villanova students proved publicly that they address issues, possess convictions and feel passionately about their future.

Apathy may not be dead, but Villanova students made a statement against those who think it prevails. We would like to take a moment to recognize some groups who furthered the political conversation.

WXVU, the campus radio station, provided excellent election-night coverage. Their well-organized effort involved studio interviews with Villanova students and professors, live reports via telephone from dorms, area bars and other universities and up-to-the-minute news flashes.

Student government provided hourly transportation to two polling places. We recognize this role as critical. For on-campus students who registered locally, the service was needed.

The College Republicans and Villanovans for Clinton/Gore played a large role in publicly addressing the issues. We thank them for organizing campus events, writing letters to the editor and getting out the vote.

George Bush addressed us directly Tuesday night. Politics, he said to young people, "needs your idealism, it needs your drive, it needs your conviction."

His point: Get involved.

Our point: Keep it up.

Midnight Madness boosts spirits

On Halloween last Saturday, the basketball team and the student body exorcised the ghosts of seasons past and officially began a new era of Villanova basketball.

For the students, they erased the memories of apathy and disrespect displayed last April when booing Rollie Massimino for his 19 years of service. On Oct. 31, the students, almost 5,000 of them, showed a spirit not seen in our four years at the University.

For the basketball program, Midnight Madness was a great step in bridging the gap between the team and the University community that widened greatly in Massimino's last years. New Head Coach Steve Lappas, his staff and now, officially, his players were as enthusiastic as their most ardent supporters. For one of the few times in a while, the basketball team felt like ours. The coaches and players wanted to be there.

Thanks to Villanova athletics, Student Government and the Student Programming Council, Midnight Madness was an overwhelming success.

More importantly, Midnight Madness provided a glimpse of how much enthusiasm and energy exists at Villanova. Students, alumni and faculty attended. Everyone left with a feeling of "Madness."

A new era began Oct. 31, hopefully for both the team and the student body. If Midnight Madness is any indication, there will be, as Lappas pointed out, another national championship banner hanging from the duPont Pavilion rafters sometime very soon.

Trickle-down economics don't work

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to Mat Toennissen's commentary, "Trickle down economics work well" (Oct. 30 issue). I am not an economics major, nor do I claim to have any expertise in financial analysis. But I do know that statistics are not always accurate reflections of reality. In fact, as that wise someone once said, "there are three kinds of lies — lies, damn lies and statistics." The "facts" and numbers Mr. Toennissen presents describe only a limited portion of reality. I would like to call the readers of the Villanovan to consider whether that view of reality is one we should accept or even allow.

> I am not an economics major, nor do I claim to have any expertise in financial analysis. But I do know that statistics are not always accurate reflections of reality.

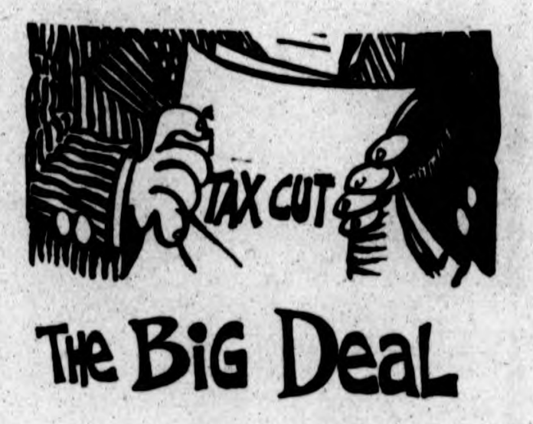
If it is incorrect to say that, during the reign of Ronald Reagan and George Bush, "the rich got richer and the poor got poorer," then how can we describe what has been happening since 1980? The rich stayed as rich and the poor stayed as poor? That's nothing to be proud of. Mr. Toennissen himself cites that, in the past 10 years, "non-cash spending on the poor ... climbed from $18 billion in 1980 to $139 billion in 1990." Maybe the recipients of this "non-cash" are in dire need of more help because they are in an economic system that ignores them.

I think it is also important to look at the language Mr. Toennissen uses: "spending on the poor." We spend money on shoes, we spend money on beer. But money "spent on the poor" is money that helps people, with names and faces and dreams, those who eat and pay rent. The language and tone of Mr. Toennissen's commentary leads the reader to believe that money "spent on poor" is money ill spent. His paternalistic attitude toward "the poor" reminds me of the European imperialism of the 1700s. Treating an entire and alarmingly large portion of a democratic society as just a problem to throw money at is dehumanizing and dangerous.

Another problem I have with Mr. Toennissen's article is the dispute over the definition of "poor." "The official designation of 'poor' in this country is misleading." What is misleading about hunger? What is misleading about homelessness? Would all those "millionaires created during the 1980s" be able — or willing even — to live on $24,000 a year, as a single parent, most likely a woman, feeding, clothing, educating and keeping healthy at least four children while paying rent on a structure hardly worthy of the title "home?" Sure, $24,000 sounds like a lot of money to college students who haven't been faced with monthly bills and emergency hospitalizations. In the world beyond Villanova, however, people don't spend their money on clothes and entertainment alone.

Mr. Toennissen seems to fear that "we have now made it wrong for people to become rich." Well, I'm afraid that we, as a nation, have now made it acceptable that people are so poor that they die from their poverty. He says it is time for the "liberal media to stop lying and face the truth." Maybe it is time for people to stop glossing over the problem and face reality. Saying that poverty is not so bad in the United States is neither reality nor responsibility. Poverty still exists.



I am not "America bashing," as Mr. Bush is fond of accusing Mr. Clinton of doing. But in a country that has many noble ideals — chief among them democracy, equality for everyone — poverty is the most glaring of hypocrisies. Anyone who has been to Washington, D.C., should be ashamed to see street people begging in front of the White House. Do we need any other evidence to realize that trickle down economics did not trickle down to the people who need it most?

There are people in this country who desperately need our help to keep their babies from dying. There are people who need our help to keep their children warm and dry in a house, even if they have to share their living room with two other families as well as mice, rats and roaches. This is poverty. Unfortunately, it is as American as baseball. We can't afford to ignore it, neither should our conscience allow us.

Female athlete says women's sports shortchanged

By CIARA PERROTTI

I am writing in response to the front-page article "'Nova sports review gender equity" (Oct. 30 issue), in order to publicly address Dr. Ted Aceto, director of our Athletic Department, about his statements on gender equity that I consider ignorant and chauvinistic.

Aceto was quoted as saying, "Both men's and women's teams raise money, but the women are not as aggressive." In my opinion, Dr. Aceto, you should be ashamed.

Try this for not aggressive: This summer the women's lacrosse team spent three 12-hour days in a row at the King of Prussia mall working for CBS sports. The week of Halloween, the women's lacrosse team put 120 hard-working hours aggressively preparing, packaging and delivering 540 Halloween bags to students on campus. Presently, we are selling 760 tee-shirts and 3,000 raffle tickets. We also have fought and struggled to obtain the right to clean up the stadium (which raises $400 per time) three times, compared to the men's baseball team's right to clean up after all 13 basketball games in the past.

The women's lacrosse team has done all of this and much more to help raise money for a budget that is so pathetic that we cannot even afford basic essentials such as balls, sticks, mouth guards, cleats, stick bags, practice uniforms and transportation.

Ironically, Dr. Aceto is considering adding two more women's sports instead of dropping two men's sports to create a balance. How will that be financed when we cannot even properly finance the sports we have now?

Aceto also stated that gender equity is a separate issue [from Title IX of the Equal Education Amendment Act of 1972] because it is not a regulation but a proposal that may be enacted. Dr. Aceto, does equality for women have to be a regulation before it is enforced? If so, I am insulted by your theory, and I find it completely degrading and unfair. A man of your position shold know better.

Dr. Aceto also notes that the Athletic Department is working to improve the unsatisfactory conditions with the funds that are available, and cites the example that the women's basketball team recently moved to its own locker room in duPont Pavilion. Congratulations, girls, but what about the many women's teams who do not have even a locker room at all? This includes soccer, field hockey, lacrosse and track. Isn't moving the women's basketball team's locker room like giving a tax break to the rich?

Aceto refers to the travel allowance by saying that the division of the sport is taken into account when determining the amount of funding. Well, I play a Division I sport and can recall driving myself to at least three games in the past. Last winter, when the men's basketball team flew to Hawaii for free, I paid $500 of my own money to drive to Florida in an over-crowded van. I also find it ironic that the school can find the money to fly the football team to Massachusetts, and we cannot afford to drive there.

Is this the Athletic Department's idea of equity for men and women — that I not only have to pay full tuition at Villanova, but I also have added expenses because I choose to play a sport and represent my university?

Furthermore, Dr. Aceto and the task force that was to review gender equity must have skipped over the section that states there should be equal number of coaches. At Villanova, men's sports have 12 full-time coaches and six part-time coaches. Not to mention that seven of the full-time coaches instruct football, a sport that costs this University $1.8 million per year. In areas of recruitment and scholarships, women's lacrosse not only lacks the funds for any types of scholarships but does not have enough money to simply recruit.

Dr. Aceto, is there really equality in men's and women's athletics at Villanova University? If so, then why haven't I, as a captain of a Division I sport, ever met you?

In case you haven't noticed there is more to Villanova's athletics than football and basketball. Why don't you come to a women's lacrosse game sometime?

Ciara Perrotti is a senior tri-captain of women's lacrosse.

Cartoon disrespectful

To the Editor:

Pictures are worth a thousand words. That is the advantage a cartoonist has over an editorial writer. I offer this criticism of last week's cartoon handling the demise of a local "watering hole." The picture included three tombstones, two for revered Augustinians whose names, "Falvey" and "Bartley," were synonymous with sacrifice, growth of the University and esteem large enough to insure their names for posterity through two buildings. Both are household names to Villanova students, alumnae and alumni.

To be sure, memories of "Barleycorn" will enjoy easy associations with that of good friendships forged over student years, but there is a vast difference in representing two men who have become themselves an institution of sorts and a bar which for economic reasons has downed its last drop. Cemeteries are not just memory lanes. They elicit respect and even a yearning for the eternal best yet to come for each of us.

Yes, I was at Midnight Madness. As a female basketball player at 'Nova, I thought the Lady Cats must get involved next year and receive the same support the guys do.

I am interested in the season. It should be interesting to see if Steve Lappas can keep up the tradition of Villanova basketball while speeding up the pace of an otherwise slow Massimino team.

Yes, I attended Midnight Madness. I was really surprised at the turnout, especially because so many other things were going on at the same time. It was great to see so much support for the basketball team. I hope they have a good season.

Student says, "Don't say VillaNOva, say VillaYESva"

By PETE SHAUGER

Many Villanova students, myself included, often claim to get the short end of the stick when it comes to special treatment. The biggest complaints students usually have regard the privileges of the basketball and football teams. Sure, most sports teams have certain privileges, such as free books and free tuition (not to mention the most prized privilege of cutting in line), but they are not the only student organizations that offer incentives. The only difference is that they get more publicity. I once had this negative misconception of Villanova organizations, and I feel it is my duty as a journalist and fellow student to publicize other organizations that have incentives — incentives which may very well be more valuable than that of cutting in line.

Fraternities, more commonly known for their reputations as mere social organizations, have the power to sponsor the ever popular and respectable blood drives. There's hardly a more honorable and downright fun way to spend an afternoon. First there are the forms you get to fill out. "Prior to 1977, have you ever had sex with a bisexual male cannibal who likes drinks with little umbrellas in them, drives a '72 Buick Skylark and goes by the name of Todd? If yes, you are not eligible to give blood at this time." Seeing as I was only five in 1977, I checked off "No."

> I feel it is my duty as a journalist and fellow student to publicize other organizations that have incentives.

You can race with your friends to see who can squeeze out the most blood. You have to be careful though, because if you squeeze too hard, blood might squirt out everywhere.

One gag that always gets 'em: hold your breath until the color on your face grabs the attention of the nurse. Boy, will she laugh when she finds out you're only joking.

Something that I confess was not my own idea: after you give blood, you don't have to drink nearly as much alcohol to get intoxicated.

And of course, after you've given your blood, you can eat as many doughnuts as you like. Sometimes, when I'm feeling a little famished and I notice there is a blood drive going on, I go inside for a worthwhile exchange of lifesaving blood for lifesaving doughnuts.

But if it's power you are interested in, Special Olympics may be up your alley. Students with potential leadership qualities are given walkie talkies. But this is not a frivolous gesture. The purpose of the walkie talkie is to train students how to look important; how to feel important; how to be important. Think back to your childhood when you got your first walkie talkie set. Remember how important it made you feel. But then you were climbing trees and the walkie talkies fell and broke. You weren't old enough to bear the responsibility, but maybe you are old enough now.

And if you can handle the walkie talkies, you may be eligible to sign up for the even more elite "Golf Cart Driver" internship. If there is one point that I have always tried to stress with great sobriety and solemnity to all my friends — CHICKS LOVE GOLF CARTS.

Or maybe you are into material gains. The entertainment section of the Villanovan is the perfect opportunity. All you have to do is review a movie, book or CD, and then you get paid back for the expenses. And usually there are enough writers that you never have to review something you are not interested in. And afterwards, in the case of the book or CD, you get to keep it. One CD per issue — 20 issues a year — you do the math. Second thought, I'll do the math for you — that's about $250 in CDs that you can save by working for the paper. Heck, even I reviewed a CD this year. Actually, it was sent to the office for free, but I did get to keep it. I mean, how many bad music reviews have you read in the Villanovan? Maybe a bad book or movie or play review because they are considerably cheaper. You think these students really want to be critics for the rest of their lives?

So before you go around badmouthing this University saying Villanova never gave you anything (doughnuts, power, CDs) maybe you just haven't been looking in the right places. And when you do find what you are looking for (presumably doughnuts, power, CDs) maybe your negative attitude will stop, and instead of calling it VillaNOva, you'll call it VillaYESva.

Real people talk real issues

When this is all over, I'm going to miss Marisa Hall. What the heck, I'm going to miss Denton Walthall and Martha MacCormack and Don Jackson and John Donovan.

I'm going to miss the entire cast of voters who did their political jury duty during the debate marathon. The folks who asked the candidates those questions in Virginia. The folks who were enlisted on focus groups for PBS and CNN. The ones who were drafted as token undecideds for ABC or NBC.
